Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for Southend-on-Sea district council the number of residential hereditaments rated at less than £100 a year, by steps of £100 to £500, from £500 to £1,000 and over £1,000, together with the poundage in the current financial year.

Mr. Lilley: The poundage is £2·535. But the information about rateable values could not be produced without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report, the number of residential properties in Grimsby with a rateable value not exceeding £200 per annum, and the number in excess of that amount.

Mr. Lilley: This information could not be produced without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Carriers (Documentation)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who is responsible for checking at the point of entry that a carrier has the correct documentation.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 26 February 1990]: Customs and Excise is responsible for checking all documents relating to the customs clearance of imported goods. It is not responsible for checking other documents.

PRIME MINISTER

Clockwork Orange Project

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to consult (a) General Sir Frank King, General Officer Commanding and (b) Sir Peter Leng, Commander of Army Land Forces, Northern Ireland, 1973-75 to establish their view of events surrounding the Clockwork Orange project.

The Prime Minister: No. Both General Sir Frank King and General Sir Peter Leng have made it clear that they do not recall any project specifically named Clockwork Orange, nor any project aimed at denigrating Members of Parliament.

South Africa

Q16. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the current political situation in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: President de Klerk has taken fundamental decisions which have gone further in the direction of ending apartheid than those taken by any previous Government. The way is open to peaceful negotiations with the ANC and with those who represent other groupings in South Africa to work out a new democratic constitution, which, as President de Klerk has said, must have the support of the majority of South Africans.

Q59. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has held recent discussions with (a) Chancellor Kohl and (b) other European Community state leaders concerning current relations between the nations of the European Community and the Republic of South Africa and the possibility of Community aid for political parties in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: I last discussed South Africa with my European Community colleagues at the Strasbourg European Council on 8-9 December 1989.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the question of aid to political parties in South Africa with his Community colleagues in Dublin on 20 February. They welcomed this suggestion and agreed to consider how such a programme might be organised.

Q76. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to South Africa.

The Prime Minister: I have no present plans to do so.

Homelessness

Q57. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make official visits to London's cardboard city and to people living in similar circumstances in Manchester and other major cities.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 13 February 1990 (Official Report, column 136).

Transport

Q91. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on investment in transport infrastructure.

The Prime Minister: I have received representations on a wide range of issues concerning investment in transport infrastructure.

Textiles

Q140. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a textile factory.

The Prime Minister: I visit textile factories from time to time and very much like the woollen products of Yorkshire mills.

Council of Europe

Q155. Sir John Hunt: To ask the Prime Minister if she plans any meeting with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have no present plans for such a meeting. But I pay tribute to the most important role the Council of Europe is playing in the development of democracy in Europe.

Engagements

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Perrier

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quality tests have taken place since 1 December 1989 on Perrier water for consumer protection; and on what dates they took place.

Mr. Maclean: Following the discovery of traces of benzene in Perrier water in the United States of America tests on United Kingdom supplies were undertaken on behalf of the Food Safety Directorate between 12 and 15 February. The results were made available in the form of news release 67/90 on 15 February. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Enforcement of the Natural Mineral Waters Regulations 1985 is the responsibility of local authorities. In addition the responsible authority in the water's country of origin is required to carry out periodic checks to ensure continued compliance with the terms of the original regulations of the water under the directive by that authority. Information on any quality tests undertaken by that authority is not required to be circulated.

Meat Exports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations exist in other European Community member states on the importation of British meat and bone meal.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is as follows:

France
Currently ban imports of British meat and bone meal;
Italy
Require confirmation that the meat and bone meal does not originate from bovines, ovines or caprines;
Netherlands
Prohibit the feeding to ruminants of meat and bone meal derived from ruminants; and West Germany
Application must be made to the appropriate land authority for an import permit. This will state the particular certification which is required in each case. The Ministry is unaware that any such application has been made or of the certification required.

Covent Garden

Miss Hoey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a copy of the feasibility study commissioned from Binder Hamlyn in February 1989 on the new Covent Garden market in the Library.

Mr. Curry: I expect to be able to place a summary of the report in the Library of the House within the next few days.

Fisheries Research

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any fisheries research vessels are leased or hired to other bodies or nations.

Mr. Curry: None of the Ministry's fisheries research vessels has been leased or hired to other bodies or nations.

ENERGY

North Sea (Oil and Gas)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated output of oil and gas from the North sea in the next decade; and what is the estimated consumption of oil and gas in the next decade.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Many factors will influence output and demand for oil and gas over such a long period. Of particular importance will be the extent to which new fields are found and brought into production. With exploration and drilling activity likely to reach an all time record for the United Kingdom this year, I am confident that the United Kingdom will become fully self-sufficient in gas and remain a net oil exporter well into the 1990s.

Energy Conservation

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been his Department's budget for energy conservation for each year since 1979, in constant prices.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Expenditure by my Department on energy efficiency programmes since 1979 has been as follows (1989 prices in brackets):

£ million

	Expenditure	1989 prices
1979-80	2·4	(5·0)
1980-81	4·5	(7·8)
1981-82	6·9	(10·7)
1982-83	9·4	(13·6)
1983-84	11·4	(15·5)
1984-85	17·5	(22·8)
1985-86	22·5	(27·9)
1986-87	24·5	(29·2)
1987-88	18·6	(21·2)
1988-89	18·5	(19·8)
1989-90[1]	15·0	(15·0)

[1] Estimated.

Wind Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report number EERU 060, a survey of the wind energy resource of Cornwall, to examine the influence of settlement patterns and topography on optimum wind turbine size and disposition, by Dr. Geoffrey Williams, published in July 1989 by the energy and environment research unit of the Open university, Milton Keynes.

Mr. Wakeham: Yes.

Alternative Energy (Video)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the video and transcript of the Public Eye programme "The nuclear obsession—time for an energy alternative" broadcast on 16 February.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Power Station Emissions

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what reports he has received concerning the relative merits of different desulphurisation methods for power station emissions; and what consideration he has given to the comparative requirements of limestone and subsequent output and disposal of gypsum.

Mr. Baldry: I am aware of a number of reports about particular methods of power station flue gas desulphurisation. It is for the electricity supply industry to consider the appropriate choice of technology for desulphurisation; and that will be subject to normal planning and environmental requirements.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of the instances in which long periods were being worked on offshore installations and of other reasons leading to the safety notice of 10 January; if he will give details of what steps are being taken to enforce this safety notice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Details of long hours being worked offshore were received from offshore workers, who have asked to remain anonymous. As the hon. Member is aware, my safety directorate has undertaken to guarantee anonymity whenever requested. Approaches have also been made to my safety directorate by safety representatives and by a union.

Safety notices are non-statutory documents. However, careful consideration will be given to taking action under section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 in any instance where it is found that the health or safety of any offshore worker is affected by unreasonably long hours being worked.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nepal

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the sentencing in Kathmandu of six persons for a term of six months' imprisonment because of conversion to Christianity.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are making inquiries in Kathmandu about reports of these sentences. My noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office discussed the treatment of Christians in Nepal with both the Nepalese Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister during his visit to Kathmandu last week.

Romania

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial aid the Government have provided to Romania since the overthrow of President Ceaucescu; and what financial aid the Government will supply to Romania over the next two months.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the aid provided to Romania by the International Red Cross since the overthrow of President Ceaucescu.

Mr. Sainsbury: After the overthrow of the Ceaucescu regime the International Red Cross provided approximately 9,000 tonnes of relief goods, (food, clothing and medical supplies) with an estimated value of over £10 million. This assistance was provided by 29 different national Red Cross societies. The United Kingdom contribution being approximately £300,000. The IRC is now developing programmes of assistance to targeted groups including rural dispensaries, orphanages, homes for the elderly and homes for the handicapped.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what medical supplies, food, clothing and other non-financial aid the United Kingdom Government have provided to Romania since the overthrow of President Ceaucescu; and what medical supplies, food, clothing and other non-financial aid the Government will supply to Romania over the next two months.

Mr. Sainsbury: We donated a consignment of 1·8 tonnes of medical supplies on 24 December and several items of medical equipment since then, including 1 million disposable syringes worth £40,000. Five victims of the December fighting are in the United Kingdom for major surgery, at a cost yet to be determined. A further £53,000 has been made available to finance a project by Marie Stopes International to improve birth control services in Romania. We are contributing about £5·8 million to the food aid and medical supplies packages sent, or so far agreed, by the EC. Further funds, as yet to be determined, will be made available over the next two months for medical supplies.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government have taken to co-ordinate the efforts of voluntary agencies, individuals and others involved in providing aid to Romania since the overthrow of President Ceaucescu.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received many offers of help for Romania from individuals and organisations and have taken them into account in providing official relief assistance. We are also in close touch with the British Red Cross, which is co-ordinating many private offers of help.

Burma

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Burmese Government about their commitment to free and fair elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Burmese military Government have disregarded basic human and political rights since they seized power in September 1988. We have made clear our opposition to their oppressive policies.

Most recently, on 14 February, the latest in a long series of demarches by the Twelve to the Burmese authorities called for the elections planned for May to be open to all candidates. In spite of these and other international protests, hundreds of opposition politicians have been arrested since July 1989. They have included Aung San Suu Kyi, the most popular opposition leader, who, on 17 February, was finally debarred from standing in the elections.

It now seems unlikely that the elections can be regarded by the international community as anything other than a sham. We will nevertheless continue to do what we can to encourage the regime, both directly and through the continuing western aid boycott, to hold genuinely democratic elections.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Court Lighting

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration he has given to the health and safety implications of flicker light in the courts.

The Attorney-General: Lighting in courts is designed to conform to the standards and codes of practice current at the time of installation.

Professional advice to the Lord Chancellor's Department indicates that there is no firm evidence that fluorescent lighting constitutes a health and safety risk. If there were evidence that any particular mode of lighting constituted a risk to health or safety, the standards would be amended to eliminate such risk.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Amos: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions there have been of people publicly calling for the death of Salman Rushdie; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No prosecutions have been instituted for incitement to murder or threats to kill, due to a lack of sufficient evidence to justify the institution of criminal proceedings. However, where demonstrations which have included people publicly calling for the death of Salman Rushdie have led to instances of public disorder, prosecutions have followed. The director regards as a matter of extreme gravity any conduct on the part of any person within this jurisdiction which does amount to the offence of incitement to murder. It will remain his policy, with my full agreement, to deal accordingly with evidence establishing such conduct that may be placed before him.

SCOTLAND

Woodlands

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer on 15 January, Official Report, column 68, what consideration he has given to the report by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds on "Native Pinewoods in Scotland: A Review 1957-1987", and its assessment of the changes in the area of native pinewoods.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission has studied this report, including its assessment of the changes in the area of native pinewoods.

The report proved useful in the preparation of the "Guidelines for the Management of Native Pinewoods" published by the commission last December.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of the Black Wood of Rannoch has been cleared of previously underplanted alien conifers in the last 12 months; what area has been identified for such treatment in the Forestry Commission's conservation plan for this site; and what area will be restored in this manner in the next 12 months.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1990]: Spruce and other non-native species have been planted on 169 hectares of formerly open ground in the Black Wood of Rannoch, mostly adjacent to the main wood. Under the Forestry Commission's conservation plan for the wood all these areas will be cleared over a period of years; 8 hectares have been cleared so far—3 in the past 12 months—and 20 hectares are scheduled for clearance in the next 12 months.

Water Supplies

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the total Government expenditure has been on water supplies in Scotland in the last, and current, financial years; and what these sums represent per head of population.

Mr. Rifkind: Expenditure on water supplies in Scotland is met by regional and islands councils, as the water authorities, and paid for by consumers. Grant payments from central Government, made under the Rural Water Supplies and Sewerage Acts 1944-70 and the Industrial Development Act 1982, for water supplies in 1988-89 amounted to £4·420 million (£0·87 per head); in 1989-90 grant payments to January 1990 were £4·155 million (£0·82 per head).

Sports Council

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much funding has been given by his Department for the Scottish Sports Council in each of the past 12 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Grant aid to the Scottish Sports Council since 1979-80 has been as follows:

Year	Grant-in-Aid £
1979-80	2,829,000
1980-81	3,240,000
1981-82	3,510,000
1982-83	4,088,907
1983-84	3,887,000
1984-85	4,149,000
1985-86	4,340,000
1986-87	4,585,000
1987-88	4,698,000
1988-89	[1]5,799,000
1989-90	5,150,000
1990-91	5,517,000

Electricity

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if a date has been set for the flotation of the Scottish electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We have considered carefully the options for floating the Scottish electricity companies in 1990 and 1991. We have concluded that the best time to float Scottish Power plc and Scottish Hydro-Electric plc will, subject to market conditions, be in May or June of 1991. The Scottish successor companies will begin operating on 31 March 1990, when they inherit the assets and liabilities of the two Scottish electricity boards. The Scottish nuclear company will remain in the public sector.

The Government's decision on flotation timing will enable the Scottish companies to present to investors a satisfactory track record of successful performance following the withdrawal of the nuclear element from the privatisation programme. It will also give them an opportunity to firm up arrangements before privatisation to export Scottish electricity to England and Wales. However, the decision will not prevent two of Scotland's largest plcs from competing for new business and operating on a fully commercial basis while they remain in Government hands.

I believe that this is the right decision for Scotland. The privatisation of Scottish electricity will be of tremendous significance to the Scottish economy, and we are anxious that there should be sufficient time to get it right. We considered the possibility of a much earlier flotation date but decided that this would not be wise. The new plcs will, following this decision, have a full opportunity to consolidate the new industry structure and to make their mark with the public, the financial community and with electricity customers both north and south of the border in advance of their flotation.

Waste Disposal

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish as a matter of urgency a ministerial working party which represents all interested parties and receives evidence on the widest possible basis, charged with recommending a national waste disposal policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Part II of the Environmental Protection Bill, which is currently before the House of Commons, contains provisions which will strengthen and enhance the existing legislation. It would be premature to consider setting up any such working party.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list any statutory duties his Department has to inspect landfill waste sites.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Inspection of landfill waste sites is for the district and islands councils in Scotland, in their capacity as waste regulatory authorities. Although the hazardous waste inspectorate does not have a statutory duty to inspect landfill waste sites, it may visit landfill waste sites in discharging its remit to examine the management of hazardous waste and to advise local authorities on their duties under part I of the Control of Pollution Act.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake a new national survey of waste tips in Scotland; if he will take steps to establish a register of old waste dumps; and what action he is taking to inform river purification boards of the location of waste dumps which pose a risk of contamination to drinking water supplies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In February 1988 district and islands councils in Scotland were asked to identify all waste disposal sites which had received biodegradable waste. The hazardous waste inspectorate urged authorities to monitor these sites to establish what degree of risk exists, if any, and to take appropriate remedial action. A follow-up survey is planned later this year to assess what progress has been made in Scotland.

The recent report of the House of Commons Environment Committee has recommended that a register of contaminated land be set up for England and Wales, a matter which we will consider when assessing the implications of the report for Scotland.

Little of Scotland's drinking water supply is taken from groundwater. River purification boards have been statutory consultees for all waste disposal developments since 1978.

Building Sites

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the involvement of the hazardous waste inspectorate in the events at Morriston Park building site in Cambuslang.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The hazardous waste inspectorate's involvement at Morriston Park has been to provide independent advice to ensure that the developers and the district council were aware of the steps which should be taken to establish reliable information about the presence or otherwise of landfill gas at the site.

This advice was based on the Government's technical memorandum on the monitoring and control of landfill gas, namely waste management paper No. 27.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the powers district councils have to compel house builders to make safe sites they propose to build on.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Part G of the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1981-87 contains provisions governing the preparation of sites under which matter harmful to health must be removed from the site of any building intended for human use and habitation and from the ground in the vicinity of the building. The regulations are enforced by the relevant local authority, usually the district council. Under section 6 of the Building (Scotland) Act 1959 a warrant must be obtained from the local authority before work starts; under section 9(5) of the Act it is an offence for any person to occupy or use a building, constructed by virtue of such a warrant, before a certificate of completion is issued.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what planning regulations there are setting out procedures to be carried out in investigating whether methane gas is present on a building site before building commences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no planning regulations setting out procedures for an investigation for the presence of methane gas on a building site before building commences. The Scottish Development Department issued a planning advice note (No. 33) in 1988 on the development of contaminated land which advised developers and local authorities on the need to identify and investigate land previously used for industrial and waste disposal purposes in order to assess the risks in developing such land.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he has to compel house builders to make safe sites they propose to build on.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The construction of new houses must be carried out in accordance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1981-87, which include provisions governing the preparation of sites. Enforcement of the regulations is the responsibility of the relevant local authority under powers contained in the Building (Scotland) Act 1959.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he has to compel house builders to remedy any safety risk discovered after building is completed on a site, and houses have been sold.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Under section 13 of the Building (Scotland) Act 1959, however, local authorities have powers to take action in respect of buildings found to be dangerous.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the construction of ships at the Scott Lithgow yard on the lower Clyde would infringe any agreement made with the European Commission.

Mr. Lang: No.

Council of Environment Ministers

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates of meetings of the Council of Environment Ministers attended by him or members of his ministerial team in the past 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave him on 24 January 1990, Official Report, column 728. In the period concerned, meetings of the Environment Council have been attended by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment or another Minister from the Department of the Environment who has represented the interests of the United Kingdom as a whole.

Radiation and Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the latest number of recorded leukaemia cases in (a) Dunoon and the Cowal area and in (b) the rest of Argyle and Bute and (c) the rest of Scotland;

(2) whether he has any plans to refer cases of cancer among the population around Holy Loch to the committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment;

(3) whether his Department has commissioned any studies or intends to commission any studies into whether there is any link between the United States Navy's operations in Holy Loch and leukaemia clusters among children in the area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Up-to-date information on the number of leukaemia cases in the detail sought is not readily available. A study, which compared leukaemia incidence in the vicinity of Holy Loch over three time periods between 1968 and 1984 with the Scottish average, showed a raised incidence in only one of the periods studied.

The committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment, following its study at Dounreay, is currently assessing the evidence relating to leukaemia incidence around all the other Scottish nuclear sites and Scotland as a whole. It is not considered necessary, therefore, to commission any separate studies at this time.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the Scottish commentary on public expenditure.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department is issuing today "Public Expenditure to 1992-93: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme". I have, as in previous years, arranged for a copy to be sent to each Scottish Member. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Postgraduate Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students have received assistance under the postgraduate students allowance scheme in every year since 1979.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 December 1989]: This information is not readily available prior to session 1986-87 and figures from that date are as follows:

Session	Number
1987-88	3,050
1988-89	2,673
[1]1989-90	2,931

New Towns (Employment)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost and how many gained in each of the past five years in the Scottish new towns.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 February 1990]: The tables show the total employment and net employment change in each of the Scottish new towns for each of the past five years. The information is taken from annual employment surveys undertaken by each new town. Although new town annual reports give some information on job gains and losses, this is not available on a consistent or comprehensive basis.

Local Income Tax

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the estimated local income tax rates required to replace the gross income, including rebates, raised from the community charge in each region and district authority on the basis of current expenditure in 1989-90 and planned expenditure in 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1990]: Approximate rates of local income tax required to replace the budgeted income from the community charge in 1989-90 are given in the table. Information on the 1990-91 budgets is not yet available.

Notes:

1. The local income tax rate for Scotland has been estimated for 1989-90 by dividing the total amount to be raised from the community charge (including the water charge) by an estimate of the yield of 1p on the basic rate of income tax for Scotland.

2. The income tax rates by authority assume resource equalisation ie that the yield of 1p in the £ is the same per adult in all areas.

HEALTH

HIV

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to him about the survivability of HIV in (a) dechlorinated tapwater, (b) settled raw sewage and (c) seawater.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Studies on the survival of HIV in dechlorinated tap water, settled raw sewage and sea water have been carried out at the water research centre and published in "Water Science Technology", volume 21, pages 55 to 59, 1989, copies of which are available in the Library. The concentration of HIV added to samples of water declined rapidly in the first four days, a tenfold decline occurring after an average 1·8 days in dechlorinated tap water, 2·9 days in settled raw sewage and 1·6 days in sea water. The authors conclude that it is extremely unlikely that HIV poses any threat to disinfected water supplies.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals he has to cut waiting lists for operations within the National Health Service in the Greater Manchester area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that the North Western regional health authority has provisionally identified up to £1·25 million from its £1·9 million waiting list fund allocation in 1990-91 for the 12 health districts covering the Greater Manchester area. Details are still being discussed with districts, but this funding should enable 8,000 patients to be treated from the waiting lists. This is in addition to the £4·9 million allocated to these districts from the fund in the three years to 31 March 1990.

A management team, led by Mr. John Yates of Inter-Authority Comparisons and Consultancy, is examining waiting lists in South Manchester (general surgery and plastic surgery) and Oldham (general surgery). If the team recommends additional funding, allocations will be made in 1990-91 from the £12 million reserved for problem waiting lists.

In addition, we have approved and funded new consultant posts in Central Manchester (ophthalmology) and Bolton (trauma and orthopaedics) from the 100 new consultant posts targeted at districts with long waiting lists.

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale waiting lists as between differing specialties; and what are the comparable figures for five years ago.

Mr Freeman: The information requested is given in the table:

In-patient waiting list, Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale District Health Authority, as at 31 March, 1984 and 1989

An additional consultant ophthalmologist has been employed in the Burnley area and the waiting list figure is now reducing.

Luton and Dunstable Hospital

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the North West Thames regional health authority proposes to begin the construction of the planned clinical block and the education centre at the Luton and Dunstable hospital;

(2) whether the North West Thames regional health authority has made any decision to defer the projected construction of a clinical block and an education centre at the Luton and Dunstable hospital.

Mr. Freeman: North West Thames regional health authority recently reviewed its capital programme due to the decline in residential land sales and the rise in building costs. I understand that both schemes are scheduled to start on site on 1 April 1992.

St. Helens and Knowsley Health District

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many directly managed National Health Service beds have been closed within St. Helens and Knowsley within the last three years; what proportion of these beds have been replaced; by whom they are managed; and whether they are still located within the boundary of the health district.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. The overall number of hospital beds available within the St. Helens and Knowsley health authority for the last three years is as follows:

Average daily available beds

Year	Number
1986	2,305
1987-88	2,073
1988-89	1,809

Source:
1987-88 onward KH03 return

During this period the number of in-patient cases treated in the district rose from 32,965 to 35,346 and the number of day cases from 2,039 to 2,110. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of St. Helens and Knowsley health authority for more detailed information.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a breakdown of the number of prescriptions issued for each individual benzodiazepine by community pharmacists during (a) 1986, (b) 1987 and (c) 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Number of Prescriptions 1986-88 (millions)

Benzodiazepines	Great Britain 1986	1987	1988
Temazepam	7·2	7·8	7·7
Nitrazepam	5·5	5·2	4·6
Diazepam	5·2	5·1	4·5
Triazolam	2·0	2·2	2·2
Lorazepam	3·1	2·9	2·1
Chlordiazepoxide	1·1	1·0	0·9
Oxazepam	0·8	0·8	0·6
Lormetazepam	0·2	0·2	0·2
Loprazolam	0·1	0·1	0·2
Clonazepam	0·1	0·1	0·1
Totals	25·3	25·5	23·2

These estimates are based on a sample of prescriptions of approximately one in 200 in England and Wales and one in 100 in Scotland which were dispensed by chemists and appliance contractors.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to family practitioner committees and health authorities to ensure that doctors do not prescribe benzodiazepines for longer periods than those recommended by the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The prescribing of these drugs and the management of patients taking them are professional matters. Doctors already have advice about the use of benzodiazepines from the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Royal Colleges of Physicians, Psychiatrists and General Practitioners, the British Medical Association and the British National Formulary. We support that advice.

Voluntary Organisations

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the awards given to voluntary organisations under section 64 procedure for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: For 1988-89 I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) on 30 June 1989 at columns 571-74. The full list of awards in 1989-90 will be published after the financial year has ended.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure he has for the number of units of blood held by the National Blood Transfusion Service; and what was the figure for (a) one year ago, (b) two years ago and (c) five years ago.

Mr. Freeman: According to the national directorate of the Blood Transfusion Service, the average daily stock of blood held by the transfusion service in 1989 was 19,800 units. This was the first year in which such a statistic has been collected.

Severn Trent Water

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer to the hon. and learned Member for Burton on 20 February, (1) what effective difference there is between the statutory and the non-statutory indemnity;

(2) what section of the statutory indemnity provided on 21 November 1989 for Severn Trent Water accepts liability for negligence.

Mr. Freeman: The statutory indemnity was issued under the terms of section 172 of the Water Act 1989 which permits my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to indemnify a water undertaker in respect of certain liabilities incurred by the undertaker only in connection with its increasing the fluoride content of any water it supplies.

The non-statutory indemnity was issued to cover liabilities incurred by the water undertaker in connection with the supply of fluoridated water to persons in its water region, or the exporting of this fluoridated water outside its water region, where the undertaker has not first increased the fluoride content.

The reasons for the issue of the non-statutory indemnity were fully explained in the minute which was laid before Parliament by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 23 November 1989. The non-statutory indemnity was issued on 22 December 1989 as no objection to the proposal to undertake this contingent liability was signified within the prescribed period.

Paragraph 2 of the statutory indemnity describes the terms of the indemnity given to Severn Trent Water.

Pendle Community Hospital

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimated opening date for the new Pendle community hospital.

Mr. Freeman: The latest estimated opening date for the new Pendle community hospital is September 1991.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received regarding extra funding to create more speech therapist posts in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations about various aspects of speech therapy services. It is for individual health authorities to determine the number of speech therapist posts to be provided in their area. In England, the number of speech therapists employed in the NHS increased by 80 per cent. between 1979 and 1988.

The funding of speech therapist posts in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Surgical Footwear

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost of prescribed surgical footwear; and what future plans he has to review the design of National Health Service surgical footwear.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The annual cost of surgical footwear prescribed through the hospital service is estimated at £20 million. The Department has recently issued for consultation with the industry a revised technical specification for orthopaedic footwear. North West Thames RHA, which acts as the centre of responsibility for the provision of surgical appliances and orthopaedic footwear, is responsible for approving manufacturers of orthotic appliances and surgical footwear.

Disabled People

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered disabled people in the Bolton area are currently living in their own homes, supported by the community care initiative; and what is the cost of providing such care to each individual.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold information showing where registered disabled people are living, or what level of funding is provided for their individual care needs.

Blood Products Imports

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount of blood products imported into the United Kingdom from overseas in each of the three years up to 1989, or the latest years for which figures are available; what was the cost of such imports; and which countries were the major suppliers.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the total amount of blood products imported into the United Kingdom is not held centrally.

Figures for 1986, 1987, 1988 (the most recent held) relating to the usage of factor VIII concentrate are given in the table:

	1986	1987	1988
United Kingdom usage of imported Factor VIII concentrate (millions of international units)	53·8	59·2	55·2

These are imported from other European countries and North America.

Shropshire Population

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total adult population of Shropshire has been during each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: OPCS estimates of the resident population of Shropshire aged 18 and over are as follows:

Mid year	Thousands
1984	288·3
1985	293·0
1986	296·6
1987	301·0
1988	305·7

Transplants

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has now appointed the members of the Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. I am pleased to announce that the chairman of the authority is Professor Martin Bobrow, Prince Philip professor of paediatric research at the united medical schools of Guy's and St. Thomas's. The other members are:

The Reverend Professor Gordon R. Dunstan, Professor Emeritus of Moral and Social Theology, King's College, London.
Dr. Philip A. Dyer, Head of Tissue Typing, St. Mary's Hospital, Manchester.
Mrs. Diana Eccles, Chairman, Ealing Health Authority.
Professor Mary G. McGeown, Queen's University, Belfast.
Sir Michael McNair-Wilson, Member of Parliament for Newbury.
Mr. Stuart G. Macpherson, Senior Lecturer in Surgery, University of Glasgow; Hon. Consultant Surgeon, Glasgow Health Board.
Dr. Netar P. Mallick, Senior Lecturer in Renal Disease, Manchester University; Physician in Charge, Department of Renal Medicine, Manchester Royal Infirmary.
Professor John R. Salaman, Professor of Transplant Surgery, University of Wales; Consultant Surgeon, Cardiff Royal Infirmary.
Miss Sally M. Taber, Director of Nursing, London Bridge Hospital.
Mr. James Wellbeloved, Director General, National Kidney Research Fund.
Mrs. Celia Wight, Senior Regional Transplant Co-ordinator, Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the distance learning training material for district health authority and local authority staff employed on registration and inspection duties under the Registered Homes Act 1984 is to be issued.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government attach great importance to achieving high standards of care in residential and nursing homes. I am therefore pleased to announce the issue today of a training package for inspection staff—"Making Sense of Inspection: Registered Homes Act 1984: Training Course for Registration and Inspection Staff". We hope that all authorities will make full use of it.

The aim of the training package is to:

Provide officers undertaking work under the Registered Homes Act 1984 with a comprehensive knowledge and information base;

Provide a general model of regulation work applicable to all types of registered facilities and client groupings;

Provide a guide to the practice of registration and inspection work;

Enable staff in health authorities and social services departments to understand each other's role as well as their own;

Point to the range of individuals and organisations with whom registration and inspection staff need to react and the skills necessary to carry out their work professionally.

The training package contributes towards carrying forward the proposals for achieving high standards of care in the community care White Paper "Caring for People". For example, it emphasises the importance of assessing and promoting the quality of care provided and the quality of life to residents. The package will complement the guidance to be produced on what to look for in a good home, as foreshadowed in chapter 5 of the White Paper.

While aimed at the registration of independent sector homes, the package will also be relevant to monitoring standards in local authorities' own homes.

Consultants

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the allocation of the remaining new consultant posts referred to in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today approved 65 posts for the remaining two years of this scheme, 35 for 1990-91 and 30 for 1991-92. This follows my announcement on 31 October last year of the first 35 posts for 1989-90.

As I said at that time, these new posts will help reduce waiting times in districts and specialties with particularly long waiting lists. They will also help reduce the working hours of junior doctors, and improve the career structure in the respective specialties.

As with the initial allocation, these posts were to be fully funded up to a maximum of £500,000 per year per post. This includes the cost of support staff, running costs and equipment. The average annual cost of these posts will be around £380,000, plus an average additional one-off starting cost of around £30,000.

The new posts are to be in: general surgery (12 posts); trauma and orthopaedic surgery (14); ear, nose and throat surgery (six); obstetrics and gynaecology (seven); opthalmology (nine); urology (eight); plastic surgery (five); and one post each in neurosurgery, accident and emergency, audiological medicine and paediatric surgery. They will be supported by appropriate numbers of medical, nursing, professional, technical and administrative staff.

Once all 100 new consultants are in post, the total annual cost of the scheme will be around £37 million. We expect the scheme to have a significant impact on some of the longest waiting times, and it will also provide a healthy boost to the expansion of the consultant grade.

Parliamentary Delegations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give details of occasions when he has refused to meet delegations of regional hon. Members of a particular party affiliation;

(2) if he will make a statement on his decision to refuse to meet a delegation of Labour Members from the north-west to discuss the role of the chairman of the North Western regional health authority and health care in this region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My ministerial colleagues and I very rarely decline to meet delegations of hon. Members. On the occasion referred to by the hon. Member I declined because there had already been four meetings between Ministers and delegations of hon. Members from all parties from the north-west to discuss health care in the region in the two months either side of the hon. Member's request and I did not believe that any more could usefully be added to what had already been discussed. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health had also met the hon. Member to discuss local health issues shortly after he wrote.

If the hon. Member wishes to bring a delegation of hon. Members to raise new points I or one of my colleagues would be willing to meet them.

Hospital Sales

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals, mental institutions and other assets under the control of his Department have been sold in the last five years; and what is the sum of money received from the purchasers.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not routinely hold information relating to the numbers of hospitals, mental institutions and other health authority assets sold. The total sum received from sales of assets in the last five years are as follows:

Years	£ million
1984-85	50,655
1985-86	85,167
1986-87	148,996
1987-88	200,873
1988-89	271,339

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the money from the sale of hospitals, mental institutions and other assets under the control of his Department has been accounted for; and what is the method in which it has been reinvested.

Mr. Freeman: The total sum received by each health authority from the sale of hospitals, mental institutions and other assets is recorded in its annual accounts and by the Department in the appropriation account for vote XIV, 1. The receipts which are treated as appropriations in aid allow additional capital spending over cash limit allocations in the year in which they are received.

NHS Reform

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the activity of a National Health Service trust hospital will be monitored to ensure that (a) it provides the appropriate staff and facilities for teaching medical students where appropriate, (b) it meets its commitments for such teaching and (c) it continues to treat the appropriate range of diseases required for undergraduate medical teaching.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National Health Service trusts will be directly accountable to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State. They will need to satisfy him not only that they have undertaken to provide adequate facilities for teaching medical students, but that these undertakings have been met. In addition, as agents for the distribution of the service increment for teaching, regional health authorities will consult universities and agree with NHS trusts what facilities should be provided for teaching medical students. They will monitor the performance of trusts against these agreements, taking into account the views of universities.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of any firms of outside consultants and the terms of their contracts employed by his Department in connection with the National Health Service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Service, supported by the Department of Health, is undertaking a wide range of projects designed to inform the implementation of the Government's proposals to improve services.

NHS Salaries

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount spent by the National Health Service on staff wages and salaries in each year since 1970 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Freeman: Information derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department for the financial years 1974-75 to 1988-89 is shown in the table:

Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities', those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals and of family practitioner committees (FPCs). (For the earliest years the annual accounts of predecessor authorities e.g. area health authorities which were abolished on 1 April 1982).

Notes:

1. The figures include the total pay costs of the health authorities' directly and indirectly employed staff (agency, etc) and include employers' superannuation and national insurance contributions. Similar costs forming part of the administrative expenses of FPCs are included but payments to doctors, pharmacists and others contracted with the NHS to provide family practitioner services are excluded. Comparatively small salaries and wages costs charged to capital accounts by health authorities are also excluded.
2. The figures for the earlier years have been expressed at 1988-89 prices by use of the Gross Domestic Product deflator.
3. From 1 April 1974 (NHS Reorganisation) the accounts of health authorities included income and expenditure in respect of health services transferred from local government authorities to the NHS. Therefore, information for the years prior to 1974-75 is not comparable to that for more recent years.

Cancer

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of cancer in the United Kingdom in 1960, 1969 and 1989; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of the possible causes.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 February 1990]: There are over 200 different types of cancer. There are many different causes, but in the present state of knowledge tobacco is by far the commonest. The other information requested is as follows:

Medicines Control Agency (Fees)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any assessment was made of the effects of the increase in Medicines Control Agency fees on research and development by smaller companies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 February 1990]: We would not expect the increased fees for product licences to act as a disincentive to research and development by smaller companies. It is believed that the charges for product licences represent only a small fraction of the total cost of bringing a novel medicine to the market place.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the recent increase in the licence fee charged by the Medicines Control Agency and what are the reasons for it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The latest amending regulations—the Medicines (Fees Relating to Medicinal Products for Human Use) Amendment Regulations 1990 SI 1990 No. 210—incorporate a 70 per cent. increase in all the licence fees charged by the Medicines Control Agency.

When the Medicines Control Agency was established it was made clear that it was to be fully funded by licence fees. Fee levels were originally set too low to achieve this objective and have had to be increased. A full review of charges will take place over the next few months.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on reducing the Medicines Control Agency's fees for smaller companies on products with a limited market.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 February 1990]: When the new fee structure for the MCA was established on 1 April 1989 we promised that there would be a full review of the fees charged during 1989-90. The review has had to be deferred but will take place in the next few months and any adjustment which we consider necessary will be incorporated in a further set of amending regulations to come into effect in June/July 1990.

However, in the meantime we have introduced concessions which give small companies additional time to pay fees.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reason the National Computing Centre gave for leaving employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The National Computing Centre is still operating under employment training.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number for employment training of (a) people in training, (b) agreed action plans at training agents, (c) referrals to training agents from employment service, (d) referrals from training agents to training managers, (e) starts at training managers, (f) trainees who completed more than the three months' training, (g) employment training allowances paid and (h) trainees who successfully completed action plans for each of the months September 1988 to December 1989 inclusive for Great Britain, the standard regions, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 February 1990]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Information is available only for the eight Training Agency regions in England and for Scotland and Wales. The latest figures of employment training filled places are given in table 1. Action plans agreed at training agents are given in table 2. Referrals from the employment service to employment training are given in table 3. Information as requested for referrals from training agents to training managers is not available. Starts with training managers are given at table 4. Information about the length of time spent on the programme by trainees who leave each month, about the number of allowances paid and about the number of trainees successfully completing action plans over the period is not available.

Youth Training

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at constant 1989-90 prices if he will give the spending on YTS and employment training for the past five years and the projected spending over the next three years.

Mr. Nicholls: The expenditure on YTS and employment training by the Employment Department Group Training Agency (and its predecessors, the Training Commission and the Manpower Services Commission) is as follows:

	YTS (£ million)	Employment Training (£ million)
1985-86	1,011·1	—
1986-87	1,041·0	—
1987-88	1,137·7	—
1988-89	1,063·4	454·8
1989-90	983·0	1,112·0
1990-91	836·0	1,151·9
1991-92	716·2	1,085·6
1992-93	654·5	1,071·8

The figures shown are at constant (estimated) 1989-90 prices and were calculated by use of the GDP deflator index shown in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement.

Youth training scheme figures exclude community industry (included under the heading "Youth Training" in the public expenditure White Paper), evaluation, research and development, and marketing.

Planned expenditure on YTS reflects a substantial decline in the number of 16 and 17-year-old entrants to the labour force. Also, youth training, which will replace YTS from 29 May and be increasingly delivered by training and enterprise councils, incorporates funding flexibilities to encourage a higher level of employer contributions towards training costs than has been the case under YTS.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints about the level of training have been received by training managers over the past year in respect of (a) YTS and (b) employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many placements on (a) YTS and (b) employment training have been terminated as a result of dissatisfaction on the part of the Training Agency with the training provided in respect of the past year.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to conduct a survey of trainee satisfaction in respect of either YTS or employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Existing surveys of trainees who leave either YTS or employment training cover this aspect of evaluation.

Astra Training Services

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the estimated value of the skillcentre sites sold to Astra Training Services; and whether any estimate was made of their development value.

Mr. Nicholls: All Skills Training Agency sites were valued prior to the sale, and their potential development value was estimated by commercial property advisers appointed by the Government. Were my right hon. and learned Friend to give an estimate of the value of sites included in the sale package announced earlier this month, (Official Report, 13 February 1990, column 141), this could be deducted from the valuation of all STA sites published in the STA's trading account for 1988-89 (which will be published shortly), to produce an estimate of the value of those sites not included in the sale package. This could have a detrimental effect when these remaining sites are offered for sale.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the calculations that gave rise to the sum of £11 million being paid to Astra in respect of the skillcentres sold to it.

Mr. Nicholls: The payment of some £11 million to Astra Training Services Limited is the price which emerged from open, competitive bidding and subsequent negotiation. Publication of calculations undertaken by bidders to arrive at their offers would constitute a breach of commercial confidentiality and could disclose bidders' future plans for the business to potential competitors.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there will be any requirement on Astra in the sale conditions to continue training at any site.

Mr. Nicholls: One of the Government's chief objectives for the sale of the Skills Training Agency (STA) has been to transfer into the private sector as much as possible of the STA's training business. The Secretary of State is satisfied that the aim of Astra Training Services Limited is to run a training business.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many construction firms are protected from the levy to the construction industry training board as a result of the payroll figure of £15,000 contained in the Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: About 16,000 small employers are exempt from levy under the provisions of paragraph 5(1) of the schedule of the Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1989. This is about 29 per cent. of firms on the board's levy register.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to allow construction firms of any size to opt out of participation in the construction industry training board and run their own training schemes.

Mr. Nicholls: We are looking to employers to take more responsibility for training their work force. Grants from levy funds are made available by the construction industry training board to employers for training undertaken to industry agreed standards.

We will be asking the board when it is reconstituted to bring forward proposals which will extinguish the contribution made by the better training employers to the levy fund.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what factors he considered when setting the figure of £15,000 payroll under the Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1989 as the starting point of contributions to the construction industry training board.

Mr. Nicholls: Two main factors were considered before deciding that the level should remain the same as that in the previous order—first, the need for firms to contribute to the costs of training the pool of workers upon which employers draw, and, secondly, that the smallest firms, that is those with the equivalent of a single employee, should be excluded from the levy.

Bolton Job Club

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many registered disabled unemployed have used the services of the Bolton job club during each of the last three years; and how many have been successful in obtaining employment with this assistance.

Mr. Eggar: During the past three years a total of 14 registered disabled people have used the services of Bolton job clubs. Of these, 10 people left to start a job and one person went on to employment training.

For each of the past three years the breakdown is:

	1987	1988	1989
Registered disabled people leaving jobclubs	2	2	10
Registered disabled people leaving to start a job	2	1	7
Registered disabled people leaving to start Employment Training	—	1	—

In the same period a further 24 people with health problems who were not registered as disabled used the services of Bolton job clubs. Of these, 12 people left to start a job and three people went on to employment training, further education or the enterprise allowance scheme.

Radiation

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the Health and Safety Commission's consultative document on additional guidance on radiation protection;

(2) what revised estimates of risk from radiation the Health and Safety Commission took into account when issuing its recent consultative document on radiation protection.

Mr. Nicholls: The consultative document published on 5 February by the Health and Safety Commission sets out draft guidance for employers on measures to maintain levels of protection for employees against ionising radiations in the light of recent revisions of risk estimates. The Health and Safety Commission took into account revised international expert thinking on the risks from radiation, arising out of further information about the survivors of the Japanese atomic bombings, and subsequent interim advice from the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement on workplace levels of radiation;

(2) what proposals the Health and Safety Commission has to recommend a reduction in workplace levels of radiation.

Mr. Nicholls: Levels of exposure to ionising radiations at the workplace have decreased since the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 (IRR 85) came into force.

The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) has recently issued a consultative document containing proposals for interim action pending receipt of revised international recommendations. The HSC's working group on ionising radiations will in due course consider the revised recommendations and make proposals for further action.

Tourism

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has commissioned any research into the provision of bed-and-breakfast accommodation within the British tourist industry after the introduction of the poll tax or community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Health and Safety Executive sought assistance or advice from the railways inspectorate over issues arising from the construction of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the results of the review of the rates of allowance payable under the job release scheme.

Mr. Eggar: Although the job release scheme closed to new applicants on 31 January 1988, the allowances will continue to be paid to participants for up to five years. Following our annual review, the allowances payable from 9 April 1990 under the job release scheme will be as follows:

Those who are married with a dependent wife where net income from all sources does not exceed £15 a week: £84·00 taxable. Those who do not have a dependent wife or whose wife's income exceeds £15 a week: £69·15 taxable. The spouse's earnings limit which affects whether the higher or lower rate is paid has been raised to £15 from £14.

TRANSPORT

M3

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding his proposals for the completion of the M3 at Winchester.

Mr. Parkinson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have decided that the published proposals for the final section of the M3 around Winchester to replace the heavily congested bypass should go ahead.

The decision follows two lengthy public inquiries conducted by independent inspectors nominated by the Lord Chancellor. Both inspectors considered the relative merits of the published scheme for a cutting across Twyford down and several alternative routes put forward by objectors, including those for routing the motorway in twin-bored tunnels under the down and for building the motorway on the line of the existing bypass.

Because of the adverse effects on the Winchester water meadows and residential areas of the city, the inspectors recommended that western routes following the line of the existing bypass should not be built. They endorsed the Department's novel proposals for removing the bypass completely and restoring the area to link the historic and recreational areas of the water meadows and St. Catherine's hill.

The inspectors were impressed by the alternatives for twin-bored tunnels under Twyford down. We too were attracted by the concept of tunnels which would have reduced the amount of land required from the east Hampshire area of outstanding natural beauty, the St. Catherine's hill site of special scientific interest and the two scheduled ancient monuments on Twyford down.

However, we agree with the inspectors that twin-bored tunnels would not be without environmental problems. The two tunnels, each large enough to take three lanes of motorway traffic and a hard shoulder, with portals on either side of Twyford down, would be prominent features in the area of outstanding natural beauty and emphasised by the necessary lighting. There would be considerable problems in disposing of vast quantities of surplus rock, and a tunnel scheme would be less efficient for local traffic distribution.

Such tunnels would be at the forefront of tunnelling technology, and the time necessary to design and construct them would delay seriously the completion of this much-needed section of motorway. Also, because of the innovative nature of the tunnels, the estimated costs of such a scheme varied widely at the inquiries. The 1987-88 inspector concluded that a tunnel solution would cost about £92 million more than the published scheme.

Both the inspectors concluded, and we agreed with them, that the advantages of a tunnel scheme would not outweigh the substantial additional costs and the extensive delay in completing the M3. We have decided, in accordance with the recommendation of the two independent inquiry inspectors, that the published proposals are the right solution to the urgent need to replace the heavily congested Winchester bypass which has been the subject of considerable debate for almost 20 years.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any proposal from British Rail on which he might expect to make a decision on the Channel tunnel to London rail link.

Mr. Portillo: Not yet.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek powers to bring forward proposals for a rail link from the proposed Channel tunnel to London.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail and its chosen joint venture partner, Eurorail, announced at the end of last year their intention to introduce a private Bill in November 1990.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he has had recently on the rail link from the proposed Channel tunnel to London;

(2) when he last met Eurorail to discuss the Channel tunnel link; and what matters were discussed;

(3) when he last met representatives of British Rail to discuss the rail link from the proposed Channel tunnel to London; and what was the outcome of those discussions;

(4) when he last met Trafalgar House to discuss the Channel tunnel rail link and what were the conclusions reached.

Mr. Portillo: I met representatives of British Rail and Eurorail consortium which includes Trafalgar House on Monday 19 February and heard of progress with their work to establish a joint venture.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has contributed to the development of the Channel tunnel to London high-speed rail link.

Mr. Portillo: The responsibility for planning railways rests with British Rail. My Department has provided information on Government policy and on road plans for which it is the highway authority.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met Ove Arup to discuss the Channel tunnel rail link; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. Portillo: I have not myself met Ove Arup, but my officials have done so and reported to me on its proposals for rail links to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek powers to enable him to commit public funds to ensure the development of a Channel tunnel to London rail link.

Mr. Portillo: No.

European Rail System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the topics he has discussed within the European Community regarding railways in the last three months.

Mr. Portillo: At the meeting of the European Council of Transport Ministers which I attended on 4-5 December, there was a debate on Community railway policy. The Council invited the Commission to set up a working party to look at a high-speed network and the scope for technical harmonisation.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek powers to enable him to standardise the height, width and length of British freight wagons with those used on continental railways; and what his Department is doing to develop compatibility.

Mr. Portillo: No. Decisions on rolling stock are entirely a matter for British Rail. I understand that BR is planning to use advanced wagon designs for Channel tunnel freight which will make it possible for larger loads than at present to be carried on the existing United Kingdom loading gauge. Despite the difference in loading gauge, large fleets of wagons and containers already run between the United Kingdom and mainland Europe.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on European Community financial support for railway upgrading (a) in Spain and (b) in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: During 1989-90, British Rail has received nearly £21 million in grants from the European regional development fund. Figures for Spain are not available to my Department.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received from British Rail to convert British freight railways lines to UIC gauge.

Mr. Portillo: None. BR plans to use small wheel bogie wagons for Channel tunnel freight. These will be able to carry larger loads on the existing United Kingdom loading gauge and BR considers that they are likely to be more commercially viable than expensive infrastructure modifications.

A46

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from farmers and other local residents regarding his Department's proposal to close crossings on the A46 trunk road in the vicinity of Thrussington and Seagrave, Leicestershire; and whether he will outline the consultation procedure which will be followed to take account of the views of residents.

Mr. Atkins: Since December last year, the Department has received 34 letters from 20 local farmers and residents about the proposed closure of crossings on the A46 near Seagrave and Thrussington, including letters from both parish councils. I have also received two letters from my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton. A traffic regulation order will be promoted to close the junction between Seagrave and Thrussington and other nearby crossings on the A46. To prepare this, the Department will consult in advance farmers and residents whose property fronts on to the A46, to establish what use is made of each crossing. A draft traffic regulation order will then be published, taking into account the views of frontagers. It will be open to formal objections which the Department will consider before deciding whether or not to make or modify the order, or to hold a public inquiry.

Heavy Lorries

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on (a) the increase in the payload of heavy lorries and (b) changes in the average haul length since the legalisation of 38-tonne trucks.

Mr. Atkins: In 1983, the maximum weight limit for five-axle articulated vehicles was increased from 32·5 tonnes gross vehicle weight to 38 tonnes gross vehicle weight.

A comparison with years before 1983 is not possible since statistics of road haulage prior to 1983 are based on unladen weight and not gross vehicle weight categories. However, there were very few 38-tonne trucks operating in 1983, so that comparisons between 1983 and 1988, the most recent year for which data are available, give a reasonable indication of the effect of the change.

The design payload of a vehicle clearly depends on its axle configuration and body type, and it is estimated that, on average, five-axle 38-tonne vehicles can carry up to 30 tonnes, whereas 33-tonne vehicles can carry up to 24 tonnes. The average load carried by vehicles, on loaded journeys, has risen from 14·8 tonnes in 1983 to 18 tonnes in 1988 for large articulated vehicles – ie, over 33 tonnes GVW, and from 8·4 tonnes to 10·9 tonnes for smaller articulated vehicles over the same period.

The corresponding figures for average length of haul are from 154 km in 1983 to 137 km for larger articulated vehicles and 122 km in 1983 to 109 km in 1988 for the smaller vehicles.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to legislate for the shortening of the average haul length of heavy lorries.

Mr Atkins: No. Operators should be free to decide the length of haul, subject to their customers' requirements.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average fine for overloading vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: The average fine for offences detected by the Department's traffic examiners is about £155.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average fine for tachograph violations.

Mr. Atkins: The average fine for offences detected by the Department's traffic examiners is about £80.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the police role in spot checking vehicles for weight and tachometer offences.

Mr. Atkins: Police assistance is required at Department of Transport roadside checks to stop heavy goods vehicles for checks by enforcement staff. Some police forces also carry out their own spot checks.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to increase the number of heavy goods vehicles spot checked for tachograph and weight violations; how many spot check offenders are prosecuted; and what steps he is taking to increase the number of offenders prosecuted and fined.

Mr. Atkins: The annual national enforcement plan sets targets for enforcement by Department of Transport traffic examiners. In 1988-89, 52 per cent. more HGVs were weighed and 40 per cent. more tachograph charts checked than in the previous year. In 1988-89 nearly 8,200 prosecutions were brought, including weight and tachograph offences. The police and local authority trading standards officers also check weigh vehicles and the police check tachographs. Where violations are detected, offenders will be liable to prosecution.

Railway Inspectorate

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to transfer the railway inspectorate to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Parkinson: I have agreed with the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission that officials should discuss the possibility of transferring the inspectorate's staff to the commission and whether an agency agreement can be made under section 13(1)(b) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to enable railway safety work to be undertaken. The discussions should be completed later this year, after which a decision will be made.

Roadworks, Hertfordshire

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the forthcoming roadworks on the M1 and M25 motorways in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Atkins: At a media briefing earlier today, I gave details of the major roadworks which are to begin in March on the M1 and M25 motorways in Hertfordshire.

We shall be seeking to make information on these essential works widely available to enable drivers to plan their journeys appropriately. Leaflets are being distributed to the travelling public and the road haulage industry and appropriate signs will be displayed on the affected roads.

Copies of the information leaflet are available in the Library for the benefit of hon. Members who use these motorways.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paternity Leave

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what paternity leave is allowed to staff in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: At present paternity leave is not available to civil servants. The Treasury is, however, finalising arrangements for the introduction of an entitlement to two days' paid paternity leave for home civil servants. The Department of Finance and Personnel is also considering the implications of this for the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office have made full use of the rules which at present exist for granting special leave and consider applications sympathetically.

Ambulance Workers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to meet the wage claims of the ambulance workers in Northern Ireland and to undertake discussions with officials of their trade union about a pay review formula.

Mr. Needham: No. Increases in pay and other improvements agreed at national level are automatically adopted and implemented in Northern Ireland.

Harbours

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the minimum depth of water at low tide in each of the principal fishing harbours in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At mean low water during spring tides, the design depths at the entrance and landing and berthing areas of Northern Ireland's three main fishing ports of Kilkeel, Ardglass and Portavogie are as follows:

	Entrance (feet)	Landing and berthing areas (feet)
Kilkeel	6	6
Ardglass	12	8
Portavogie	8	15

The Northern Ireland fishery harbour authority, which has responsibilities for these harbours, has a policy of continuous dredging at Kilkeel to maintain depth. There are no siltation problems at Ardglass and Portavogie.

Extradition

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each year since 1971 the number of extradition requests made by the Royal Ulster Constabulary for persons sought for terrorist offences and non-terrorist offences.

Mr. Cope: The information is as follows:

1973	5	14

Household Equipment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what percentage of households in Northern Ireland have (a) a tumble drier, (b) a washing machine, (c) a deep freeze and (d) a refrigerator; what was the percentage five years and 10 years ago; and what were the percentages in the United Kingdom as a whole at those times;

(2) what percentage of households in Northern Ireland have (a) central heating, (b) a telephone, (c) a television and (d) a car: what was the percentage five years and 10 years ago: and what were the percentages for the United Kingdom as a whole at those times;

(3) what percentage of households in Northern Ireland have (a) a video, (b) a home computer, (c) a microwave oven and (d) a dishwasher and what was the percentage five years and 10 years ago; and what were the percentages for the United Kingdom as a whole at those times.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 20 February 1990]: The table provides available information on the percentage of households in Northern Ireland and in the United Kingdom that possessed the consumer durables about which information is sought. The figures relate to the most recent year for which information is available. The table provides similar data for 1983 and for 1978. As noted in the table, comparisons are in some instances with Great Britain where United Kingdom data are unavailable.

DEFENCE

Empty Properties

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual management and maintenance costs of empty residential properties belonging to his Department by region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence does not keep information on its residential properties in the form requested.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation has been empty for (a) up to a year and (b) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region or local authority area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Statistics are not collected in the precise form requested. The latest figures available show that on 30 November 1989 there were 76,068 service married quarters, of which 10·9 per cent. had been vacant for under one year and 5·4 per cent. vacant for over one year. At 31 December 1989, of 1,790 civilian houses owned by the MOD, 5·8 per cent had been vacant for under six months and 6·7 per cent. for over six months. The breakdown by region is:

Percentage of Service Married Quarters vacant by region as at 30 November 1989

Scotland	3·4	15·4
Wales	6·5	9·7

Some of these vacant properties are in the process of disposal, others will be undergoing major maintenance or refurbishment, and yet others are allocated and awaiting the arrival of the families to the unit.

Royal Arsenal West

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the main features of his Department's proposed development of the Royal Arsenal west site as presented to the London borough of Greenwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are pursuing a comprehensive approach to the disposal of the Royal Arsenal west site. Our proposals envisage a mixed development including leisure, retail, business and residential uses, which will be sensitive to the many heritage features of the site.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why it was decided to freeze the social fund community care grant budget.

Mr. Scott: I announced on 10 November 1989 in reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) at column 812 that the community care grant budget will be increased from £60 million in 1989-90 to £61 million in 1990-91.

Sick Pay

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the factors which caused him to raise the upper limit on the lower earnings band in respect of statutory sick pay from £83·99 to £124·99; and what is the expected saving in statutory sick pay as a result.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Raising the earnings band to £124·99 restores the balance between the proportion of employees entitled to the higher rate of statutory sick pay and those entitled to less than this, to about what it was when the statutory sick pay scheme was introduced in April 1983. The saving in public expenditure from this proposal is estimated as just under £30 million. As 91 per cent. of employees are employed by businesses with occupational sick pay schemes, which will make up any difference in statutory sick pay, the great majority of employees will not experience any reduction in the payments made to them when sick.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 19 January, Official Report, column 479, (1) he will introduce regulations requiring occupational sick pay schemes to include transfer rights in relation to payments for long-term incapacity where length of service is a factor in the calculation of such payments; and if he will make a statement;

(2) he will introduce regulations requiring all occupational sick pay schemes to pay benefits in respect of long-term incapacity of equal or greater value than those to which a person would have been entitled under the state earnings-related pension scheme's additional component to invalidity pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No. Decisions on the terms and conditions of individual occupational sick pay schemes are matters for that scheme's trustees in consultation with all relevant parties as appropriate.

Industrial Injuries and Diseases

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on Monday 19 February, Official Report, columns 549-50, how many of the new claims and review applications were made at his Department's local offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Scott: The available information is that, up to 12 February 1990, 1,760 new claims and review applications were made at Greenock and Port Glasgow local offices under regulation 13 of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries and Diseases) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1986.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to "Short Changed By Disability", published by the Disablement Income Group, a copy of which has been sent to him; if there is any action he will be taking and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We shall be considering the results of this survey. We shall be interested to compare its findings, based on a sample of 87 people, with the results of the 1985-88 surveys we commissioned from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, based on a sample of over 10,000 disabled people.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) ex-service men and (b) widows of ex-service men are receiving benefits arising from their suffering from leukaemia or myeloma which is deemed to be attributable to, or aggravated by, service in the British nuclear test programme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The war pensions scheme administered by the Department provides for pensions where there is reliable evidence which raises reasonable doubt that a condition is caused or aggravated by service, or that death was due to or substantially hastened by this. It is accepted that the evidence raises such a doubt in the case of participants in the British nuclear test programme who have contracted leukaemia (excluding chronic lymphatic leukaemia) or multiple myeloma. Any claim to a war pension by such service men or their widows is therefore likely to succeed. One war disablement pension and six war widows pensions have been awarded as a result.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to amend the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987 so that the retirement pension is paid from the date of retirement rather than the first Monday after retirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to do so. Retirement pension is a regular weekly payment and is not paid for part weeks. The current provisions ensure that everyone is entitled to a full week's pension within a week of retirement.

Community Charge

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what element and how much of an unemployed claimant's income support has been provided to enable them to meet their 20 per cent. liability for the community charge for (a) single claimants, (b) married claimants, (c) those over 25 years and (d) those under 25 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 5 February 1990 at column 524.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons he estimates are entitled to poll tax benefit rebate; what is the breakdown of these by claimant group; and how many of those entitled in each group have been awarded a rebate so far of (a) up to 19 per cent., of their poll tax, (b) 20 to 39 per cent., (c) 40 to 59 per cent., (d) 60 to 79 per cent. and (e) 80 per cent.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 8 February 1990]: Estimates of numbers entitled to community charge benefit can be obtained only when data from the relevant family expenditure survey is published. Estimates of the average number of community charge benefit recipients for 1990-91 are set out in the table :

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Televised Parliamentary Proceedings

Mr. Page: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will arrange an exhibition illustrating the various techniques available for assisting the deaf and hard of hearing to follow televised parliamentary proceedings.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In its report setting out the framework for the televising experiment, the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House expressed in paragraph 59 the hope that the television companies would "make every effort to meet the needs of the deaf, so far as is consistent with their ability to produce reasonably clear television pictures".

This is a subject of great concern to many Members, as evidenced by the number of petitions and early-day motions on the subject.

As part of its monitoring of the progress of the experiment, the Committee has decided to examine the various options available for assisting the deaf community in following televised parliamentary proceedings. Accordingly, with the co-operation of the broadcasters and organisations representing the deaf, the Committee has arranged an exhibition in the Jubilee Room on Monday 5 March. This will consist of a series of short films illustrating the differing techniques for the subtitling of pre-recorded material, semi-live broadcasts (ie news programmes containing some cued and pre-recorded material), and live parliamentary debates, respectively. The effect of incorporating a sign language inset into television pictures of parliamentary proceedings will also be illustrated. In addition, some of the equipment used for applying these techniques will be on display and representatives of the broadcasters and of organisations representing the deaf will be available to answer questions.

There will be special viewings of the exhibition for Members of the House at 3.30 and 4.30 pm. In addition there will be facilities for the press and broadcasting media to see the exhibition at 2.30 pm and the Select Committee will have a separate private showing at 6 pm.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Tote (Privatisation)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be publishing the feasibility study on the privatisation of Tote bookmakers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The advice in the report by Lloyds merchant bank on the feasibility of privatising the Tote will not be published because it was made in confidence to my right hon. and learned Friend and contains commercially and managerially sensitive information. The advice is still under consideration and the Government's conclusions will be made known in due course.

Drink-driving

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the total number of persons convicted at the Corby magistrates court of offences of driving whilst under the influence of drink, excess alcohol, refusal to provide a specimen for analysis and being drunk in charge for each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: At Corby magistrates court there were, in 1987 and 1988 respectively, 160 and 227 findings of guilt for offences of driving, etc. after consuming alcohol or drugs. Information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost; the figure for 1989 is not yet available.

Traffic Lights

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that the Metropolitan police have sufficient manpower resources to deal with traffic problems and dangers arising from the failure of traffic lights at major junctions in Greater London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for the Commissioner to decide whether it is necessary to deploy officers or other staff where traffic lights fail. This is an operational matter which he will determine against the background of other priorities and the manpower available to him.

Empty Properties

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation has been empty for (a) up to a year and (b) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region or local authority area.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office owns quarters available for members of the prison service. The Department is in the process of selling surplus prison service quarters, and in the last two years more than 3,600 properties have been sold, including 260 vacant quarters. Precise information about empty quarters still owned by the Department is not available on a regional basis, but a broad estimate is that 15 per cent. of the 400 quarters now owned by the prison department have been vacant for more than one year.

The following information is available about accommodation owned by the Property Services Agency but managed by the Home Office. Four properties in East Anglia managed by the directorate of telecommunications have been vacant for less than a year. One property at the emergency planning college in north Yorkshire has been vacant for over a year. The fire service college in Gloucestershire has four properties which became vacant only recently. These will be reoccupied shortly.

Criminal Records Office

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for individuals' criminal records are received by the criminal records office daily.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the national identification bureau, which is responsible for the maintenance of the national collection of criminal records, receives an average of 6,840 requests for individuals' criminal records each working day.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed in the criminal records office; what are the numbers in each grade; and how many vacancies currently exist at each grade.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that on 31 January 1990 the complement, staff in post and vacancy figures for the national identification bureau, which is responsible for the maintenance of the national collection of criminal records, were :

Rank	Complement	Staff in post	Vacancies

Total	83	70	13
Civil Staff
Grade 7	1	1	0
Principal Fingerprint Officer	2	2	0
Senior Fingerprint Officer	9	9	0
Fingerprint Officer Grade 1	33	30	3
Fingerprint Officer Grades 2/3	133	127	6

Support Grade Band 1	15	14	1
Support Grade Band 2	69	66	3
Total	609	577½	31½

The staff complement of the bureau is under review, following a joint Metropolitan police/Home Office staff inspection carried out in 1989.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the principal users of the criminal records office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following are the principal organisations entitled to direct access to the information held in the national collection of criminal records maintained by the national identification bureau:

United Kingdom Police Forces;
Foreign Police Forces through Interpol;
Government Departments and Agencies;
Members of the public exercising their rights of subject access under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information technology is in use at the criminal records office; if there are any proposals to expand it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the national identification bureau, which is responsible for the maintenance of the national criminal record collection, uses the following information technology systems:

Microfiched Library Records;
An Image Retrieval System for fingerprints;
The Police National Computer, in particular the Index of Criminal Names and Convictions file;
Fax/Message Switching/Integrated telephone communications systems.

Proposals are under consideration to extend the use of information technology within the bureau to include:

A fully computerised national criminal record system linked directly to police forces, the crown prosecution service and other parts of the criminal justice system;
Computerisation of the property and method indices;
Office automation;
Automatic fingerprint recognition.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average delay between a request for a full criminal record being received by the criminal records office and its receipt by the body which made the request.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the average time taken for the national identification bureau to reply to requests for information, from receipt of the request to dispatch from the bureau, varies according to the type of request received. The most common requests and response times are as follows:

Confirmation of identity of arrestees—6 working days;
Copy of microfiche record—2 working days;
Telephone request for urgent responses—30 minutes;
Government searches—no trace—2 working days;
Government searches—trace—5 working days;
Bulk list searches—3 working days.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police forces are principally dependent upon the national criminal records office; and which make use of regional or force records offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All police forces in the United Kingdom make use of the national collection of criminal records held by the national identification bureau (NIB). The following forces have no additional criminal record facilities available to them:

Bedford
City of London
Cumbria
Dorset
Durham
Dyfed Powys
Gloucestershire
Gwent
Hertfordshire
Kent
North Wales
North Yorkshire
Surrey
Warwickshire
Wiltshire

Scottish forces have access also to the Scottish criminal record office. Other forces in England and Wales hold their own collections of criminal records which may, in part, duplicate the information held by the NIB.

Lorry Inspections

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training police officers receive for lorry weight and tachograph inspections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Training for police officers in these inspections, as in other aspects of road traffic enforcement, is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Pop Concerts

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have (a) died and (b) been injured at pop concerts in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available since injuries and deaths are not coded to show type of event, such as pop concerts.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Meteorological and Climate Research

3. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision exists for postgraduate training in meteorological and climate research.

Mr. Jackson: The Natural Environment and the Science and Engineering Research Councils are funding a total of 74 studentships for postgraduate study in meteorology and climate research in the 1989-90 academic year. In addition, the Meteorological Office provides training for its new graduate scientific staff, which enables them to proceed to posts in climate research.

Financial Management (Schools)

13. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the introduction of local financial management in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sixty-one authorities have received formal approval for their schemes and a further 30 are being consulted on modifications prior to approval. We have indicated to six authorities that their schemes cannot be approved in their present form.

Special Educational Needs

14. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the level of resources available for pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The appropriate level of resources for pupils with special educational needs will be considered, alongside all other sectors of education, in determining the local authority grant settlement for 1991-92. At local level it is for individual LEAs to decide, within the statutory framework, what resources to allocate for such pupils from the total funds available to them.

99. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure that the content of educational statements for children with special needs is determined only by the needs of the handicapped pupils.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Guidance on the procedures for assessments and the preparation of statements of special educational needs was issued to local education authorities on 29 September 1989 in circular 22/89.

LEAs (Administration Costs)

15. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what savings have been achieved in respect of central administration costs of local education authorities as more responsibilities have been devolved to local schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: We expect LEAs to secure the largest economies they can as schemes are implemented. This will allow as much money as possible to be delegated.

Standard Spending Assessments

16. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the 1990-91 standard spending assessments for education.

Mr. MacGregor: Since the announcement of the local authority settlement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 11 January, my Department has received direct representations about standard spending assessments for education from a small number of local education authorities.

92. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to discuss the 1990-91 standard spending assessments for education with the Association of County Councils.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the Association of County Councils to discuss the 1990-91 standard spending assessments for education.

72. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the standard spending assessments for education in 1990-91.

Mrs. Rumbold: The standard spending assessments for education will replace the education grant-related expenditure assessments on 1 April 1990 as the education component of the assessment by which revenue support grant is distributed. The methodology for determining education standard spending assessments was decided after extensive consultation with the local authority associations.

ERASMUS Project

17. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of Government expenditure on the ERASMUS project; and what estimate he has made of this budget for the coming year.

35. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of Government expenditure on the ERASMUS project; and what estimate he has made for the budget for the coming year.

62. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of Government expenditure on the ERASMUS project; and what estimate he has made for this budget for the coming year.

Mr. Jackson: With the exception of the administrative costs of the national grant-awarding agencies, ERASMUS is funded from the Community budget. Provision in 1990 has been set at 60 million ecu. Provision in 1991 will be determined during the Community budget negotiations later this year but has been provisionally estimated by the Commission at 64 million ecu.

Drug Misuse

18. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next intends to meet local education authority drug misuse co-ordinators; and what he will discuss with them.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I will be meeting the national liaison group of the drug education co-ordinators on Monday 12 March. The agenda for the meeting has yet to be determined.

81. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he plans to take to consider the problem of drug abuse in schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department is providing grant on expenditure of up to £4·1 million by local education authorities in 1989-90 to encourage and support the development of programmes of drugs education in schools, colleges and the youth service. In 1990-91 grant will be paid on expenditure of up to £7 million on programmes of preventive health education, including education about drug misuse. The national curriculum science order requires that pupils in both primary and secondary schools should study the risks of drug misuse and how it affects body processes. In addition, the National Curriculum Council plans to issue guidance in the spring to all schools in England on the place and content of health education, including education about drug misuse, in the curriculum as a whole.

School Repairs

19. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of outstanding repairs for schools in (a) England and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

50. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of outstanding repairs for schools in (a) England and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The 1987 report of the DES survey of school buildings estimated that the cost of implementing the main structural requirements related to the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 and the other physical requirements in primary and secondary schools in England was about £1·1 billion (although this estimate is subject to sampling error). This figure includes improvements to buildings as well as repairs. Since the survey substantial sums, both capital and current, have been, and continue to be, devoted to improving school premises. The repair of schools in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Nursery Education

20. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet representatives of those local education authorities that make little provision for nursery education.

44. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet representatives of those local education authorities that make little provision for nursery education.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. My right hon. Friend believes that local authorities themselves are best placed to determine the extent and form of provision for the under-fives in their area.

86. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many nursery and under-five-year-old public education places have been created since 1979; and which are the local authorities which have reached the higher proportion of places created during such period.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the number of places available in England is not collected centrally. The number of children under five attending maintained nursery and primary schools increased by 119,000 between 1979 and 1989. The 10 local education authorities with the largest share of that increase are:

	Number
Avon	7,254
Birmingham	6,113
Inner London	5,429
Derbyshire	4,845
Cheshire	4,673
Dorset	3,310
Leeds	3,155
Leicestershire	3,136
Lancashire	3,128
Northamptonshire	3,110

43. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to extend the provision of nursery education; and if he will make a statement.

82. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to extend the provision of nursery education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The local authority grant settlement for 1990-91 allows for local authorities to spend almost £15 billion (£14,988 million) on education. This total allows for the continuance of the steady growth in the proportion of under-fives participating in education, as well as for the growth in the under-five population. The actual deployment of education funding will continue to be for authorities and schools to determine.

Out-of-Borough Pupils

21. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the number of out-of-borough pupils being educated in Barnet in January.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information for January 1990 is not yet available. However, in January 1989 there were 4,747 pupils from outside the borough in Barnet schools.

National Curriculum.

22. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any new proposals on the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government intend to continue to implement the national curriculum on the broad timetable announced. My right hon. Friend will continue to make new proposals as appropriate.

31. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to help ensure the effective implementation of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is making specific grants available to support the implementation of the national curriculum. Education support grants and LEA training grants will support over £100 million relevant expenditure by local education authorities this financial year and some £120 million next. These are in addition to general rate (or revenue) support grant funding.

My right hon. Friend is also grant-aiding the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council, which are providing advice and training materials.

Rural Primary Schools

23. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy in relation to the provision of rural primary schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for LEAs to decide on the pattern of provision of rural primary schools. Any proposals for closure of such schools must take account of considerations such as denominational choice, local geography, the distance to be travelled to alternative schools, and the age of the children making those journeys. My right hon. Friend is currently supporting through education support grants a number of pilot projects at primary schools in rural areas, including Cumbria, which are designed to experiment with ways of enriching the curriculum.

Teachers' Pay

24. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to dissolve the interim advisory committee which reports on teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: The committee discharged its remit to report on teachers' pay and conditions in 1990-91 on 30 January.

59. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress towards setting up new collective bargaining arrangements for teachers.

87. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made to establish a new negotiating machinery for the pay and conditions of teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes).

60. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the report by the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement.

77. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning the need to improve the pay and conditions of school teachers.

98. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the report by the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend wrote to the teacher unions, the local authority employers and others on 7 February inviting their comments on the recommendations of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions and on his proposals for their implementation. He asked for comments by 1 March.

33. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a further statement on the implementation of the recommendations of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay and conditions.

51. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken in response to the report made to him by the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay and conditions; and whether he intends to introduce more flexibility into the structure of teachers' pay.

67. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on teachers' pay for the next financial year.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 1 February, Official Report, columns 287-89.

Student Loans

25. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average debt expected for a student studying for a four-year science degree at a Scottish university, assuming the student loans scheme were in operation and the student entered the first year of the course in autumn 1990.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 30 January (Official Report, column 158).

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received to date about the proposed student loans scheme.

Mr Jackson: Since the publication of the White Paper on top-up loans for students, we have received about 5,300 letters, including 72 petitions. Of those, about 940 have been received since publication of the Education (Student Loans) Bill.

88. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the functions and the running of the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company is a company limited by shares and owned by the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Scotland. It is based in Glasgow and is undertaking preparatory work on the student loans scheme. It is the Government's intention that, subject to the passage of the Education (Student Loans) Bill, the company will administer the scheme.

90. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how parental contributions to student maintenance will change once the student loans scheme is fully implemented.

Mr. Jackson: The average contribution will fall to a little over half its current level. This was shown in tabular form in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 21 December 1989 at columns 356-57.

61. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his most up-to-date estimate of the number of students who will apply for top-up loans in the forthcoming academic session; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Top-up loans will mean extra resources for students. If 80 per cent. of those eligible were to apply, some 455,000 students would receive loans in the 1990-1991 academic year.

58. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the location of the student loans administration headquarters.

Mr. Jackson: We have received no written representations on the location of the Student Loans Company. My right hon. Friend announced on 22 January that the company had secured premises in Glasgow (Official Report, column 496).

40. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next plans to meet the managing director of the Student Loans Company; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend expects to meet Mr. Ronald J. Harrison, managing director of the Student Loans Company, from time to time to discuss preparatory work on the student loans scheme. Officials of the Department of Education and Science and the Scottish Education Department are in regular contact with Mr. Harrison.

Education Reform Act

26. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to amend the charging regulations issued under the Education Reform Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to amend the charging regulations issued under the Education Reform Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Before considering whether amendment is necessary, my right hon. Friend has instructed the Department to commission a survey of schools in the summer term to monitor any changes in the pattern of school activities since 1988. If there is evidence that activities are not taking place as a result of the legislation, my right hon. Friend will see how best he can help schools. He has no plans at present to amend the law.

53. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the implementation of the Education Reform Act in Northumberland.

Mrs. Rumbold: I believe that good progress is being made in Northumberland in implementing our reforms in both schools and further education colleges.

Page Report

27. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Page report.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) and to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel).

Vocational Education

28. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the introduction of the national curriculum will allow time for some pupils to undertake vocational education.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that there will be flexibility in the 14-16 curriculum, including scope for study towards vocational qualifications. He has asked the School Examinations and Assessment Council to advise him on the principles which might govern the submission by vocational examining bodies of qualifications for certifying parts of the national curriculum.

Derbyshire

29. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the standards of schooling in Derbyshire.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Her Majesty's inspectorate considers that there is much good teaching in Derbyshire but some weaknesses are also evident.

The national curriculum will enhance educational opportunity for all children in Derbyshire as elsewhere.

Incentive Allowances

30. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers are now eligible for incentive allowances; and whether he intends to increase the number of allowances available.

Mrs. Rumbold: An incentive allowance can be awarded to any qualified teacher paid on the main scale. My right hon. Friend has announced that he proposes to accept the recommendation of the interim advisory committee that the number of incentive allowances in primary and secondary schools should be increased to 189,000 from 1 September.

Religious Studies

32. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that secondary school pupils are provided with the opportunity of passing GCSE and A-level courses in religious studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A range of syllabuses in religious studies is available to schools at both GCSE and A-level. It is for schools to decide what courses to offer their pupils, but I would urge schools to give pupils who wish to do so the opportunity of taking religious studies at GCSE and at A-level.

69. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to improve the quality of instruction in the Christian religion in primary and secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education Reform Act secures the place of Christianity in the religious education and collective worship provided by county schools. The Government are supporting expenditure of £53·2 million by LEAs in 1990-91 on in-service training for the basic curriculum—which includes religious education—and collective worship.

Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools

34. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement setting out the Government's response to the problems referred to in the recent report of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools.

86. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to take any policy initiative following the publication of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools annual report; and if he will make a statement.

85. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking in response to the annual report of Her Majesty's senior chief inspector of schools.

91. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to take any policy initiative following the publication of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The senior chief inspector's report is a survey of the state of the education service in 1988-89. It has many positive things to say, including that the great majority of work seen was satisfactory or better, and that good progress is being made in implementing the education reforms. The Government are already acting to tackle many of the weaknesses revealed, in particular to raise standards of achievement and reduce teacher shortages. My right hon. Friend will, of course, take account of the report's findings in the future development of the Government's education policies; and he looks to the other partners in the education service to consider the messages addressed to them.

39. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to discuss with parents' organisations the contents of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools annual report; and if he will make a statement.

74. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to discuss with parents' organisations the contents of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has not received any request from parents' organisations for a discussion about the senior chief inspector's annual report. He hopes that parents will note the positive things the report has to say about the state of the education service, and welcome the fact that many of the weaknesses revealed are already being addressed through the Government's wide-ranging programme of reforms.

GCSE

36. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the Government's proposals to change the structure of the GCSE examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: GCSE will continue to be the main form of assessment for pupils at age 16 but some changes will be necessary to bring it into line with the national curriculum. From 1994, achievement will be reported on the national curriculum 1-10 scale, pupils being awarded a GCSE certificate if they achieve level 4 or better. GCSEs will be available in single subjects and also in combinations of subjects. The School Examinations and Assessment Council is developing revised GCSE national criteria embodying the statutory attainment targets and programmes of study for the 10 foundation subjects of the national curriculum.

Secondary Schools, Essex

37. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what applications he has received for the reorganisation of secondary schools in Essex.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has recently approved proposals to reorganise secondary and further education in the Basildon and Wickford area. There are no other secondary reorganisation proposals concerning Essex currently awaiting his decision.

Capital Allocation, Bradford

38. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the capital allocation for education in Bradford.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 20 December 1989, Official Report, columns 254-58. It is for Bradford LEA to decide how to use the resources made available to it in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Supply Teachers

41. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the total cost of supply teachers in England and Wales for 1988-89.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Expenditure on supply teachers is not separately identified within the spending returns which local education authorities in England make to the Department of the Environment. Supply teachers in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Pupil to Teacher Ratio

42. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest available figure for the pupil to teacher ratio in England and Wales; and what were the comparable figures for five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In January 1989 the overall pupil-teacher ratio in England was 17·0. Comparable figures for 1984 and 1979 were 17·9 and 18·9 respectively.

Corresponding figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Wandsworth

45. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the number of letters that his Department has received from parents in the London borough of Wandsworth in support of the policies being outlined by the present council once education is transferred from the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: None. I have noted with interest what appear to be wide-ranging and imaginative plans approved by Wandsworth council to provide an education service which raises standards and which fully meets the needs and aspirations of local people. The implementation of most of these plans appears to be solely a matter for the council. However, to the extent that the plans require the publication of statutory proposals and approval by the Secretary of State, they will be considered strictly on their merits at the appropriate time.

Research Contracts

46. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department has issued to universities with regard to research contracts with private companies.

Mr. Jackson: The Department continues to encourage universities to increase earnings from private sources, but has offered no specific advice.

Trained Teachers

48. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to help improve the supply of trained teachers.

105. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the measures which he is taking to deal with the problem of teacher shortages.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 8 January 1990 (Official Report, column 339). Since then we have announced that the Government are providing funding of £159,000 for the London Teacher Recruitment Campaign, and the Teaching as a Career Unit will be supporting the London boroughs. We shall continue to pursue our programme to recruit teachers in shortage subjects.

102. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce the numbers of students entering teacher training colleges at the start of the 1989-90 academic year; and if he will give comparable figures for the previous year.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not received any direct representations.

Science Teaching

54. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much the number of graduates applying to train to teach science has increased for 1990 over 1989.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Applications from graduates for postgraduate certificate in education courses are handled by the Graduate Teacher Training Registry. For the week ending 9 February applications to train to teach science were 8 per cent. down on the corresponding time last year. Applications can be received up until the end of September. In January 1989 PGCE applications overall were running 6 per cent. down on the previous year, but at the end of the recruiting season applications were 2 per cent. and recruitment 4 per cent. higher than in the previous year. We are continuing to pursue our programme to recruit teachers in shortage subjects.

Biology Teaching

55. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much the number of graduates applying to train to teach biology has increased for 1990 over 1989.

89. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to improve morale among the teaching profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee foresees substantial gains in the self-confidence of teachers as the Government's education reforms are successfully introduced. The recommendations of the committee should significantly increase the attractiveness of teaching as a profession. My right hon. Friend will shortly be meeting the teacher unions to discuss the committee's report.

Technology Transfer

63. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress is being made to develop links between institutes of higher education and industry for the purpose of technology transfer.

Mr. Jackson: This Government attach considerable importance to technology transfer between higher education and industry, both sectorally and geographically, whether on a regional, national or international basis. We are supporting a number of schemes for this purpose. For instance, the Department, together with others, is sponsoring the LINK initiative to develop and accelerate the commercial exploitation of Government-funded research in a range of sectors; a national network of regional technology centres to support technology transfer locally, and the European Community COMETT programme to support it internationally.

Mathematics Teaching

64. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much the number of graduates applying to train to teach mathematics has increased for 1990 over 1989.

We are continuing to pursue our programme to recruit teachers in shortage subjects.

65. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in response to his draft regulations and circular encouraging schools to adopt records of achievement schemes.

Mrs. Rumbold: Fifteen responses have been received, but the period for public consultation does not end until 31 March.

66. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take in respect of the requirement on schools to complete the annual curriculum returns.

Mr. MacGregor: My proposals will be published within the next few days.

Staying-on Rate

68. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the expected staying-on rate in full-time education for the 16 to 18 years age group in the years 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 22 February (Official Report, column 843).

City Technology Colleges

70. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he anticipates that he will reach the target of 20 operational city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twenty CTCs remain the target. The programme is making excellent progress. Three colleges have already opened, and 10 more will open in September 1990 or 1991. Target dates for the remainder depend upon practical considerations such as site acquisitions.

83. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many companies have agreed to sponsor city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: Over 160 companies and individuals are sponsoring the CTC initiative. Discussions are still continuing with other companies.

National Testing

73. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the relationship between national testing and secondary selection.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is no formal relationship. The basis for secondary selection, where it exists, is for local discretion.

Teacher Shortages

76. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will produce figures for teacher shortages for each of the past five years; and what further steps he plans to take to reduce such shortages in the future.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Vacancies for teachers in England and the proportion of teachers in service that they represent are as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Secondary vacancies
Number	1,897	2,398	2,508	1,989	2,424
Proportion	0·9	1·1	1·2	1·0	1·3
Primary vacancies
Number	n/a	n/a	n/a	2,400	3,116
Proportion	n/a	n/a	n/a	1·5	1·8

Data for primary schools are collected for the first time in 1988. Data for 1990 are currently being collected.

The Government have implemented a range of measures to combat teacher shortages including: publicity and advertising campaigns spearheaded by the Teaching as a Career Unit; the £1,300 bursary for trainee teachers of shortage subjects; and in-service training for existing teachers of shortage subjects. Over two years from April we shall be supporting expenditure of £4 million in 45 local education authorities to improve the recruitment of mature new entrants and returners. We shall continue and reinforce our range of measures.

101. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest estimates of teacher shortages within and without London; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave on 21 December 1989 to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) at columns 353-55.

We shall continue to support and develop the range of measures we have taken since 1986 to improve teacher supply. These include new initial and in-service training courses; the establishment of the Teaching as a Career Unit (TASC) to undertake national advertising and publicity; taster courses for mature people considering a career change; education support grant provision for local initiatives to attract mature entrants and former serving teachers; the licensed and articled teachers schemes; and bursaries for initial teacher training students on shortage subject courses.

In addition we are supporting a London-wide recruitment campaign with funding of £159,000 in 1989-90.

Primary and Infant Schools, Manchester

78. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what correspondence he has received from head teachers of primary and infant schools in Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available in the form requested. My right hon. Friend frequently receives correspondence from head teachers about various aspects of education provision.

Physics Teaching

80. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how many the number of graduates applying to train to teach physics has increased for 1990 over 1989.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Applications from graduates for postgraduate certificate in education courses are handled by the Graduate Teacher Training Registry. For the week ending 9 February applications to train to teach physics were 17 per cent. down on the corresponding time last year. Applications can be received up until the end of September. In January 1989 PGCE applications overall were running 6 per cent. down on the previous year, but at the end of the recruiting season applications were 2 per cent. and recruitment 4 per cent. higher than in the previous year. We shall continue to pursue our programme to recruit teachers in shortage subjects.

Sport

84. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement about the promotion of sport in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey).

93. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning Bradford education authority's guidelines on restrictions on head teachers from communicating with the media.

Mr. Alan Howarth: None.

Teachers' Status

94. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to improve the status of the teaching profession.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 1 February that he proposed to accept in full the recommendations of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions. These will mean better matching of rewards with contribution, better career prospects for good teachers and greater competitiveness for the teaching profession in the graduate labour market.

School Sports Facilities

95. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any further plans to encourage the use of school sports facilities by voluntary organisations when not in use by the school concerned.

Mr. Alan Howarth: With my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport, I intend to issue a document giving practical guidance on the dual use of school sports facilities. Publication is due in early April 1990.

Local Management of Schools

96. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about local management of schools. Many of these expressed heartening support for the key principles of local management of schools and looked forward to its successful introduction in April.

Teachers (Resettlement)

97. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the resettlement arrangements for teachers in schools which close because they are surplus to requirements.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Resettlement arrangements for teachers whose schools close are a matter for their employers.

Higher Education

100. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications there have been for courses of higher education in the forthcoming academic year; how many people are presently in higher education; and what were the numbers in higher education (a) five years ago and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Jackson: By 15 December 1989, the Universities Central Council on Admissions and the Polytechnics Central Admissions System had received 195,000 and 152,000 applications respectively from home and overseas students for admission to higher education courses in 1990. There are an estimated 1,061,000 students on higher education courses in institutions in Great Britain in the current academic year, compared with 882,000 in 1984-85 and 778,000 in 1979-80.

Grant-maintained Schools

103. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of schools which have now been accorded grant-maintained status and on the number of schools which have commenced the process of application for this status.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date 86 schools have embarked on the process of applying for grant-maintained status. Of these 80 schools have held ballots, and parents at 60 of them have so far voted in favour of proceeding with an application. My right hon. Friend has approved or said he is minded to approve 35 of the 46 proposals which have so far reached him for decision. More secondary schools have now been approved for grant-maintained status than the number of secondary schools in over half of English LEAs.

Student Grants

104. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice or guidelines he has issued to local education authorities concerning the level of student grants for 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: Following my right hon. Friend's announcement in December, the Department sent a circular letter in January informing local education authorities of the proposed main rates of grant and parental contribution scales for mandatory awards in 1990-91. A further circular letter about supplementary grant rates and any amendments to the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations proposed for 1990-91 will be issued by the summer. The regulations themselves will be laid before Parliament in the summer and made available to local education authorities.

Disabled Children

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what actions he plans to take on the failure of Gloucestershire education authority to ensure that Beverley Lewes received an education after the age of 10 years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend is currently investigating the circumstances of the case with the Gloucestershire local education authority.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to ensure that all deaf-blind children up to the age of 16 years receive full-time education.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department published a statement on the educational needs of deaf-blind children on 9 March 1989, which describes the provision currently available for these children and suggests how it might be developed. We will be following up this document later in the year, to see what progress has been made by authorities towards providing for the needs of deaf-blind children.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to identify young disabled adults who have not received the education to which they are entitled; and what steps he intends to take to redress the situation.

Mr. Jackson: As part of their general duty to provide adequate facilities for further education for their area, local education authorities are required to have regard to the requirements of persons with learning difficulties. I see no reason to remove from LEAs the primary responsibility for identifying needs or to alter the existing machinery for complaints about provision in individual cases.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there are any circumstances under which a local education authority is not regarded by his Department as being obliged to provide full-time education to a disabled child under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Where a child has a statement of special educational needs, a local education authority is obliged, under section 7(2) of the Education Act 1981, to arrange that the special educational provision specified in the statement is made for him unless his parents have made suitable alternative arrangements for his education.

Leukaemia Research

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total cost of the recent Medical Research Council case control study of leukaemia and lymphoma in young people resident in west Cumbria; and what percentage of it was met by each Government Department involved.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council has informed me that the total cost of its case control study of leukaemia and lymphoma in young people resident in west Cumbria was £260,000. The Department of Health contributed 27 per cent. of the total cost.

Examinations

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to introduce measures to sustain the consistency of examination standards.

Mrs. Rumbold: The School Examinations and Assessment Council already works with examining bodies, through formal scrutinies, conferences of chief examiners, and other means, to secure the greatest possible consistency in standards of awarding grades. My right hon. Friend has no plans to promote additional action to that end.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much would (a) the share, (b) the number of units and (c) the cash allocation received by the Housing Corporation regions covering London as part of the 1990-91 approved development programme have been increased had the revised housing needs index been fully implemented next year.

Mr. Chope: The tables compare the actual distribution of the for rent and for sale elements of the approved development programme in 1990-91 with that suggested by the housing needs index for the geographical area covered by the corporation's three London and home counties regional offices:

(a) Share of HNI

Community Charge

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will discuss with the local authority associations and the national builders federation the position of small building companies that have built housing estates for sale but not yet found purchasers for those houses and that are being charged twice the standard community charge on each empty house.

Mr. David Hunt: Newly built domestic property is entitled to complete relief from the standard charge for at least six months after it has been substantially completed. Local authorities have discretion to extend that period for such property for as long as they wish; they also have discretion to levy a charge which is less than twice the personal charge. These decisions are for individual local authorities to take and justify in the light of local circumstances, and it would not be appropriate for the Government to seek to influence those decisions.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have now set their community charge levels, to the latest convenient date; what level of charge has been set in each case; and what is the political control of each authority concerned.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 21 February. (Official Report, Vol. 167, column 741).

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken by his Department to collate publicly available information on community charge registrations by hon. Members; how much of this information was collected; and for what purposes it was collected.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The Department has collected no such information.

Community Charge (North Bedfordshire)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will cap the community charge for North Bedfordshire which has substantially exceeded the figure recommended by the Government.

Mr. Chope: Selection of authorities for capping has to be on general principles and it would not be right for me to speculate on whether North Bedfordshire borough council or any other authority would be capped if my right hon. Friend needed to use his capping powers for next year; but he has made it clear that if authorities insist on budgeting excessively he will not hesitate to cap them.

Council Houses, Lambeth

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were conveyed for sale in Lambeth in 1988; how many were exempt from stamp duty because they were disposed of for less than £30,000; and what was the ratio of the capital value to the rateable value.

Mr. Chope: Lambeth borough council reported the sale of 537 dwellings in 1988-89; information is not collected centrally on the value of individual sales or on their rateable value.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to table 15.3 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1989," whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing in the same form the number and value of (i) houses and (ii) flats owned by Lambeth borough council and conveyed to the private sector in 1988.

Mr. Chope: Lambeth borough council reported the sale of 302 houses and 235 flats in 1988-89 at a total value including discount of £26,559,000. The number of sales includes 20 dwellings sold to housing associations. Information is not collected centrally on the value of house and flat sales.

Tenants' Choice

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authority areas in which tenants' choice has been exercised; and how many properties have been involved in each case.

Mr. Chope: At present, one tenants' choice application has been served, on Westminster city council. This application is for 1,100 properties. Many other tenants' groups and potential new landlords are in preliminary discussions with the Housing Corporation.

Cyclists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has done concerning the effect of greater numbers of cyclists on (a) vehicle pollution of the environment and (b) global warming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport on 26 February (Official Report, Vol. 168, column 55).

Structural Defects (Compensation)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money his Department has awarded in compensation to property owners claiming for structural defects resulting from high alumina cement who were (a) private owners and (b) local authorities and (c) housing associations.

Mr. Chope: None.

Council House Sales

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sales of council houses quarter by quarter up to and including the last quarter of 1989 since 1985.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is listed in the table:

Mr. Chope: The information for 1988-89 and 1989-90 is in the tables. Corresponding information for 1990-91 is not yet available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the basis of his calculation of a net inflow of persons for Grimsby and an average of night stayed by visitors for indicator values for standard spending assessment purposes.

Mr. Chope: A definition of these and all indicators used within SSAs is given in annex A of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) approved by the House on 18 January.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to make provision for concessions on community charges to those households which are not connected to the main sewer and which at present receive a reduction in their rating assessment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he intends to make provision for some adjustment to those people who pay community charges and do not receive certain services because they live on an unmade road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 February 1990]: No. The community charge is not property-based, and it would not be appropriate to retain features of the rating system which link payment for local services to the rental value of property.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his written reply dated 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable in 1990-91 per adult for each region, and so on, (1) whether he will provide in each case the average amount per head contributed by central Government to the finance of local expenditure in 1989-90;

(2) whether he will provide in each case the adult population figures on which it was based together with the number of hereditaments: and if he will add figures for the child population.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: I have today placed in the Library a table showing the information requested. The figures for 1989-90 rate support grant include contributions to or from the London rate equalisation scheme and are per head of relevant population in 1990-91. Central Government also contribute towards the finance of local authority expenditure by specific grants but amounts are not yet known for individual authorities or areas.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his written reply dated 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable in 1990-91 per adult for each region, and so on, whether he will provide in each case an estimate of the numbers of single-adult households chargeable to poll tax together with the number of those with children.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The available information is shown in the table. This is based on data taken from the family expenditure survey and shows the estimated number of single-adult households with and without children in each region.

	Single adult	Single parent	All single households
Northern	460	40	500
Yorkshire and Humberside	670	80	750
North West	800	110	910
East Midlands	440	40	490
West Midlands	580	70	650
East Anglia	230	20	250
Greater London	950	90	1,040
Remainder of South East	1,140	120	1,260

	Single adult	Single parent	All single households
South West	500	50	550
Total England	5,770	620	6,400

Numbers are in thousands and may not add due to rounding.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the assumptions and the basis of calculation used in his reply to the hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 12 February, Official Report, column 58, that under the community charge system about 15 times as much will be contributed to the cost of local government by the top 10 per cent. of households by income compared with the poorest 10 per cent.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 February 1990]: Using a sample of households grouped into deciles of gross income, the calculations involved the following stages:

(i) Calculate the amount of local spending funded by national taxation as a multiple of income from domestic rates (less rebates).

(ii) Taking the figure produced by (i), calculate the amount of national taxation accounted for by centrally funded contributions to local taxation.

(iii) Calculate the amount produced by (ii) as a proportion of total national taxation.

(iv) Assuming that the proportion at (iii) applied equally to all households, estimate the amount of national taxation paid as a contribution to local authority spending by the top and bottom deciles of households by income.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings his Department has had with, and how many letters it has received from, Derbyshire county council in connection with the community charge within the past year.

Mr. Chope: The Department has had no meetings with, but has received nine letters from, Derbyshire county council in connection with the community charge within the past year.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his written reply dated 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable in 1990-91 per adult for each region, what assumption has been made about the per adult contribution made by central Government in deciding the proposed increase in the local tax/ratepayer's contribution to local expenditure in Humberside; and whether he will publish in the Official Report the per adult figures for the central Government contribution in each case, together with figures showing that contribution as a percentage of the local tax/ratepayer's contribution.

Mr. Chope: The Government have not proposed a specific increase in local contribution to expenditure in Humberside. The Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) sets out the basis of distribution of revenue support grant for 1990-91. The Revenue Support Grant Transition Report (England) sets out the adjustments to that basis of distribution and the Special Grant Report specifies two special grants for 1990-91. The distribution of business rates will be in accordance with the Local Government Finance Act 1988. The table shows the aggregate of these amounts (known as "external support") for Humberside authorities as amounts per adult and as percentages of the average assumed personal community charge or 1989-90 rate bill per adult:

External support for Humberside

	External support per adult £	External support as percentage of rate/chargepayer contribution
Underlying 1990-91 assumed community charge with safety net	595	224·4
Underlying 1989-90 average rate bill per adult	583	241·0
Underlying assumed long run community charge	535	164·9

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has commissioned any research on the effects of the poll tax or community charge on the provision of bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Chope: No such research has been commissioned. Any person solely or mainly resident in a building, whatever its use, will be subject to the personal community charge. Bed-and-breakfast accommodation offered in someone's own home which is available for fewer than 100 days in a year will not be subject to business rates.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount of the block grant given to each London borough, per head of population in 1988-89, 1989-90 and the forecast for 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: The information for 1988-89 and 1989-90 is as follows. Comparable information for 1990-91 is not available for individual authorities because of changes to the grant system.

Shropshire County Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total number of employees of Shropshire county council for each of the past five years.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Shropshire County Council: Staffing levels at June (excluding Police[1])

	Full-time	Part-time	Total
1985	7,200	6,833	14,033

Environmental Protection

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions have been taken by the Council of Ministers on the 1989-92 STEP framework programme initiative on environmental protection and the 1989-92 EPOCH framework programme on climatology and natural hazards.

Mr. Trippier: The Council of Ministers adopted the STEP (science and technology for environmental protection) and EPOCH (European programme on climatology and natural hazards) on 20 November 1989. The programmes will run for four years from the date of adoption at a cost of 75 million European currency units (mecu) and 40 mecu, respectively.

Empty Properties

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of the number of empty residential properties in the private sector; and what is his estimate of the percentage that this represents of the total number of residential properties in the private sector;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of properties which are empty in each of the categories of (a) local authority housing, (b) housing association housing and (c) Government Department housing; and what is his estimate of the percentage that this represents of the total number of properties in each such group;

(3) what is his estimate of the number of vacant assured tenancies in the private sector (a) now, (b) in February 1989 and (c) in February 1988;

(4) what is his estimate of the number of vacant tenancies in the private sector by region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The available information for April 1989 is in the table. Figures are for England, except in the case of Government Departments, which cover Great Britain.

	Vacant dwellings (thousands)	As a percentage of stock
[1] Local authority	100·7	2·4
[2] Housing association	21·8	4·2
[3] Other public sector	35·1	18·1
[4] Private	589·0	4·1

[1] Derived from local authorities housing investment programme returns for April 1989. Includes dwellings which are closed or have been acquired for demolition, and dwellings on overspill estates.

[2] Derived from housing association returns to the Housing Corporation for March 1989. Includes 13,500 dwellings, mainly purchased vacant from the private sector, which require rehabilitation work before suitable for occupation.

[3] 1988-89 figures reported by central Government Departments to the Treasury and includes dwellings owned by local health authorities. Many are vacant because of operational requirements, notably those owned by the Ministry of Defence, and others have been acquired for demolition eg by the Department of Transport. The Government are encouraging the sale of housing which is surplus to requirements and many of those that are vacant are in the process of disposal.

[4] Includes both rented and owner occupied dwellings. Local authorities provide figures in their housing investment programme returns, but because of the difficulty of obtaining up-to-date information on private sector vacancies, the estimates are likely to be less reliable than other information provided. The Department has no estimates of the number of vacant tenancies in the private sector or of vacant assured tenancies in the private sector. For information about Wales and Scotland I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any plans to introduce grants for housing associations and local authorities to bring unoccupied houses into use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 February 1990]: Housing association grant and housing revenue account subsidy to local housing authorities are already available for a variety of activities which may bring unoccupied houses into use. Allocations of capital resources to associations and authorities also take account of the need for this work. The primary aim of the £250 million homelessness initiative announced last November was to bring empty housing association and local authority dwellings back into use.

Air Pollution

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made by his Department of the number of deaths and the number of work days lost through air pollution for each year since 1980, together with the estimated cost of health care.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has made no such estimate. The term "air pollution" is not sufficiently precise to be attributable as a cause of death or illness, and it is therefore doubtful whether the information exists on which such estimates could be based.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what have been the annual changes in the emissions of sulphur dioxide from fossil fuel combustion in the United Kingdom from 1975 to 1989; and if he will give the projections for the years to 1995;

(2) what have been the total annual reductions in the emissions of sulphur dioxide in the United Kingdom from 1975 to 1989; and if he will give the projections for the years to 1995;

(3) what projections he has concerning the emissions of nitrous oxides from the United Kingdom; and what plans he has for their reduction.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for the years 1975 to 1987 are given in chapter 2 of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", copies of which are held in the Library of the House. Figures for 1988 will be contained in the 12th edition, which will be published shortly. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

The European Community large combustion plants directive commits us to reduce emissions of sulphur dioxide from existing combustion plants over 50 MW by 60 per cent. by 2003, and of nitrogen oxides by 30 per cent. by 1998, based on 1980 levels in each case, with stringent emissions standards for new plants. The agreement on motor vehicles reached with our European partners in June 1989 is expected to reduce emissions of nitrogen oxides by about 80 per cent. from each new car after 1992. We are in the process of examining the implications of these commitments with Warren Spring laboratory, which maintains the national emissions inventory for the Department.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the impact of the uniform business rate and the non-domestic revaluation on properties in the rural development areas (a) overall and (b) by type of property.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not readily available. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Local Government, Essex

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give details of the expenditure of Chelmsford borough council and Essex county council in each year since 1983-84 in (a) cash terms, (b) constant price terms; and (c) cash terms per head of population; and if he will indicate the percentage increase in each year;

(2) if he will publish details of the direct total grants made to Chelmsford borough council and Essex county council in (a) cash terms, (b) constant price terms and (c) cash terms per head of population in every year since 1983-84.

Satellite Dishes

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consideration he has given to extending the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 to require planning consent for the installation of any satellite antennae on the front elevations of properties;

(2) what consideration he is giving to extending the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 to include controls over the erection of satellite antennae on dwellinghouses or within their curtilage within conservation areas.

Mr. Moynihan: These issues will be included in the consultation paper which we shall shortly be issuing about planning controls on satellite antennae and other telecommunications development.

Local Government (Politically Restricted Posts)

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet prepared the regulations under section 1(5) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department has today sent copies of draft regulations to the local authority associations and others for comment. I have arranged for a copy of the draft to be placed in the Library of the House.

The regulations will complete the provisions to ensure that local government officers who hold politically sensitive posts are subject to restrictions to ensure that they do not undertake public political activity which are broadly comparable to those to which senior civil servants have been subject for over a century.

The Act already provides that from 1 May 1990 such local government officers will be disqualified from election as Members of the European Parliament, Members of Parliament and members of county, district and London borough councils. The regulations, when made, would ensure that a comparable range of restrictions apply to other forms of public political activity.

In general, the regulations follow the proposals in the Government's consultation paper, but changes have been made which will permit local authority officers to hold offices in political parties which are concerned solely with the internal management of the party (for example, as auditors), and which will make it clear that the restrictions do not apply in any way to the officers' official duties.

The draft regulations provide that the restrictions would apply, like the disqualifications, from 1 May 1990.

Caravan Sites Act 1968

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his replies to the hon. Member for Bradford, West of 19 February relating to the Caravan Sites Act 1968, if he will list the poor-performing local authorities to which he has written since issuing a directive to Hertfordshire county council.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 February 1990]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to Avon, Hereford and Worcester and Surrey county councils.

Gipsies

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what numbers of gipsies residing in, or resorting to (a) Hertfordshire and (b) Surrey have been recorded in each of the last 10 years; and what provision each authority has made, to date, over the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 February 1990]: According to local authority returns to the Department's biannual counts exercise (begun in 1980), the following numbers of gipsy caravans have been recorded in these two counties:

Hertfordshire has provided accommodation for 203 gipsy caravans on 148 pitches on nine local authority sites; of which 48 pitches on four sites have been provided since 1980.

Surrey has provided accommodation for 253 gipsy caravans on 204 pitches on 15 local authority sites; of which 100 pitches on eight sites have been provided since 1980.

The Department does not maintain records on private sites in these areas, the extent of which provision is revealed by the Department's biannual count returns.

House of Commons (Repairs)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the cash limit on minor repairs at the House of Commons in 1989-90 includes repairs at Norman Shaw, North and Norman Shaw, South.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 February 1990]: As I told the hon. Member in response to his question of 19 February (column 482) minor repairs to the Parliamentary Estate are charged to class XX, vote 18, which is cash limited. The Norman Shaw buildings form part of the Parliamentary Estate.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of the annual numbers of complaint referrals made to local authority executive officers by mobile home owners concerning (a) alleged criminal acts and (b) alleged harassment by site operators since the implementation of the Mobile Homes Act 1983.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the workings of the Mobile Homes Act 1983; and whether he is considering any revisions to the Act as a result of these submissions.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The Department has received various letters from hon. Members and the public about the operation of the 1983 Act, and is currently carrying out research into the mobile homes sector. We have no plans to amend the legislation.

Beach Pollution (Sussex)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the private notice question from the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 22 February, what steps he will take to ensure that no charge capping will be applied to any authority incurring extra costs of tackling recent serious pollution on Sussex beaches, if those costs lead to higher than planned community charge.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he will not hesitate to cap authorities which insist on spending excessively. It would not be right for me to speculate on how any capping scheme might operate if my right hon. Friend needed to use his capping powers next year.

Toxic Material (Labelling)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what safeguards there are to ensure containers of toxic material are properly marked so as to prevent the type of accident that happened at TNT Northampton on 16 February;

(2) what sanctions there are against consignees, hauliers and recipients of inadequately labelled toxic substances.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 26 February 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

Correct labelling is a requirement of the Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984. Those who breach the regulations are liable to prosecution and may be fined up to £2,000 by a magistrates court or an unlimited fine by a Crown court.

Written Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Power Stations, Calais

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there is any monitoring by Her Majesty's Government of nuclear emissions from power stations at Calais.

Mr. Trippier: No. Emission monitoring is undertaken by the power station operating authorities in the country concerned. Her Majesty's Government would be informed under international agreements of any release of radioactive material that could be of radiological significance for the United Kingdom. The national radiation monitoring network, Rimnet will detect any abnormal levels of radiation in the United Kingdom.

Radiation (Cornwall)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of properties surveyed by the National Radiological Protection Board in each Cornwall district is over the newly declared safety level; and whether the owners of those properties have been informed of the new safety advice.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The percentage of private and council houses surveyed by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) in each Cornwall district with radon concentrations above the new action level are as follows:

	Percentage
Caradon	27
Carrick	23
Kerrier	45
North Cornwall	34
Penwith	42
Restormel	27

The NRPB is writing to all householders whose survey revealed concentrations of between 200 and 400 bq m^{-3} to inform them of the change in the action level.

Watercourses (North West)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many watercourses in the North West water authority area are classified under (a) class 1b and (b) class 2 categories; and whether there are any plans to alter the classification procedure in the future.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 1985 river quality survey indicated that, of the 5,900 km of rivers and canals surveyed in the North West water authority area, 2,710 kms were in class 1a, 762 kms in class 1b, and 1,239 kms in class 2. The existing classification schemes for rivers, canals and estuaries are being reviewed in conjunction with the work of developing the system of statutory quality objectives provided for in the Water Act 1989, and proposals will be published in due course.

Public Land (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which sites in the Bolton area are included in the Goverment's register of under-used publicly owned land; and what is their individual acreage.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department's register has now been superseded for most purposes by individual public sector owners' registers which have been available to the public since 31 October 1989 under codes of practice issued last August. Copies of relevant extracts are available at district council offices

I have, however, arranged for a list of sites in the Bolton area on the Department's register as at 30 September 1989 to be placed in the Library.

Hazardous Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) of 8 December 1989, Official Report, column 423, if he will publish in the Official Report the information contained in his letter of reply of 5 December 1989.

Mr. Trippier: My letter of 5 December 1989 to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) contained the following information in reply to questions he had tabled on aspects of hazardous waste management.

I said that there were four incinerators licensed to deal commercially with special wastes in Britain. I had no detailed information on the number of large chemical incinerators in the European Community or elsewhere which treated special wastes. I was unable to provide the information the hon. Member sought on the design of the furnace doors of the incinerators.

Regarding incineration at sea, the disposal of wastes was licensed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. My Department did not keep records of the amount of special wastes incinerated in the North sea or in other European waters.

This Department had held information on the import of wastes for incineration only since October 1988 when the relevant provisions of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations came into force. Since then some 8,700 tonnes of imported special waste had been dealt with at the four commercially available incinerators.

Information on the amount of waste dealt with at the incinerator operated by ReChem International Ltd. at Ponteg, Pontypool was not held by this Department but by the local waste disposal authority, Torfaen borough council. The results of the PCB sampling in soils and herbage around the plant undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution were (figures in micrograms per kilogram):

PCBs in Herbage:
Range 3·0-19·7
Mean 8·4
Median 6·6

PCBs in Soil:
Range 9·0-19·0
Median 14·8

The latest figures (August 1989) indicated levels of PCB in the flue gas of the incinerator to be considerably less than 0·01 mg/cum. The (then) latest figures for Dioxin and Furans (in nanograms per cubic metre) were:

	Number
2, 3, 7, 8—tetrachlorodibenzofuran	0·050
Tetrachlorodibenzofurans (total)	0·120
2, 3, 7, 8—tetrachlorodibenzodioxin	<0·025
Tetrachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	<0·025
Pentachlorodibenzofurans (total)	<0·025
Pentachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	<0·025
Hexachlorodibenzofurans (total)	<0·025
Hexachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	<0·025
Heptachlorodibenzofurans (total)	<0·050
Heptachlorodibenzodioxins (total)	0·050
Octachlorodibenzofuran	<0·025
Octachlorodibenzodioxin	0·050

The emission figures for both PCBs and dioxins/furans compared very favourably with those published for similar incinerators in Europe.

No equipment was available to give instantaneous readings of PCB or dioxin in flue gas. However, continuous sampling was undertaken and samples of flue gas were analysed on a routine basis for PCB and on a more random basis for dioxin.

A number of possible processes were under investigation as alternative methods of incineration of PCBs. The most promising appeared to be those involving exchange of the chlorine atom or microbiological systems. Neither would be likely to prove effective for high concentrations of PCBs, for which high-temperature incineration was likely to remain the only satisfactory form of disposal.

From the start of commercial production of PCBs in 1929 to 1980 some 1,055,000 tonnes of PCBs had been produced worldwide, of which 66,800 tonnes were produced in the United Kingdom by Monsanto, Newport. Other major producing countries were the United States of America (648,000 tonnes), Japan (60,000 tonnes), Spain (25,000 tonnes) and (Italy (24,000 tonnes). During 1980-84, only France, West Germany, Italy and Spain within the Community continued to manufacture PCBs and after 1984 production continued only in France and Spain. This Department did not hold figures for PCB production after 1980.

The hon. Member for Carmarthen asked about the amount of special wastes which had been subjected to the Leigh environmental sealosafe solidification process. This Department does not hold information on that which is a matter for the waste disposal authority, Walsall metropolitan borough council. Finally, the hon. Member asked about the import of flyash through Swansea docks. That, again, is a matter for the local waste disposal authority, Swansea district council.

Empty Council Houses, Stockport

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of empty council houses in Stockport at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The latest available information was provided by Stockport metropolitan borough council in its April 1989 housing investment programme return (HIP1), a copy of which is in the Library.

Jet-Skiing

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to give local authorities powers to control jet-skiing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Local authorities already have powers to make byelaws regulating the use of jet ski's under the various Public Health Acts and the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976. Harbour authorities and the National Rivers Authority are similarly empowered.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications to dispose of radioactive waste have been refused on the ground that the volumes in question exceeded the quota set for applications by British Nuclear Fuels Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No application received by this Department has been refused on these grounds.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the locations of those sites where non-nuclear radioactive waste is disposed of, stating the percentage of the total non-nuclear radioactive waste generated which is disposed of at each site.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 13 February 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) at column 179.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the volume of non-nuclear radioactive waste held in storage in (a) 1984, (b) 1985, (c) 1986, (d) 1987, (e) 1988 and (f) 1989; what projections exist for levels over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. Low-level radioactive waste arising from outside the nuclear industry is not normally stored, but is disposed of either locally or to the BNFL-operated disposal facility at Drigg (sometimes via the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) establishment at Harwell) under the terms of authorisations issued by HMIP under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Where appropriate, such authorisations may permit waste to be accumulated on site either to allow the radioactivity to decay before disposal or for other operational reasons. Such accumulations and disposals are subject to strict conditions and activity limits and, although information on volumes of waste etc. is not recorded centrally, operators are required to maintain proper and detailed records. These records, as well as the premises or sites concerned, are subject to scrutiny by HMIP inspectors. Where a suitable disposal route is not available, the radioactive waste may be stored at the UKAEA establishment at Harwell.

Apart from these local disposals and accumulations, the latest available information on stocks and future arisings of raw radioactive waste from minor waste producers is contained in the 1987 "United Kingdom Radioactive Waste Inventory," a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure public consultation in the site selection process for a single national repository for radioactive waste.

Mr. Trippier: UK Nirex Ltd's consultation document "The Way Forward" invited comments on Nirex's proposals for a deep repository for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste. Nirex took account of these comments before recommending that site investigations should be made at Sellafield and Dounreay. The Government have made it clear that a public inquiry will be held into Nirex's proposals for a substantive development.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what volume of non-nuclear radioactive waste was disposed of at landfill sites under the Radioactive Substances (Phosphatic Substances, Rare Earths, etc.) Exemption Order 1962 for each of the last five years; what projections exist for volumes to be disposed in this manner over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The terms of the exemption order do not require such information to be kept either by the disposer or this Department.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the volume of non-nuclear radioactive waste accepted at Drigg for each of the last five years; and what percentage came from (a) hospitals, (b) research and development operations, (c) land decontamination and (d) other sources; what are the expected global levels in volume for the next three years, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Information on the volumes of wastes disposed of at the Drigg disposal site can be found in BNFL's annual reports entitled "Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment", copies of which are in the Library of the House. A more detailed breakdown of the wastes originating from non-nuclear industries is not available.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the volume of non-nuclear radioactive waste disposed of otherwise than at Drigg for each of the last five years; and what percentage came from (a) hospitals, (b) research and development operations, (c) land decontamination and (d) other sources; what are the expected global levels in volume for the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This Department does not maintain a central record of the volumes of low-level radioactive waste disposed of through local disposal routes or of specific disposal locations. However, a condition of authorisation requires waste producers to keep proper and detailed records relating to their disposals. These records, as well as the premises or sites concerned, are subject to scrutiny by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution inspectors and in cases where a disposal requires special precautions to be taken by a local or public authority, both Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution and local waste disposal authorities are notified by the operator of the nature and destination of individual consignments of radioactive waste due for disposal.

Water Leakage

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria the Director General of Water Services will employ to determine if the level of leakage from water distribution systems is excessive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Water undertakers are under a duty to maintain an efficient and economical system of water supply. It is for undertakers to determine what leakage control measures to take, based on their own cost-benefit analysis.

How the director general might decide to review this aspect of undertakers' performance is a matter for him.

Sellafield

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has in regard to the statement made to the European Parliament on 14 February by the President of the European Council, on behalf of the Council of Ministers, concerning Sellafield.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has noted the verbatim report of the proceedings of the European Parliament on 14 February.

North Sea Conference

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what participation his Department will have in the North sea conference in March.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will visit the Hague on 7 and 8 March to represent the United Kingdom at the third North sea conference.

Action for Cities

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the first two years of the Government's action for cities initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is announcing today, two years after she launched the Government's action for cities initiative, that spending on the programmes which come within the initiative is to increase by £0·5 billion, from just under £3·5 billion this year to around £4 billion in 1990-91.

Also today, I am publishing a new report entitled "People in Cities" which highlights ways in which inner city residents are benefiting from the new opportunities being created in their areas and which emphasises the importance of the partnership and growing co-operation between business, central Government, local authorities, voluntary organisations and local people.

Other announcements being made include the approval of funding for a new spine road to open up the Bristol development corporation area, the setting up of two inner city task forces in the Wirral and in Derby and a large number of task force and city grant project approvals.

Today, the Prime Minister and all nine members of the special ministerial team appointed in December to spearhead action in the inner cities are visiting projects and reviewing progress in cities up and down the country.

I have sent copies of the "People in Cities" report to hon Members with constituencies in the inner city target areas. Copies of the report will also be placed in the Library and are available in the Vote Office.

Housing, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 8 February, Official Report, column 758, when he expects to announce a decision on applications submitted last October and November for city grant and estate action grant in respect of new homes to rent and for sale on the Lower Grange estate.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 February 1990]: I am pleased to be able to tell the hon. Member that I announced approval of a £5·38 million estate action contribution towards an £11·5 million scheme to improve over 300 local authority owned houses on the Lower Grange estate on 22 February and that my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities has today announced approval of a £2·65 million city grant for the construction of 280 new homes and the refurbishment of 28 flats for sale.

Parliamentary Rifle Range

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who paid the cost of the newly completed refurbishment of the Palace of Westminster rifle range.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The cost of safety work carried out last year to allow members of the staff sports and social club to continue to use the range was borne on the parliamentary works subhead (class XX, vote 18).

Local Government Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his estimate of what the rates levied in each local authority for 1990-91 would have been had rates continued will be based on a proportion of grant-related expenditure into 1990-91 or on standard spending assessments; and if he will publish a table estimating for each local authority the sums under each system, the gains and losses and the effect of these on the average rate bill and the poll tax demand.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 26 February 1990]: It is our intention when community charges are finally set to say what the increase would have been in domestic rates had that taken the place of the community charge.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of acres covered by each enterprise zone within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The area of each enterprise zone in the United Kingdom is given in the table.

Enterprise zone	Acres
1. Belfast	510
2. Clydebank	570
3. Corby	280
4. Delyn	293

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Speech Therapists

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the numbers of speech therapists employed by each local education authority in England (a) in total, (b) by category of employment and (c) as a figure per 100,000 of the population of the appropriate local education authority area, listing the local education authority areas in the last case in descending order;

(2) if he will take steps to increase the number of speech therapists who are employed within the education service.

Mr. Alan Howarth: District health authorities are responsible for the provision of speech therapy services to local education authorities. It is for local education authorities to decide whether in addition they make available any provision from their own resources. Information about the number of speech therapists employed by local education authorities is not available centrally.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make it his policy that any agreement under section 105 of the Education Reform Act 1988 which has yet to be finalised will contain a provision specifying that, in the event of the agreement being terminated, for any reason, the city technology college or city college for the technology of the arts shall be treated as discontinued for the purposes of the agreement and section 105(5) of the Education Reform Act 1988; and if he will take steps to have such a provision included, by way of amendment, in any agreements already in effect;

(2) if he will take steps to prevent a city technology college or a city college for the technology of the arts from being converted into a fee-paying school other than by his consent, without there being a requirement that any capital funding previously provided under section 105 of the Education Reform Act should be repaid.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 105 of the Education Reform Act 1988 provides for my right hon. Friend to enter into an agreement with any person to establish and maintain a city technology college (CTC) or city college for the technology of the arts (CCTA). A copy of the model agreement for this purpose has been placed in the House of Commons Library. If this agreement were terminated, for example, because the college charged fees, the provisions of section 105(5) of the Education Reform Act would come into effect.

Storms

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking in view of the recent storms to ensure the safety of school pupils.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our first concern has been to ensure that everything possible is done to avoid more deaths and injuries to pupils such as those which occurred in the recent storms. The standing instructions which local authorities issue to schools about handling emergencies, combined with the good sense of head teachers and their colleagues, played their part in helping to minimise casualties. But my Department is writing to LEAs asking them to review their instructions in the light of recent experience.

It is the responsibility of local education authorities to ensure the safety of their school buildings, but my Department has been working with the Department of the Environment and the Building Research Establishment to establish the causes of the roof failure at the Grange junior school in Swindon. As a result of that investigation the Department is today issuing guidance to all local education authorities, grant-maintained schools, independent schools, non-maintained special schools, CTCs and the PCFC and UFC about the characteristics of buildings with lightweight roofs which may be at risk, inspection procedures and possible remedial measures. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

The Government have already announced that the Bellwin scheme will operate with respect to damage sustained in the storms of a month ago. This assists LEAs following an emergency with the costs of immediate repairs to school buildings to ensure their continued operation and the safety of their occupants. In parallel, my Department has written to diocesan authorities and other promoters of voluntary aided schools setting out a simplified claims procedure for repairs required after storm damage and inviting bids.

Curriculum Returns

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take in respect of the requirements on schools to complete the annual curriculum returns.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1990, c. 167]: My proposals were published today. They simplify those provisions of the Education (Schools Curriculum and Related Information) Regulations 1989 which cover the annual curriculum return. Copies of the proposals have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Child Abduction

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what research his Department has carried out, or is undertaking, regarding the problem of children abducted by one of their parents; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There is no formal research programme, but the Lord Chancellor's Department is fully aware of the practical and legal difficulties that arise from the problem, and is able constantly to monitor developments through its role as a central authority under the Hague convention on the civil aspects of international child abduction and the European convention on the recognition and enforcement of decisions concerning custody of children and on restoration of custody of children. This brings the Department into contact with large numbers of victims of the problem. It also involves the Department in international discussions, the next of which will occur next week, which promote increased understanding of the problem.

THE ARTS

Export Licences

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what list he maintains of works of art for which Her Majesty's Government would not consider granting an export licence.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 12 February 1990]: Lists have been suggested from time to time, but were never taken forward and form no part of the export procedures.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will draw up a list of works of art for which Her Majesty's Government would not consider granting an export licence which includes (a) sculptures, (b) drawings, (c) manuscripts and (d) contemporary works of art.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 12 February 1990]: I have no plans to draw up lists of works of art for which Her Majesty's Government would not consider granting an export licence.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Rented Sector

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1978 the weight of private sector and public sector rents in the cost of living index; whether those weights include rates when paid by the landlord; and what will be the effect of the index if the landlord does not reduce the rent to take account of the abolition of rates.

Mr. Lilley: The weight for local authority and private rents in the retail prices index, in parts per thousand, has been as follows:

	Weight
1978	32
1979	32
1980	28

	Weight
1981	30
1982	36
1983	36
1984	35
1985	31
1986	29
1987	34
1988	33
1989	32

The weight is adjusted to exclude domestic rates paid through landlords. The index will continue to reflect actual rents charged.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1978 the weight of (a) rates and (b) water and sewerage rates in the retail prices index together with the implied domestic rate contribution to local government expenditure.

Mr. Lilley: The weights in the retail prices index, to the nearest part per thousand, have been as follows:

	Domestic rate	Water and sewerage charges
1978	32	2
1979	28	6
1980	26	5
1981	28	8
1982	33	8
1983	35	9
1984	37	9
1985	36	9
1986	33	8
1987	42	7
1988	43	7
1989	42	7

The weights relate only to the households covered by the index and do not provide estimates of aggregate contributions to local government expenditure.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing, for each of the years since 1973-74, the public sector borrowing requirement or the PSDR expressed in 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Ryder: Figures for the public sector borrowing requirement for 1973-74 onwards are given in the table expressed in cash terms and in 1989-90 prices.

Public sector borrowing requirement (PSBR)[1]

	Cash £ billion	1989-90 prices[2]
1973-74	4·3	21·9
1974-75	8·0	33·8
1975-76	10·3	34·4
1976-77	8·3	24·5
1977-78	5·4	14·0
1978-79	9·2	21·6
1979-80	9·9	20·0
1980-81	12·5	21·3
1981-82	8·6	13·4
1982-83	8·9	12·9
1983-84	9·7	13·4
1984-85	10·1	14·3
1985-86	5·6	7·1
1986-87	3·6	4·3
1987-88	−3·4	−3·9
1988-89	−14·5	−15·5

Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of those schemes that meet the general conditions of approval of occupational and personal pensions by the Inland Revenue, are such as to permit payment of an amount related to a person's accrued or prospective retirement pension under the scheme, such payments to be made throughout any period in which that person is entitled to the payment of an invalidity pension from the national insurance fund and to cease at the end of that period.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will undertake to instruct the Inland Revenue to establish criteria for the approval of occupational and personal pensions schemes that provide payments of an amount related to a person's accrued or prospective retirement pension under the scheme, such payments to be made throughout any period in which that person is entitled to the payment of an invalidity pension from the national insurance fund and to cease at the end of that period.

Mr. Major: As I explained in reply to a question from the right hon. Member on 13 February, Official Report, column 128, the main purpose of occupational pension schemes is to provide a pension in retirement. Occupational pension schemes are voluntary arrangements, and, subject to the conditions laid down to obtain exempt status, individual employers are free to determine the range of benefits that they wish to provide. It would not be appropriate to require them to provide benefits of a particular type or amount.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the site or sites for the proposed relocation of Customs and Excise headquarters work from London and the south-east have yet been decided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Having fully considered the work of an internal review team on potential relocation sites, together with the views expressed by staff and the departmental trade union side in a consultation exercise, the Paymaster General and the Board of Customs and Excise have decided that Liverpool and the Manchester area should receive the relocated posts. A synopsis report of the work of the internal review team will be placed in the Library.

Accordingly, over the next three to four years, some 1,250 VAT posts will be transferred to Liverpool from Southend whilst the Manchester area will receive about 430 posts from London. In addition, I expect these changes to produce significant benefits both in terms of costs and staffing. Accommodation costs in particular will be reduced, and the opportunities for recruitment and retention of staff outside the problem area of the south-east will be substantially improved. At least 1,300 of these jobs will be available for filling locally which will give a boost to the economy of the north-west of England in accordance with the regional and inner city policies of Her Majesty's Government.

In addition, as part of the phased relocation exercise, a further 250 or so existing posts will be transferred from London to Southend to offset the 1,250 posts being moved to Liverpool.

Soviet Rouble

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, when he last met his Soviet counterpart, he discussed the status of the rouble; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 27 February 1990] Since becoming Chancellor of the Exchequer, my right hon. Friend has not met his Soviet counterpart. A new rouble exchange rate for tourism and business travel was announced in October 1989.

Taxation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average individual cumulative gain (a) in current prices, (b) in 1988-89 prices and (c) in 1990-91 prices to those earning £5,000, £10,000, £15,000, £20,000, £25,000, £30,000, £40,000, £50,000, £60,000 and £70,000 as a result of changes in taxation and national insurance since 1979.

Mr. Lilley [pursuant to his answer of 20 February 1990, Official Report, column 680]: I regret that one of the two tables relating to my answer was omitted. This is as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the eight inspectors mentioned in his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 27 November 1989, Official Report, column 92;

(2) if he will name the accountancy firms mentioned in his reply of 27 November 1989, Official Report, column 92; and how much money has been paid to them by his Department.

Mr. Forth: Details are as follows:

Name of Inspector	Firm of Accountants
Mr. M. G. Lickiss	Grant Thornton
Mr. A. Ridler	Pannell Kerr Foster
Mr. H. G. C. Aldous	Robson Rhodes
Mr. D. L. Spence	Grant Thornton
Mr. M. D. Boohan	Grant Thornton
Mr. J. R. Venning	Robson Rhodes
Mr. J. C. Morton	Price Waterhouse
Mr. A. Sutton	Price Waterhouse

The total of moneys paid by my Department to the accountancy firms mentioned could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to legislate to ensure that the accountancy firms who act as auditors should derive more than 50 per cent. of their income from audits.

Mr. Forth: No.

Legal Advisers

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Dover of 15 February, Official Report, column 391, if he will name the legal advisers referred to; and if he will publish the text of their letter giving the assurances that certain activities had ceased.

Mr. Ridley: No. It is not my practice to reveal the contents of confidential correspondence.

Companies Act 1989

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further plans he has to commence the provisions of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: On Monday I signed two orders; one of which commences most of part I (company accounts) of the Act, and certain provisions of part V (appointment and removal of auditors, and written and elective resolutions, amongst others); the other commences most of part VIII (amendments of the Financial Services Act 1986) and transfers functions under the Financial Services Act to the Securities and Investments Board. The dates of commencement are 1 April 1990 for the relevant provisions of parts I and V, and 15 March 1990 for part VIII. The orders provide for various transitional and saving provisions; the provisions in part I relating to preparation and delivery of company accounts will apply only to accounts for financial years starting after 22 December 1989. I have placed copies of the orders in the Library.

Task Forces

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to make any changes to the location of inner city task forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government's inner city task forces have proved highly successful in creating jobs, encouraging training opportunities and stimulating enterprise in the country's most deprived areas. Today, I have published a report, "Task Forces In Action" which shows how task forces are helping to achieve the Government's aim of regenerating the inner cities. Since they began, task forces have committed some £49 million to over 1,700 projects to help the people of inner city communities.

The task force budget for 1990-91 will be £23·2 million, representing an increase of approximately 21 per cent. on this year's budget. I have today given approval for some 59 further task force projects involving funding of over £2 million.

Task forces have always been part of a rolling programme, tackling difficult areas and then moving on. I am delighted to be able to announce that I have decided to establish two new task forces: one in the Wirral, one in Derby.

I am also extending the existing task force, in north Kensington, into a part of the neighbouring borough of Hammersmith and Fulham. These task forces will work closely with the business community and with the local authority to improve the job and training opportunities for those in their area. They will all be starting their work as soon as possible.

The two new task forces, like the existing ones, are not intended to be permanent. One of their aims is to foster the development of local organisations which can capitalise on the task force work when the task forces themselves leave.

The task forces in Doncaster and Rochdale have now made significant progress in meeting those objectives, and I have consequently decided that they should close in the autumn. In the meantime, they will continue to build up the capacity of local bodies to take over their work in the future.

A number of important new projects by these task forces are among those I have announced today, and they will continue to welcome new proposals until the end of April 1990. Funding will also continue to be provided for a limited number of projects after the closure of the task forces.

I can also add that, over recent months, I have made 44 offers of regional selective assistance totalling over £17 million, which could create or safeguard over 3,200 jobs —most of them new ones—in inner city areas.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that any phasing-out of the multifibre arrangement is based on the principle of equal opportunities for all the producing nations.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 23 February 1990]: The EC is committed in GATT to phasing out the MFA after its expiry next year if a satisfactory overall deal can be reached which benefits the EC as a whole. The United Kingdom has made it clear that the MFA cannot be looked at in isolation and that among other things there must must be a greater commitment to market opening especially from newly industrialised economies. We are convinced that equal opportunities for all trading partners can best be achieved by the development of a more open, viable and durable trading system, pursued multilaterally under the aegis of GATT.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the cost to his Department of answering questions tabled by the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) since 1 December 1989.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) has tabled in excess of 160 questions to my Department since 1 December 1989. Detailed information about the cost of providing each answer is not recorded, but the total cost to the Department has probably been between £10,000 and £20,000.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the United Kingdom permanent representative in Brussels to seek clarification as to whether the guidance given by Sir Leon Brittan in his letter of 15 February to the hon. Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) represents the considered view of the European Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Sir Leon Brittan makes clear in his letter of 15 February that the views expressed do not represent the definitive position of the Commission. That could only be given on the basis of a specific proposal put forward by Her Majesty's Government. The letter did, however, provide a sufficiently clear indication of the Commission's thinking alongside which we could judge our own consideration of the merits or otherwise of the proposals concerned. In particular, Sir Leon Brittan has made clear that were we to notify now proposals predicated on the resumption of shipbuilding at NESL, that would cause the Commission to reconsider all aspects of the December 1988 notification, including its decision on the enterprise zone. The Government have always made it clear that that is not something we would be prepared to risk.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library any notes from officials arising from discussions between officials of his Department and officials of the European Commission concerning the future of NESL between 22 February 1988 and the present time.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: No. Such notes are confidential. Contacts with the Commission on this matter were explained in a note placed in the Library on 24 July 1989 by my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton); in a letter I wrote to the Chairman of the Trade and Industry Select Committee on 10 October 1989; in the evidence I gave to the Trade and Industry Committee on 18 October 1989; and in the statement I made to the House on 20 February 1990.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the specific reasons why the bid by Mr. Nat Puri to acquire NESL in 1988 was rejected.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: I refer to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) on 14 November 1988, Official Report, column 748.

Wood

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the United Kingdom's trade deficit for wood and wood products during 1989; and what proportion of it was constituted by hardwood.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The crude trade deficit in wood and wood products was £5,898 million in 1989; the proportion represented by hardwood was 5 per cent.

Moss Side and Hulme Task Force

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of spending undertaken by the Moss Side and Hulme task force since its inception including projects assisted, number of jobs created or estimated for each project, and cost per job.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Since its launch in 1986, the Moss Side and Hulme task force has supported 96 projects with a total committed spend of around £3·5 million. The projects have also drawn in some £5 million other public spending and around £1 million from the private sector. Total jobs achieved to date are 524, together with 475 businesses supported and 1,942 training places provided. A cost per job figure is not available, mainly because project funding may be directed towards several objectives of which job provision is only one. I will write to the hon. Member with details of projects involving job creation.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if participation in employment training is a necessary condition for assistance by the Moss Side and Hulme task force; and if any reference is made to such conditions to applicants.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: No. However, projects that the task force considers for assistance must demonstrate clearly that they will offer economic benefits by way of employment or training opportunities for task force residents, and/or encouragement for local enterprise. Employment training is an obvious choice for projects involving training and is used wherever possible. All applicants are made aware of this.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Society Lecture

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will seek to obtain a transcript of the lecture on the environment by Dr. Martin Holdgate given at the Royal Society on 26 February for her Office's library.

The Prime Minister: I have seen the transcript of the lecture by Dr. Holdgate and I understand my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be placing a copy in the House Library.

Community Charge

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister whether, in respect of England, any one Minister has the duty of recording, both individually and cumulatively, the additional costs falling to be paid by community charge resulting from obligations laid on local authorities pursuant to new Acts of Parliament, statutory instruments and departmental circulars.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment monitors the costs of all central Government initiatives which are likely to have resource implications for local authorities. In assessing the level of total standard spending appropriate for a particular year, we take full account of new burdens on local authorities and the scope for savings.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Treaty of Rome (Revision)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what comment or dissent was offered by the United Kingdom to the decision of the European Community General Affairs Council of 5 February to ask Ireland formally to request the revision of the treaty of Rome and table framed treaty revision proposals; whether there will be an intergovernmental conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The President of the European Council at Strasbourg noted that the necessary majority existed to convene a conference charged with preparing an amendment of the treaty with a view to the final stages of EMU. The Foreign Affairs Council on 5 February considered the procedural technicalities required to give effect to the relevant conclusions of the Strasbourg European Council, in particular the requirement to obtain an opinion from the European Parliament.

We have made clear that, though we believe the convening of the intergovernmental conference was premature, we will nevertheless participate in it.

Agenda

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there has been any discussion between his Department and the Angolan Government concerning the latest outbreak of hostilities between the MPLA and UNITA; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We have expressed our concern at the recent escalation in the fighting in Angola both to the Angolan Government and representatives of UNITA and have called on them to agree to an early ceasefire and negotiations for a political settlement. And on 19 February we joined with our European partners in issuing a statement calling for an end to the fighting and a ceasefire. A copy of the statement has been placed in the Library of the House.

Pamyat Group

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any information on the steps taken by the Soviet Government to control those activities of the Russian nationalist group Pamyat which are a threat to human rights.

Mr. Maude: There are encouraging signs that the Soviet authorities are prepared to take action when non-governmental organisations such as Pamyat are in breach of the law. On 15 February the Moscow city procuracy opened criminal proceedings against Pamyat under article 1 section 74 of the Russian criminal code which covers "deliberate actions aimed at causing national or racial emnity or discord".
On 21 February the Soviet Ministry of the Interior announced that it was investigating an incident at the central house of writers at which Pamyat allegedly broke up a meeting of reformists.

Anti-Semitism

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Soviet Government regarding recent anti-Jewish publicity; and whether he will seek an assurance that the Soviet authorities will discourage such outbursts.

Mr. Maude: We have made numerous representations to the Soviet authorities about the plight of Soviet Jewry. Incitement to racial hatred is illegal in the Soviet Union. It is encouraging that the extremist organisation Pamyat is currently being prosecuted under this law.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to meet representatives of the Government of Namibia after 21 March to ascertain if Namibia will sign and ratify the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Maude: It is our policy to take every suitable opportunity to raise non-proliferation issues, and the non-proliferation treaty in particular, with states that are not parties to the treaty.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the meeting of the European Foreign Affairs Council in Dublin on 20 February, the matter of encouragement to South Africa to join the nuclear non-proliferation treaty was discussed.

Mr. Maude: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report, "New Concepts In Nuclear Arms Control: Verified Cutoff And Verified Disposal", by Warren H. Donnelly and Lawrence Scheinman, published in February by the Programme For Promoting Nuclear Non-Proliferation.

Mr. Maude: A copy of the report "New Concepts in Nuclear Arms Control: Verified Cut off and Verified Disposal" by Warren H. Donnelly and Lawrence Scheinman, published by the Programme for Promoting Nuclear Non-Proliferation, will be added to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office library in due course.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions the working group on nuclear non-proliferation of the European Political Co-operation Committee met in each year since 1985; which matters were discussed in each meeting; and how Her Majesty's Government were represented.

Mr. Maude: The working group on non-proliferation in European political co-operation has met four times in each year since 1985 to discuss matters relevant to the nuclear non-proliferation regime. We are represented by appropriate officials.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), 15 December 1989, Official Report, column 839, what was the outcome of the meeting proposed with the European proliferation information centre, to which he makes reference.

Mr. Maude: A meeting with the European proliferation information centre has not taken place, but exchanges of correspondence with the centre about funding continue.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which organisations have received from his Department a grant in aid in 1989-90 to assist in the fostering of greater public understanding of nuclear non-proliferation issues and the role of the fourth review conference of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Maude: No organisation has received a grant in aid in the period 1989-90 for the purpose described in the question. Some funding has been made available to the programme for promoting nuclear non-proliferation (PPNN) for specific purposes.

Bananas

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what benefits are expected to accrue to African, Caribbean and Pacific and European Community banana producing countries as a result of the creation of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The European Commission has not yet come forward with a proposal for the arrangements to apply for bananas post-1992, and it is not possible at present to say what impact the creation of the single European market will have on African, Caribbean and Pacific and European Community banana-producing countries. The Community has made it clear, however, that to safeguard the interests of these countries will be a major aim of any new arrangements.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for the creation of a common import regime for bananas in the European Community in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply:

The European Commission is currently considering the possible arrangements for bananas post-1992 but has not yet come forward with proposals. We have encouraged the Commission and other member states to ensure that any new arrangements fulfil our commitments to our Commonwealth Caribbean suppliers and Lomé partners, and that they take account of consumer interests and of the competition and efficiency objectives of the single market initiative.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of public funds have been made available since 1987 by (a) the Department of Health and Social Services and (b) the area health and social service boards to (i) the Northern Ireland Council on Alcohol, (ii) the Council on Alcohol Related Problems and (iii) the Northlands centre in Londonderry.

Road Closure, Castlereagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates he took the decision to close Alanbrooke road, Castlereagh under the powers granted by the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978.

Mr. Cope: On 1 November 1989, I signed an order under section 19(2) of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 on behalf of the Secretary of State, authorising Short Bros plc to close off Alanbrooke road for security reasons.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contributions his Department will make to the NATO exercises due to be held in Norway during March.

Mr. Cope: None.

Education (Maintenance Allowances)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claimants there have been for educational maintenance allowances in each education and library board in Northern Ireland for each of the last three years for which figures are available; and how many awards were made for each of these three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects Lord Colville's report on the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts of 1978 and 1987 to be available.

Mr. Cope: Copies have now been placed in the Library and are available in the Vote Office.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the salmon rivers in the Foyle system and show in a table the number of salmon redds counted in each of those rivers in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for Northern Ireland for each of the last five years the number of grilse and salmon taken in each river estuary by nets, the net catch by driftnetting, by coastal nets and by anglers and the sums raised in licence fees for nets and for fishing licences which allow salmon and grilse.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The information requested is listed in the table. The information relates to both the fisheries conservancy board and the Foyle fisheries commission areas and is based on returns of commercial catches of salmon and grilse made to the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland and the Foyle fisheries commission and on returns of anglers' catches of salmon and grilse made to the Foyle fisheries commission.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any research has been carried out in Northern Ireland into the angling effort in hours for salmon or grilse caught; and what comparable information he has for (a) the Irish Republic, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) England.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Research has not been carried out in Northern Ireland into the angling effort in hours for salmon and grilse caught. I am not aware of comparable information for the Irish Republic, Scotland, Wales and England.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the number of salmon spawning in each of the salmon rivers of Northern Ireland is sufficient to maintain stocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Though there is concern about the reduced numbers of adult salmon returning to Northern Ireland salmon rivers, there are sufficient numbers to maintain self-sustaining populations in these rivers.

Fisheries Research

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the population of pallen remaining in Lough Neagh; what comparable figures or estimate he has for earlier years; whether any steps are being taken to preserve this fish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: No recent study has been carried out on the population levels of pollen in Lough Neagh. Neither is any statistical information on population figures available for earlier years.

The Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland is the body statutorily charged with the conservation and protection of salmon and inland fisheries including pollen in Northern Ireland.

Fishermen taking pollen are required to hold a licence for a single wall set net or trammel net for the taking of freshwater fish and under byelaw 37 of the Fisheries Consolidated and Amendment Byelaws (NI) 1989 can only do so with nets of a mesh size between 25mm and 32mm. This prevents the killing of immature pollen and large spawning adult pollen.

In addition to this, the close season for pollen fishing is 31 October to 31 January and is designed to protect spawning stock.

Harbours

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the minimum depth of water at the river Bann, Barmouth at low tide; and what is the depth at Coleraine harbour at similar tide point.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The minimum depth at low tide at the Barmouth is 4m and at Coleraine harbour is 4·3m.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the minimum depth of water in the shipping channel to Belfast port at low tide.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: It varies from 5·5m to 9·1m.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the minimum depth of water in the shipping channel to Londonderry port at low tide.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: It is 6·9m.

Sea Trout

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the number of sea trout spawning in each of the rivers they frequent in Northern Ireland is sufficient to maintain stocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Yes.

Supplies and Services Boycott

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 21 February concerning firms which will not carry out work for the security forces or provide material for firms which carry out work for the security forces, if he will indicate the reasons why he will not publish the information requested.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 February 1990]: I do not believe that it would be in the interests of security in Northern Ireland to acquire and publish the information.

WALES

Water Supplies

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the total Government expenditure has been for water supplies in Wales in the last, and current, financial years; and what these sums represent per head of population.

Mr. Grist: In 1988-89 expenditure by the Department on water supplies and sewerage services on grants under the Rural Water Supplies and Sewerage Acts 1944 to 1971 and the Industrial Development Act 1982 amounted to £1·36 million. The estimated expenditure for the current year is £1·5 million. These sums represent 47p and 52p per head of population.

Craft Initiative

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the itemised costs of designing, producing and distributing the craft initiative brochure launched in May 1988.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The total cost of designing, producing and distributing the craft initiative brochure was £14,273·80. Of this, main elements comprised design work costs at £5,395·80, and production costs at £7,935·00.

Beekeeping

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many beekeepers there are in each county in Wales; what change there has been in the number of beekeepers during the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

County	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	[1]1989

Bethesda-Arfor Bypass

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to build the Bethesda-Arfor bypass during the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: As announced in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s", start of construction of the A5 Bethesda by-pass is planned in the period April 1991 to March 1994, subject to detailed investigation and completion of design and statutory procedures.

Llandudno General Hospital

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that full emergency services will be retained at the Llandudno general hospital.

Mr. Grist: The provision of services at Llandudno general hospital is a matter for Gwynedd health authority in the first instance. Any proposal to implement a permanent substantial variation in service would require full public consultation, including the opportunity for interested parties to appeal to my right hon. Friend.

Community Centres

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will consider increasing the £100,000 ceiling on grants for the building of community centres.

Mr. Grist: The possibility of raising the Welsh Office grant ceiling for the capital grants to voluntary youth services, village halls and community centres programme is being considered in consultation with the local education authorities.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of environmental health officers in each of the named districts in Wales in 1974, 1979, 1984 and 1989.

Mr. Grist: The number of local authority non-manual staff employed in environmental health in Wales for 1979, 1984 and 1989 is given in the table. Figures are not available for 1974. It is not possible to identify separately the number of environmental health officers included in each figure in the table. Information by authority is not available centrally.

Districts	762	787	862
Counties	17	14	11
Total	779	801	873

[1] Full-time equivalents as at September for each year.
[2] Figures for September 1989 are provisional.

Conwy Tunnel

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the original estimated cost of construction of the Conwy tunnel for the A55 road; what is the latest estimated cost for the completion of this work; what were the outstanding payments awaiting to be made by the Welsh Office to the contractors at the end of last January; and whether any contract condition requires interest to be paid on outstanding debts by the Welsh Office.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In September 1986, the original contract price for construction of the Conwy tunnel was £102 million, which is subject to cost price inflation. At that time, the estimated full cost of the scheme, including land, advance works, design and supervision, was £158·4 million, compared with £164·3 million shown in "Roads in Wales: 1989". Payments are made promptly when due. Matters relating to claims are confidential between the parties to the contract.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has as to the likely effects of introducing a tax based on capital values and incomes on the people of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no such estimate, but I hope that those who propose such taxes will tell the people of Wales the extent of the tax burdens that will be placed upon them.

Welsh Office Publications

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last circulated Welsh hon. Members with details of Welsh Office publications; and for what reason the monthly notification system has ceased.

Mr. Peter Walker: Owing to a technical fault it has been necessary to collect these details manually. The fault has now been corrected and an updated list circulated. The list for February will be issued in the next few days, and at the end of each month thereafter.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many kidney transplants have been performed at the Cardiff royal infirmary so far in the current year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many kidney transplants were performed at the Cardiff royal infirmary in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: A total of 66 transplants were carried out at Cardiff royal infirmary in 1989 and three so far this year.

Following completion of a Medical Research Council funded study of factors influencing the availability of donor organs for transplantation, health authorities in Wales have been asked to introduce an audit of deaths in intensive care units and to ensure that there are in place written procedures for the identification of donors and for the action needed to produce a successful donation.

In the light of recent consultation with health authorities on the report of the evaluation of renal services in Wales, Welsh Office officials will be considering with the managing health authority how the renal transplant programme may be further supported.

Leukaemia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will publish in the Official Report known figures for the incidence of leukaemia in areas surrounding nuclear power stations in Wales in the years 1979 to 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information in the form requested is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman shortly.

Water Poilution

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the reduction of pollution in Lake Trawsfynydd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The authorisation for the disposal of waste to the lake is under review.

Cancer Unit, North Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning a new cancer unit in North Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 7 February 1990 at column 661.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make extra money available to local authorities in Wales to enable them to build houses to rent to take the place of those sold under the right-to-buy legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has already announced a 15 per cent. increase in level of resources available for local authorities to spend on housing next year. It is for the authorities to determine how best to use these resources, taking account of local needs and seeking to achieve value for money, particularly in partnership with other housing providers.

Welsh Language

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce proposals for exemptions from Welsh in the national curriculum.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am publishing today for consultation in accordance with section 21(2) of the Education Reform Act proposals for exemptions from Welsh in a limited range of circumstances. The consultation document is being sent to the Curriculum Council for Wales, local education authorities, a wide range of organisations representing educational interests in Wales and, for information, to all schools. Copies have also been placed in the Vote Office and in the Library of the House.

Welsh Development Agency

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total budget of the Welsh Development Agency in 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what proportion of this was allocated to the North Wales office.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 19 February 1990]: The information is as follows:

The total budget of the Welsh Development Agency was £113 million in 1988-89 and £130·4 million in 1989-90. Land reclamation, environmental improvement, urban renewal and the factory building programmes are controlled and financed centrally by the Welsh Development Agency. No accurate breakdown of expenditure on these activities is available on a regional office basis.

Programmes administered by the regional offices include property management, business development unit courses, advertising and regional promotions, investment, rural conversion grants, DRIVE—the development of rural initiative, venture and enterprise—and administration costs. Details of expenditure by regional office are set out in the table:

	£ million	£ million	per cent.
1988-89	13·8	3·2	(23)
[2]1989-90	11·1	3·0	(27)

[1] North Wales is served by 2 of the WDA's 6 regional offices, sited at Bangor (covering North Wales West) and Wrexham (covering North Wales East).
[2] Latest forecast expenditure for 1989-90.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurses have appealed successfully on regrading; how many nurses await the settlement of their grading appeals; how many appeals on regrading have been heard; when he estimates the completion of hearings for nurses appeals in regrading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 20 February 1990]: I understand that approximately 7,000 appeals have been lodged with employing authorities at local level in Wales. On the basis of the latest information available to the Department from district health authorities, 1,503 of those appeals have been heard of which 184 were successful.

At regional level, 628 appeals have been received to date by the Welsh appeals committee. Nine appeals have been heard of which two were successful.

The Department's officials will be considering urgently with the management and staff sides ways in which the appeal procedures can be speeded up.

Craft Industry

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the itemised costs of the initial review of the craft industry in January and February 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 21 February 1990]: The review of the craft industry was carried out by Mr. Tony Ball on behalf of the Department at a total cost of £6,212.04. Mr. Ball undertook the study free of fees and the sum of £6,212.04 represents:

£2,503·76 expenses paid to Mr. Ball (covering travel and subsidence at Civil Service rates)

£3,268·80 + VAT support costs to Tony Ball Associates —of which:

Secretarial services:	1,001·00
Fares:	140·80
Creative work:	1,680·80
Printing, photographing, couriers etc.	447·00

£439·48 payments direct to hotels where meetings were held.

Had the work been undertaken at commercial consultancy rates, I estimate that the total cost would have certainly exceeded £25,000. I am grateful to Mr. Ball for completing this major study speedily and free of fees.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge

49. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many old-age pensioners in Scotland are liable to pay only 20 per cent of the poll tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that about 190,000 community charge rebate claimants aged 60 and over in Scotland in 1989-90 are in receipt of the maximum 80 per cent. rebate. Claims from couples are counted as one.

Source: 1. June 1989 count of Community Charge Rebates in Scotland.
2. Housing Benefit Management Information System May and August 1989.

50. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many poll tax payers in Scotland are liable to pay no more than 20 per cent. of the poll tax due to their receipt of the maximum rebate; and what is the average amount they will pay in 1990-91.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest estimate for 1989-90 is that 560,000 claimants in Scotland are receiving the maximum community charge rebate. Claims from couples are counted as one. Detailed information is not yet available on the numbers who will qualify for the maximum rebate in 1990-91 or on the charges that they will have to pay.

Operational Strategy

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made in implementing his Department's operational strategy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department's highly complex £1·7 billion strategy for the computerisation of the social security benefit payment system is proceeding as planned. The pilot exercise in 23 local offices has been completed and the systems are being introduced nationally office by office.

Industrial Injuries

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are affected by the decision in the recent case of McKiernon v. Secretary of State; and what steps his Department is taking to trace them.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 22 February at column 892.

Residential Homes

Mr. James Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider raising income support for residents in independent nursing homes or residential care homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The maximum amounts of income support payable to people in residential care and nursing homes are reviewed every year as part of the general uprating of benefits. These limits will all be increased from 9 April at a cost of an extra £100 million a year.

Social Fund

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Government's proposals on care in the community will lead to any changes in the administration of community care grants under the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to change the administration of community care grants.

Disability

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has for the continued existence of the Independent Living Fund in the light of the Government's proposals on care in the community.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 10 January at column 657.

ENERGY

Reactor Programmes (Costs)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), 12 December, Official Report, column 533, on reactor programme costs, if he will place a copy of the report by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 13 December 1989 at column 649, which made clear that the report could not be published because of its commercial confidentiality.

Calder Hall

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if electricity from the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. nuclear reactor at Calder Hall is to be included in the non-fossil fuel obligation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The initial non-fossil fuel obligation, announced by the Secretary of State on 12 February, has been set at a level which will ensure that existing and committed nuclear plant in England and Wales is contracted for.

Renewable Sources

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to remove responsibility for research and development of renewable sources of energy from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. Responsibility for the research and development programme on renewable sources of energy remains with my Department and the energy technology support unit of the Atomic Energy Authority is responsible for the day-to-day management of the programme. The Secretary of State's advisory council on research and development for fuel and power has very recently reviewed and endorsed the Department's programme on renewables.

Sizewell B

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to require from the Central Electricity Generating Board details of how much public money has to date been spent on the Sizewell B project; and if he will publish the information in the Official Report.

Mr. Baldry: Nuclear Electric will report regularly to my Department, as has the Central Electricity Generating Board, on progress with Sizewell B, including cost estimates. Expenditure on the project to date is a matter for Nuclear Electric.

CEGB and BNFL

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will outline his Department's responsibilities in respect of the Central Electricity Generating Board and British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: In respect of the Central Electricity Generating Board, the Department assists me in the exercise of my powers under the Electricity Act 1957.

The Government own all the shares in British Nuclear Fuels plc; and the Secretary of State for Energy guarantees the company's borrowing under the terms of the Nuclear Industry Finance Act 1977.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if it is planned to return all foreign nuclear waste to its country of origin in the same quantities of low, intermediate and high-level waste as were imported.

Mr. Baldry: There have been no changes to the arrangements set down in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 2 May 1986 at columns 500-01.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provision British Nuclear Fuels plc makes in its accounts for the costs of disposal of low and intermediate-level wastes which are not chargeable directly to British Nuclear Fuels plc's customers.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the company.

Hinkley B

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions within the past 12 months the cooling mechanism, the oil pumps and the servicing machinery at the Hinkley B nuclear reactor have been simultaneously out of action.

Mr. Baldry: The Central Electricity Generating Board informs me that on no occasion during the past 12 months has the equipment detailed been out of action simultaneously.

Energy Imports (France)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates his Department has made of the level of energy imports from French nuclear power generation over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Future levels of imports and exports across the interconnector will largely depend on commercial decisions by Electricité de France.

Decommissioning Costs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action his Department has taken in respect of provision for decommissioning following the reassessment of decommissioning costs by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the nuclear industry.

Nuclear Power Plants (Output)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessments he has made of the reasons for the drop in output of British nuclear power plants as a percentage of total power generation between May 1989 and December 1989.

Mr. Baldry: Nuclear plants provide baseload power at broadly constant levels throughout the year whereas total generation varies according to demand and is usually higher in winter. Nuclear output was in fact higher in December than in May 1989.

Nuclear Programmes (Cash Plans)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what factors account for the difference between the cash plans quoted for nuclear research and development and other programmes, on page 1, chapter 5 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93" (Cm. 1005), and the cash plans quoted for nuclear programmes on page 1, chapter 6 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" (Cm. 606).

Mr. Baldry: The main reason is an increased provision for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's decommissioning and waste management operations resulting from Government decisions on the future fast reactor programme and from higher specifications for the handling of radioactive wastes.

Radioactivity

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when and by whom the maximum safe dose of radioactivity for workers at nuclear power stations in Wales has been decided on; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Workers in nuclear power stations in Wales are subject to the same limits for exposure to ionising radiations as all other nuclear power station workers in England and Scotland. The limits are set out in schedule 1 to the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985. The regulations comply with an European Community directive (80/836 Euratom, as amended by 84/467) which in turn reflects advice from the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP). This advice is now under review.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has proposals to review the legal maximum dose of radioactivity to workers at nuclear plants in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Health and Safety Commission has recently issued a consultative document containing proposals for interim action pending receipt of revised international recommendations. The Health and Safety Commission's working group on ionising radiations will in due course consider the revised recommendations and make proposals for further action if necessary.

Electricity Privatisation

20. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress towards his announced timetable for the privatisation of the electricity industry.

42. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of plans for the electricity privatisation share issue and related matters.

Mr. Wakeham [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1989, c. 99-100]: After careful consideration I have decided that subject to market conditions at the time, the sale of National Power and PowerGen should take place on the same day in February 1991. The successful transfer to the private sector of these substantial companies will mark a further stage in the Government's programme of reinvigorating the economy by introducing the discipline of competition. Even while still formally divisions of the CEGB, these two organisations are giving every indication that they intend to compete vigorously in the electricity market which the Government are creating.

HEALTH

NHS Accounts

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future publication of annual National Health Service accounts.

Mr. Freeman: Publication of the annual series of House of Commons papers on the National Health Service accounts will remain the responsibility of the National Audit Office. Some changes in the format and content of the published accounts will however be necessary from 1991-92 as a consequence of the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Durham Health Authority

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give equivalent information relating to the spending of Durham health authority to that given in his replies to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 8 November 1989, Official Report, columns 681-82, relating to Darlington, North Tees and South Tees health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Figures for gross revenue expenditure in Durham health authority derived from the annual accounts of the authority for the years 1982-83 to 1988-89 (the latest year available), are shown in the table.

The allocation of funding to the districts in the Northern region is a matter for the Northern regional health authority (RHA).

Total revenue expenditure on Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS)

	Cash	At 1989-90 prices
1982-83	26·5	37·0
1983-84	27·3	37·7
1984-85	28·8	37·9
1985-86	30·0	37·5
1986-87	32·3	39·0
1987-88	35·0	40·2
1988-89	37·8	40·4

Notes:

1. The figures have been revalued using the Gross Domestic Product deflator.
2. HCHS covers total expenditure including that on hospital, community health, patient transport (i.e. ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.
3. Expenditure on family practitioner service (FPS) is excluded. Such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions or districts. However, for the years 1982-83 to 1984-85 the Durham Health Authority had an associated FPC and the expenditure recorded in its accounts for those years included small elements in respect of FPC administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.
4. All capital expenditure is excluded and revenue expenditure incurred by the Northern RHA for the region as a whole is also excluded.

Corneal Transplants

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his reply of 20 February, what factors limit the number of corneal transplants which may be performed in the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: Several factors can affect the number of corneal transplants performed, including the availability of donated tissue and other resources.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a breakdown of the capital allocations for acute hospital services, excluding regional specialties, by district, within the Mersey region since 1975.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. Allocations to districts are a matter for regions and the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority for this information.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department has taken to ensure that the new generation of five hydroxytriptomide drugs are not addictive and do not have dangerous side effects.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Satisfactory controls already exist under the Medicines Act to ensure that newly developed drugs are examined for safety, quality and efficacy by the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) before a product licence is granted. Effective medicines may cause side effects in some patients and doctors take account of risk-benefit factors when prescribing. Doctors are advised of known side effects by means of a range of sources including product data sheets. All newly licensed drugs are carefully monitored for side effects by CSM.

Home Helps

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many home helps are employed to serve the elderly population in the Bolton area; what is the home help-elderly householder ratio; and what is the hourly rate of pay which such employees receive.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available centrally about the number of home helps involved directly with the elderly. However, the total number (whole-time equivalents) of home helps in Bolton at 30 September 1988 was 377; the rate per 1,000 population aged over 65 was 9·8. Information on rates of pay is not held by the Department.

Disablement Services Authority

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the Disablement Services Authority is adequately funded to enable it to provide (a) lightweight wheelchairs, (b) indoor/outdoor powered wheelchairs and (c) special seating to those people who have been assessed as needing them.

Mr. Freeman: It is open to the Disablement Services Authority to allocate such sums as it sees fit from within its budget in line with the needs of its services and its policies.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to monitor the policies of the Disablement Services Authority with regard to the provision of (a) lightweight wheelchairs, (b) indoor/outdoor powered wheelchairs and (c) special seating.

Mr. Freeman: The Disablement Services Authority is a special health authority and in common with all health authorities its policies and their implementation are monitored through the NHS planning and review process.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received concerning the need for adequate funding to the Disablement Services Authority to enable it to provide (a) lightweight wheelchairs, (b) indoor/outdoor powered wheelchairs and (c) special seating to those people who have been assessed as needing them.

Mr. Freeman: We have received a small number of letters about powered wheelchairs and special seating. We have not received any representations about lightweight wheelchairs.

Radiation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to ask the chairman of the Medical Research Council to review the findings of the "Medical Research Council Report: the Hazards to Man of Nuclear and Allied Radiations", Cmnd. 9780, published in June 1956, in the light of the findings of the Gardner report on radiation risks.

Mr. Freeman: As I announced in my reply to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 15 February, at columns 397-98, I have referred the results of the case-control study from the MRC epidemiology unit to the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) for its urgent consideration and preliminary advice. I shall ensure that a copy of the 1956 MRC report is made available to the committee.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by local authority area the total number of places in (a) private, (b) voluntary and (c) local authority residential and nursing homes; if he will give a breakdown of these places along the lines of the categories used by his Department to decide on limits for payments to people living in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes; and if he will give a breakdown of the numbers of people in such homes who receive income support, by local authority area.

Mr. Freeman: The information on number of places in residential accommodation is not available in the form requested. Information at 31 March 1988 about the number of places in (a) registered private, (b) registered voluntary and (c) local authority residential care homes by local authority and by primary function has been placed in the Library. These figures are provisional.

Information on private and voluntary nursing homes is not collected centrally in the format requested. For the latest information available centrally on the number of beds in each district health authority area, I refer the hon. Member to the publication "Private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984, National, Regional and District Summaries for the financial year 1987-88", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

The information requested about income support is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security, but I understand that the information is not available in the form requested. At May 1989 there were 119,000 people receiving income support in residential care homes and 57,000 claimants in nursing homes.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many in-patients and out-patients, respectively, were treated, and what was the hospital's revenue, in respect of (a) the Christie hospital, Manchester, and (b) the Royal Marsden hospital, London, in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement about the cost-effectiveness of treatment in the case of each of those hospitals;

(2) if he will publish the cost (a) per in-patient case and (b) per out-patient attendance at the Christie hospital, Manchester, and at the Royal Marsden hospital, London, in respect of the most recent year for which figures are available; and what are the reasons for the disparity in cost between these two cancer treatment hospitals.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 14 December 1989]: For the purposes of specialty costing, financial returns from health authorities provided to the Department categorise expenditure on direct patient services according to the main specialty of the consultant in charge of the treatment, rather than upon the specific treatment received.

Under this categorisation, the expenditure on patient treatment of the Royal Marsden special health authority is categorised under "other medical", which includes medical oncology amongst other specialty functions. Christie hospital, Manchester, however, undertakes work covering a wider range of specialties in addition to those categories which include treatment of cancer, so direct comparisons of cost are not practicable centrally.

Following is a table of data derived from financial returns held by the Department.

There are often good reasons for differences between hospitals in particular costs which can arise from differences in the particular diagnoses of the patients treated, the severity of the condition treated and length of time required for treatment, and whether treatment can be provided on an out-patient basis or requires admission to a hospital bed.

	Royal Marsden SHA "Other medical"	Christie Hospital "Other medical"	Radiotherapy
Expenditure on patients using a bed £	13,088,575	2,959,075	4,379,215
Patient Days	94,099	19,386	55,309
Consultant episodes	13,219	16,510	6,029
Cost per day £	139·09	152·64	79·18
Cost per episode £	990·13	179·23	726·36
Expenditure on outpatients £	6,742,122	533,115	1,177,563
Number of attendances	90,849	7,415	34,507
Cost per attendance £	74·21	71·90	34·13

Notes:

1. Patients using a bed includes in-patients and day cases who are admitted to hospital for procedures undertaken during one day.
2. The expenditure in the table is related to the direct patient treatment costs only and does not include general overheads costs borne by individual health authorities as a whole.

Regional Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the allocations to National Health Service regions from 1982-83 to 1990-91 in current and standard prices in the case of each region indicating the value of these allocations in standard prices on a per capita basis.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 10 January 1990]: The information requested is shown in the tables, at current cash levels and at 1990-91 cash levels using the GDP deflator. The allocations shown relate to the main population based allocations and do not include additional special allocations such as the service increment for teaching.

NHS Spending (Dewsbury)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per head of spending in the National Health Service for Dewsbury health authority for each year since 1974.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 25 January 1990]: Following is information for the Dewsbury health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982.

Dewsbury Health Authority—Total Revenue Expenditure on Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS) Per Resident

(b) Mid-year estimates of resident population—1982 to 1988 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes:
1. Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS) covers total expenditure including that on hospital, community health and other services.
2. The authority's capital expenditure and all expenditure incurred by the Yorkshire Regional Health Authority on behalf of the region as a whole is excluded. Expenditure on family practitioner services, which is accounted for by family practitioner committees and cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions or districts, is also excluded.
3. The population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one district who receive treatment in another or for differences in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.
4. Prior to 1 April 1982 the authority's predecessor health district formed part of a larger area health authority and in those cases district based figures were not collected centrally.

Hospital Spending

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report, hospital expenditure per head for each of the regional health authorities in England for each of the last five years.

4. The figures for the Thames regions are influenced by the fact that South West Thames Regional Health Authority (RHA) now accounts for the entire cost of the London Ambulance Service which was formerly shared by all four Thames RHAs.

Nursing Homes (Prescriptions)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he has taken to check prescriptions taken to dispensing chemists on behalf of elderly residents in private nursing homes are not misused;

(2) what steps have been taken to ensure surplus prescribed drugs in private nursing homes are not stockpiled for unauthorised use.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 9 February 1990, c. 806]: I regret that I implied that all private nursing homes employed pharmacists. I wish to make the following clarification.

Prescription-only medicines in private nursing homes can be supplied by a pharmacist only on the signed order of a medical practitioner or dentist. It is for the dispensing pharmacist to satisfy himself that it is a proper prescription for that drug. The supply of medicines to patients in private nursing homes is almost always by means of prescriptions from a general practitioner in respect of individual patients. This method of prescribing helps to ensure that excessive quantitites of prescribed drugs are not being stockpiled. Medicines dispensed to individual patients become the property of that patient and, unless treatment has been completed, are normally given to the patient on discharge or otherwise destroyed.

The prescribing, dispensing and monitoring of the use of controlled drugs is governed by the Misuse of Drugs Regulations.

The Registered Homes Act 1984 requires the registering district health authority to inspect private nursing homes at least twice each year to ensure that adequate arrangements exist for the recording, safekeeping, handling and disposal of drugs in the possession of patients. In some private nursing homes a medical practitioner or pharmacist may be retained to advise the person registered as responsible for the home on how medicines should be controlled.

TRANSPORT

European Rail System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what projections his Department has made in respect of the future trends in market share of freight traffic from Europe to the United Kingdom of (a) rail and (b) road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has made no such projections.

British Rail (Borrowing)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on allowing British Rail to borrow money from the private sector.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend is concerned that British Rail should finance its operations in the most cost-effective manner possible: BR has the objective of increasing further the contribution to its business of the private sector, where this enables more cost-effective and competitive services to be provided. BR is normally required to take its loan finance from the national loans fund (NLF), which charges lower interest rates than those generally available in the private sector. BR is permitted to borrow on a temporary basis from financial institutions authorised to take deposits under the Banking Act 1987.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the cities and towns in the United Kingdom which have specially designed cycle routes and facilities.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not available centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. As part of our programme of research into cycling, the Department has participated with highway authorities on schemes in the following localities:

Cycle Routes Programme
- Stockton
- Bedford
- Exeter
- Southampton
- Nottingham
- Cambridge

Innovatory facilities
- Hull
- Cambridge
- Nottingham
- London:
  - Westminster
  - Southwark
  - Shepherds Bush
  - Hammersmith
  - Hillingdon
  - Ealing
- Canterbury
- Oxford
- Chelmsford
- Preston
- Manchester
- Newark
- Liverpool
- Bristol
- Cheltenham
- Darlington

The Department is about to publish a revised bibliography of publications on cycling. It includes details on most of the route projects and innovatory schemes listed. I shall send the hon. Member a copy of the new bibliography as soon as it is available. Further copies of it will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to investigate the case for incorporating a cyclist awareness section into the driving test for motor vehicle learner drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department's advice to learner drivers, and its driving test procedures, already attach weight to awareness of cyclists and to consideration towards them along with other vulnerable road users.

A6 Disley-High Lane Bypass

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove of 21 February, what are the reasons for the cost differences between the preferred route (modified brown) on the proposed A6 Disley-High Lane bypass and the brown route.

Mr. Atkins: The preferred route is 4 km shorter than the original brown route. It avoids the need for extensive work in the Newtown area and a diversion of the railway at Gowhole.

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether British Coal registered a formal objection to the construction of the proposed A6 Disley-High Lane bypass along the lines of route of the purple, blue and orange proposals.

Mr. Atkins: No. British Coal's comments were submitted during consultations prior to announcement of a preferred route.

Environmental Adviser

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he used in choosing Professor Hoskins as his adviser on environmental matters; for how long the appointment is; and what payments will be made to Professor Hoskins for his assistance.

Mr. Atkins: Professor Hoskins is professor of meteorology at Reading university and is a leading authority on global warming, climatic change and related matters. As such he appeared to my right hon. Friend to be a suitable person to advise him on the implications of these issues for transport policy.

Professor Hoskins is a part-time special adviser and does not have a fixed-term appointment. As is the normal practice with special advisers his remuneration is determined by reference to his current level of earnings and is therefore confidential.

Beach Pollution (Sussex)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it has now been possible to identify the source of the dangerous chemicals washed up on Sussex beaches which were referred to in his answer to the private notice question on 22 February, Official Report, columns 1067-72; whether any action is to be taken by his Department against those responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: With the full co-operation of the shipping agent and local authorities concerned, the marine pollution control unit has been able to determine that the potassium cyanide which came ashore on the Sussex coast on 21 February and succeeding days, had been shipped on the MV Fathulkhair which left Sheerness on 31 January bound for the Persian Gulf. It is probable that other items washed ashore came from the same source.

The vessel encountered heavy weather on her passage down the Channel and whilst off Ushant (in a French area of responsibility) on 2 February lost a quantity of cargo overboard. After putting back into Cherbourg to resecure and survey cargo, the vessel encountered further heavy weather and lost more items overboard between 12 and 14 February against whilst off Ushant.

As the cargo was lost outside United Kingdom territorial waters and the ship is registered in Qatar, my Department is writing to the Qatar authorities to inquire into the incident and if it is found that the chemicals were stowed improperly, to establish who was responsible and to ask what action they intend to take.

In any event marine surveyors of the Department will board the vessel when next it arrives in a United Kingdom port to ensure that if it loads dangerous cargo it will be in accordance with the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations.

Stockport Bypass

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when work will commence on the A6(M) Stockport bypass.

Mr. Atkins: Time will be needed for design work, supplementary orders and a compulsory purchase order. A second public inquiry is likely. Construction could then start by the end of 1992.

Confidential Road Studies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances county councils carry out confidential road studies for his Department on trunk roads; how prevalent this practice is; what access elected councillors of the relevant authorities have to such studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Agent county councils normally undertake scheme investigation studies for trunk roads, but exceptionally private consultants may be commissioned where a study is large or complex.

Studies are "confidential" only in that full findings are not made public, but if either a national or regional scheme results the statutory consultation procedures apply.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received within the last months from the chairman of British Rail in respect of the phasing out of the subsidy to Network SouthEast.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend had detailed discussions with Sir Robert Reid before agreeing with him the objectives for British Rail that were announced on 19 December.

Stranraer-Euston Rail Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if, pursuant to his statement concerning under-use of the Stranraer-Euston rail service, Official Report, 14 February, column 333, he will give the figures on which he bases his statement.

Mr. Portillo: I understand from British Rail that the number of people using the Stranraer-Glasgow part of the Stranraer-Euston sleeper services averages 10 per night.

Leicester Eastern Bypass

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when work on the Leicester eastern bypass (A6-A46), listed in "Roads for Prosperity", will be commenced;

(2) if the Leicester eastern bypass (A6-A46) will be constructed to dual carriageway standard.

Mr. Atkins: Consultants have still to be appointed for the proposed Leicester eastern bypass and a detailed programme is not available at this early stage. It is hoped to announce a preferred route in 1994, following public consultation, as announced in "Trunk Roads, England —Into the 1990s" on 20 February. The carriageway standard has yet to be determined.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report all successful United Kingdom projects chosen by the European Commission for research and development on agricultural technologies in the Eclair programme; and what proportion of the total projects allocated came from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: All projects under the EC Eclair programme have to be joint ventures involving participants in more than one member state. In the first tranche under this programme, the EC Commission has selected 23 projects for contract negotiation in 13 of which there is United Kingdom participation. The projects concerned are:

(a) optimisation of lignin in crop and in industrial plants through genetic engineering;
(b) development and production of low temperature storage tolerant potato cultivars;
(c) improvement of yield and food conservation in salmonids and maricultured fish;
(d) improvement of storage capabilities of fresh fruits and vegetables through the biotechnological and technological control of ethylene;
(e) development of improved strains of insect parasitic nematodes for control of insect pests in horticulture and agriculture;

(f) development of liquid fertilisers based on naturally occurring seaweeds;
(g) development of a delivery system for the oral administration of vaccines for the prevention of diseases in fish in agriculture;
(h) development of environmentally safe pest control systems for European olives;
(i) novel anti fungal proteins; applications in crop protection;
(j) novel biosynthetic routes for biodegradation of polyhydroxy alkanoates made by genetically engineered strains of bacteria and plants;
(k) amines: animal monitoring and identification;
(l) European maize use in the starch industry in relation to growing areas and cultivation techniques; and
(m) the development of biotechnology based in vitro production of sex-determination, freeze-storage and transfer of bovine embryos.

Chicken Feed

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outlaw the addition of colouring matter to chicken feed designed to brighten the colour of the egg yolk.

Mr. Maclean: Regulation of these colouring matters is a matter for agreement within the EC. The continued use of one of the principal colourants is currently being examined by expert committees both in the EC and also in this country.

Food and Drink Imports

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what precautions to check imported food and drink for contamination are in operation.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Imported food and drink are subject to the Imported Food Regulations 1984 which require food to be sound, wholesome and fit for human consumption. Monitoring, as appropriate, to ensure that food and drink meet these criteria, is carried out by local enforcement authorities including port health authorities.

Bananas

Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a chart or table showing (a) the percentage share and (b) the tonnage share of the European Community banana market held by (i) Community producers, (ii) African, Caribbean and Pacific producers, (iii) dollar (Central and South American) producers and (iv) others, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Curry: The percentage and tonnage share of the European Community banana market held by (i) Community producers; (ii) African, Caribbean and Pacific producers, (iii) dollar producers and (iv) others in each of the last five years for which complete data is available is as follows:

Note:—Eurostat data does not include imports from the Canary Islands for 1984 and 1985 and for imports from Madeira throughout the period. Estimates of such imports from FAO data have been added to the Eurostat data to give comparable coverage. In the breakdown such imports are included under Community Producers.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of payments permitted under European Economic Community less-favoured areas directive; what are the current rates of hill subsidies and payments; and what conclusions he has reached on his policy in this matter.

Mr. Curry: The EC structures regulation (797/85, as amended) currently provides the framework for measures to support farmers in the less-favoured areas. The principal form of support is the system of hill livestock compensatory allowances, though there is also provision for other measures such as enhanced rates of capital grant in the LFA. Under regulation 797/85, the HLCA rates have to be fixed according to the severity of the permanent natural handicaps affecting farming activities, within prescribed minimum and maximum levels per livestock unit and a maximum payment per hectare. At 1 January 1990, the effective minimum rate in the United Kingdom was £14·34 per cow and £2·15 per ewe; the maximum rate was £71·37 per cow and £10·70 per ewe; and total payments were subject to a maximum of £71·37 per hectare. The current HLCA rates payable in the United Kingdom are:

Severely Disadvantaged Area of the LFA	£ per head
Cows	54·50
Hardy Breed Ewes	7·50
Other Ewes	4·50
Disadvantaged Area
Cows	27·25
Ewes	2·25

The maximum payable per hectare is £62·48 in the severely disadvantaged area and £46·86 in the disadvantaged area.

My right hon. Friend indicated the Government's policy towards the hill and upland areas in his statement to the House on 30 January 1990, Official Report, columns 159-170.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further action he proposes to take to reduce the number of food poisoning incidents.

Mr. Maclean: The government are seeking through the Food Safety Bill to update and strengthen their powers in relation to food safety. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire Moorlands (Mr. Knox), Official Report, 15 February, column 399, which referred to the response we have made to part one of the report of the Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food.

Industrial Waste

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 4 December, Official Report, column 106, whether he has submitted any further applications to the Oslo commission for licences to dump industrial waste in the North sea.

Mr. Curry: Two further sets of information have been sent to the Oslo commission about proposals to issue sea dumping licences for the following wastes:

Material	Tonnage
Fine Organic	8,000
Wash water from the synthesis of antibiotic and anti-ulcer medicines	-
Tate and Lyle Sugars	30,000
Chalk solution from sugar refining

Dumping of these two wastes at sea will cease as soon as alternative means of disposal are in place. The companies are working to tight timetables and dumping should end within a year.

Green Currency Gaps

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost of eliminating the green currency gaps; and what would be the resultant cash effect upon United Kingdom agriculture.

Mr. Curry: The Government are committed to eliminating the monetary gap associated with the green pound by the end of 1992 at the latest. The effect of a complete devaluation of the green pound will depend on movements in the market rate of sterling over this period. It is estimated that a devaluation to eliminate the present monetary gap would add about £290 million in a full year to public expenditure in the United Kingdom. This expenditure would be mainly financed from the EC budget to which the United Kingdom, of course, contributes. Such a devaluation would increase farmers' incomes by over £700 million in a full year and add around 1·25 per cent. to retail food prices on average.

Food Prices

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the average increase in the price of food over the last 10 years.

Mr. Curry: Over the 10 years to January 1990, the average annual increase in food prices was 5·3 per cent.

Pesticides

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the review and approval of pesticides.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington (Mr. Corbyn) on 8 February, Official Report, column 728.

Artificial Flavouring

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he plans to take to enable consumers, seeking to avoid the use of artificial flavourings, to make an informed choice in respect of the legal term flavour.

Mr. Maclean: Under existing food labelling legislation consumers can choose between food where the flavour is derived wholly or mainly from the named food, and those artificially flavoured. For example the descriptions "strawberry flavoured" or simply "strawberry" can only be used to describe food in the first category. "Strawberry flavour" may be used for food in the second category where the flavour does not come mainly from strawberries. The relevant provisions can be found in schedule 7 to the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 and are fully explained in our free booklet "Look at the Label".

Bread Prices

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the average price for a 1lb loaf of bread and the average price for an unmilled ton of wheat grown in the United Kingdom for the years 1986 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Average price of[1] 1lb loaf of bread Pence per loaf	Average price of[2] home grown wheat £ per tonne
1986	43·0	111·18
1987	43·7	111·00

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require the police to give every victim of violence, rape and child abuse the leaflet which outlines the availability of financial assistance provided by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements for giving information to victims are the responsibility of individual chief officers of police. However, existing Home Office guidance to the police stresses that people who have suffered injury as a result of crime should, whenever possible, be handed a copy of the leaflet "Victims of Crimes of Violence: A Guide to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme".

Crime Reduction

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the achievements of Her Majesty's Government in reducing crime since June 1987.

Mr. Waddington: The measures which we have taken to reduce crime since 1979 are set out in my reply today to another question from my hon. and learned Friend. Comparing the 12 months to September 1989—the most recent period for which figures are available—with the 12 months to September 1987, the number of offences recorded by the police has fallen from 3,893,000 to 3,779,000, a decrease of 3 per cent.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the steps taken by Her Majesty's Government since 1979 to reduce crime.

Mr. Waddington: Since 1979 we have increased police manpower by 24,000 (including civilians). We have given the courts the powers they need by increasing the maximum penalties for certain offences, and by making provision for the confiscation of profits made by drug traffickers and other criminals. We have prohibited certain firearms and other weapons, and taken steps to control the possession of knives in public places.

Following the successful five towns initiative in 1986, we have set up a safer cities programme to co-ordinate crime prevention activity in high-crime inner-city areas. We have undertaken a number of substantial crime prevention publicity campaigns and over 3 million copies of the crime prevention handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" have been distributed. An independent organisation, Crime Concern, was set up with Home Office assistance in 1988, with the objective of supporting and developing local crime prevention activity.

Liquor Sales

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a system of licences for wholesalers who sell intoxicating liquor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no present plans to do so.

Right of Abode

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long those issued with certificates of entitlement to the right of abode had to wait for their applications to be processed in (a) January 1988, (b) June 1988, (c) January 1989, (d) June 1989 and (e) January 1990 or the nearest available date; how many cases were awaiting decision in the British overseas citizens and right of abode group at each of the above dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on waiting times and on the numbers of cases outstanding for persons applying in the United Kingdom for a certificate of entitlement to the right of abode is not available for the periods requested. On 21 February 1990, a total of 189 applications were waiting consideration in the United Kingdom; the majority were less than six weeks old and the oldest was dated 13 October 1989. In the case of persons applying to posts abroad for certificates of entitlement to the right of abode, information is available only for the Indian sub-continent. Since 1988, such applicants have been interviewed within three months of applying. Information on the waiting time between interview and the issue of a certificate is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were made for certificates of entitlement to the right of abode; how many certificates were issued; how much money was collected in fees for such applications; how many staff, and at what grades, were in post to deal with the processing of such applications in each quarter since January 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No separate record is maintained of the number of applications received from persons in the United Kingdom for certificates of entitlement to the right of abode. The remainder of the information requested is as follows:

Quarter ending	Certificates issued[1]	Fees collected[2] (£)
31 March 1988	340	—
30 June 1988	464	—
30 September 1988	419	—
31 December 1988	652	—
31 March 1989	594	3,816·00
30 June 1989	502	5,625·00
30 September 1989	581	6,451·00
31 December 1989	626	6,278·50

[1] The figures include new and renewed certificates issued.
[2] Fees were introduced on 15 December 1988 in respect of new certificates only.

Since January 1988, the processing of certificate applications made in the United Kingdom has required a team of two executive officers, two administrative officers and two administrative assistants.

In addition, in the whole of 1988, a total of 10,200 certificates of entitlement to the right of abode in the United Kingdom including confirmations of the right of abode, were issued to persons applying at posts abroad. The other information requested is not available centrally for such cases.

Manchester Airport (Police)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers of the Greater Manchester police authority were stationed at Manchester international airport in each of the last five years; and what percentage of the total strength of the Greater Manchester police authority this represented in the same period and at the last available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

31 December	Officers deployed at airport	Force strength	Percentage airport deployment of force strength
1989	146	6,965	2·1
1988	138	6,844	2·0
1987	131	7,021	1·9
1986	131	6,725	1·9
1985	131	6,779	1·9
1984	131	6,745	1·9

Dr. Sinha (Police Interview)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for a report on the result of the interview of Dr. Sinha at Forest Gate police station on 1 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that following their interview with Dr. Sinha on 1 February, the Metropolitan police still have his case under consideration.

DEFENCE

Tendering

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the impact of improved tendering procedures upon the cost effectiveness of his Department's expenditure.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our increased use of competitive tendering, including announcements in the MOD contracts bulletin, continues to achieve substantial savings. It is not easy to quantify these in the absence of any specific indication of the price which would have been achieved without competition. Our more commercial approach to procurement fosters improvements in the efficiency and international competitiveness of the British defence industry.

Independent European Programme Group

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress made within the independent European programme group on the production of complementary contract bulletins by each of the 13 member countries; and what was the outcome of the recent meeting of the independent European programme group at Gleneagles in Scotland.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Ministers of the 13 independent European programme group (IEPG) nations met in Gleneagles on 21 February 1990. Nine IEPG nations have now started regular publication of bulletins of defence contract opportunities; the rest should follow later this year. This marks a major step towards the opening of the European defence equipment market. Ministers also reviewed progress on other aspects of the step by step opening of the European defence equipment market, and the establishment of the EUCLID European research and technology programme. A copy of the communiqué issued after the meeting has been placed in the Library of the House.

Radiation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many studies on radiation exposure to the work force at the research, development and operational establishments at (a) Llanishen, (b) Aldermaston, (c) Burghfield, (d) Devonport, (e) Rosyth, (f) Chatham and (g) Vulcan at Dounreay have been conducted (i) by his Department and (ii) by independent authorities since each facility began operations;

(2) if he will make it his policy to initiate a study into the health effects of radiation on workers and their families based at Llanishen, Burghfield, Aldermaston and the Royal Navy college at Greenwich;

(3) if he will make it his policy to initiate a study into the health effects of radiation on the work force at the Devonport and Rosyth shipyards.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Radiation exposures to radiation workers at MOD establishments are kept under constant local review by the radiation protection advisers and local management, and are also scrutinised by the Health and Safety Executive. Such exposures are authorised solely on the basis that they are justified, that they comply with statutory limits, and that they are as low as reasonably practicable. The data is placed on the national register of radiation workers and is included in a current mortality study by the National Radiological Protection Board on the whole of the United Kingdom nuclear industry.

The committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment has recommended a nationwide study of leukaemia in children of workers in the nuclear industry. The Department of Health is considering how this study might be carried out, and we will co-operate fully as appropriate.

The following independent studies on radiation exposure in the MOD work force have been published:

(i) 'Report of an Investigation into Radiological Health and Safety at the Ministry of Defence (Procurement Executive) Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston', by Sir Edward Pochin, 30 October 1978.

(ii) 'AWE Mortality Study', published in the British Medical Journal, No. 6651, Vol. 297 on 24 September 1988.

(iii) 'Radiation induced Chromosome Aberrations in Nuclear—Dockyard Workers' (a study on Rosyth Dockyard Workers), published in Nature (Evans et al, Vol. 277, p531, 1979).

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of the Gardner report on radiation risks for the continued use of nuclear materials by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Radiation exposures continue to be authorised by the MOD only on the basis that they are justified, comply with statutory limits, and are as low as reasonably practicable. This is a continuing process and I see no reason to change current practice.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what precautions against radiation exposure will be taken in the removal of the research reactor from the Royal Naval college at Greenwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We will comply with all relevant statutory requirements and radiation exposure will be kept as low as reasonably practicable. The reactor fuel will be transported in a container which will conform fully with the regulations governing transport of radioactive material as administered by the Department of Transport.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training trainees are taking part in access courses to higher education as part of their training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to identify the number of employment training (ET) trainees taking part in access courses. Access courses that satisfy normal ET criteria can help to prepare trainees for a variety of employment and training opportunities including higher education.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether claimants who are already undertaking a part-time education or training course under the 21-hour rule may have this course included in their employment training action plan, if they wish to participate in the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Claimants who have undertaken a part-time education or training course under the 21-hour rule may in certain circumstances have the course included in their employment training action plan. In order to be included the course would have to be an integral part of the person's training programme under employment training; be directly relevant to the individual's vocational goal; and agreed as the best method of meeting individual training needs. All other employment training conditions, such as the requirement to complete 30 hours training each week, would continue to apply.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether ET trainees may study for O and A-levels as part of their directed training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes. O-levels or A-levels may help certain trainees to make progress towards their chosen occupation. If so agreed, these qualifications would then be specified as part of directed training within the trainee's action plan.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will estimate from the 1988 labour force survey data (a) the numbers of claimants without paid jobs who wanted full-time jobs, (b) the number who wanted part-time jobs, and (c) the number who had no preference who (i) had not looked for a job in the survey reference week, (ii) had not looked for a job in the last four weeks, (iii) were not available for work within the next two weeks, (iv) (i) and (iii), and (v) (ii) and (iii); and if he will break the estimates down by sex and region;

(2) if he will estimate, using 1988 labour force survey data, the number of male and female claimants without paid work not required to be capable and available for suitable work in spring 1988, and whose main reason for not seeking work in the survey reference week was (i) looking after family/home, (ii) long-term sick/disabled, (iii) believed no jobs available, (iv) retired, (v) temporarily sick, on holiday, awaiting results of job applications or waiting to start a job already obtained, (vi) did not want/need work, (vii) studying, (viii) not yet started looking, (ix) other reason/no reply/not applicable and (x) all reasons;

(3) if he will estimate, using 1988 labour force survey data, the numbers of male and female claimants without paid work who were required to be capable and available for suitable work in spring 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is given in the following table. It is not possible to provide a reliable analysis of these figures by region. The requirement to be capable and available for suitable work does not apply to the labour force survey.

Noise and Vibration Inspectors

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specialist noise and vibration inspectors are required by the Health and Safety Executive; and how many are currently in post.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive's factory, agricultural, quarries, explosives and mines inspectorate are responsible for enforcing legislative provision under which exposure to noise and vibration at work is controlled.

In addition, the Health and Safety Executive has 11 specialist inspector posts to provide technical support and advice on noise and vibration. Ten inspectors are in post and a new recruit is expected to start shortly.

Noise Control

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what penalties, in each case, followed the eight prosecutions in the period 1981 to 1989 relating to the control of noise, referred to in his answer of 26 October 1989, Official Report, columns 598-99.

Mr. Nicholls: The following penalties were imposed:

Health and Safety Executive area	Year	Result	Fine imposed £
Scotland West	1981	Dismissed	—
West and North Yorkshire	1983	Guilty	50
West and North Yorkshire	1984	Guilty	1,000

Skills Training Agency, Letchworth

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement about the sale of the Letchworth Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar: Further to the statement that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made to the House, Official Report, 13 February 1990, column 141, about the sale of the Skills Training Agency (STA), I can announce that we have now accepted a bid from Mr. J. James, an instructor at Letchworth skill centre, for the gas safety training business presently located at one part of the skill centre. Mr. James intends to relocate the business to alternative premises by September 1990.

SCOTLAND

Commonwealth Games

15. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had any discussions with the Scottish Sports Council since the conclusion of the Commonwealth games.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I met Professor Miquel, chairman of the Scottish Sports Council, informally at the Scotland v. France rugby international on Saturday 17 February at Murrayfield.

Rents into Mortgages

16. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the progress of the rents into mortgages scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes has received approximately 500 inquiries from tenants interested in purchasing their homes under the Government's rents to mortgages scheme.

Electricity Privatisation

17. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on electricity privatisation as it affects Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The new electricity companies, Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro-Electric, will begin operating at the end of next month, and their flotation will take place, subject to market conditions, in May or June next year.

Motorway Crash Barriers

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway in Scotland are without crash barriers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Only 80 miles are now without central reserve safety barriers. A further 33 miles of safety fencing will be installed this year at a cost of £3·5 million. This demonstrates the high priority we are giving to completing the outstanding work.

Poinding

19. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet Scotland's sheriff principals to discuss the poinding of goods by sheriff officers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has been no request for any such meeting.

Open Skies Policy

20. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the economic consequences of an open skies policy; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Many of the responses to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport's consultation paper on Scottish lowland airports policy addressed in detail the possible economic effects of an open skies policy. All points have been assessed and are being taken fully into account in the review now being concluded.

35. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the economic consequences of an open skies policy for Glasgow and Renfrewshire; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Many of the responses to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport's consultation paper on Scottish lowland airports policy addressed in detail the possible economic effects of an open skies policy. All points made have been assessed and are being taken fully into account in the review now being concluded.

Fishing Industry

21. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish fishing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend the Minister of State met representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on 7 February to discuss the management of the North sea haddock fishery in 1990.

European Regional Department Fund

22. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of grants that Scotland has received from European regional development fund since its inception.

Mr. Lang: Awards totalled £857 million between 1975 and 1989. More than 90 per cent. of this came since 1979.

Toxic Waste

23. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from local authorities and environmental groups about the disposal of toxic waste in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A letter from Friends of the Earth (Scotland) was received recently. There have been no other representations during the past six months.

Local Enterprise Companies

24. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many consortia bids have been received by groups wishing to run local enterprise companies in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have received 24 applications from consortia in Scotland wishing to form local enterprise companies.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the tasks of the training standard advisory services in relation to local enterprise companies; and to whom the former body will be accountable.

Mr. Lang: The training standards advisory service, which is at present accountable, through the Training Agency office for Scotland, to the Secretary of State for Employment, will provide advice and an independent assessment of the quality of training provision delivered by each local enterprise company. Under the terms of the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Bill, the training standards advisory service staff in Scotland will become part of Scottish Enterprise, which will be accountable to the Secretary of State for Scotland. Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise will wish to consider in due course how best to make provision for the Highlands and Islands area.

Health Services (Private Provision)

25. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many health boards have agreed contracts with private companies for the provision of health services to National Health Service patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the number of contracts between health boards and other providers of health services is not kept centrally.

Revenue Support Grant

26. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from rural areas regarding the Government's revenue support grant for 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Six district councils in predominantly rural areas have made general representations about the overall level of their revenue support grant for 1990-91. A number of other authorities, some of them in rural areas, have as is usual raised detailed points, particularly in relation to loan charges and non-domestic rate income, on technical matters relating to the calculation of RSG.

Community Charge

27. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the likely level of average community charge payments in Scotland in 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish local authorities were required to fix their community charges for 1990-91 by 29 January. The average charge (inclusive of the water charge) is £328, which represents an increase of 9·2 per cent. on the comparable figure for the current year.

28. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the overall community charge due in the current year throughout Scotland has now been collected; and what percentage of domestic rates was collected in each of the last five years at the same time.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally but it would appear that the general flow of income from community charge payments is broadly the same as under the domestic rating system last year.

46. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have yet to pay the poll tax in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: While no overall figure is available centrally it would appear that the proportion of people in arrears with their community charge payments is broadly the same as under the rating system last year.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the cost to local authorities of the administration and collection of the poll tax in 1989-90; and what was the cost to local authorities of the administration and collection of domestic rates in 1988-89.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The overall cost of administering the community charge system in 1989-90, as estimated by local authorities, is £43·5 million. Community charge collection costs, exclusive of registration work and the operation of the rebate scheme, are estimated to account for £23·3 million of that total.

The overall cost to authorities of administering the rating system in 1988-89 was £31 million, of which £17·3 million was in respect of rates collection. Separate figures are not available centrally for domestic and non-domestic rates.

39. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individual pieces of communication have been sent in total by regional and island councils in Scotland to poll tax payers in Scotland since the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 came into operation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the administration of the community charge is a matter for levying authorities. The number of communications sent to individuals will vary according to the circumstances of particular cases. However the main statutory communications issued by community charge registration officers and directors of finance are:

1. Inquiry form for completion by responsible person under section 17(5) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended by the Local Government Finance Act 1988.
2. Notification of entry in community charges register under section 14(2) of the 1987 Act, as amended by the 1988 Act.
3. Notification of any amendment to or deletion from the community charges register under section 14(5) of the 1987 Act as amended by the 1988 Act.
4. Demand notice in respect of a person's liability for the community charge, under Schedule 2(2) to the 1987 Act.
5. Notices in respect of unpaid community charges, under Schedule 2(4) and 2(7) to the 1987 Act.

Supplementary notices or forms may be issued if the circumstances require this. Additional communications will be sent in the case of people who have applied for community charge rebate.

Storm Damage

29. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce any additional measures he proposes to take to help recompense for the damage caused and the problems associated with recent severe weather conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston).

38. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to visit the flood-damaged areas of north Tayside.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans to visit north Tayside, but my noble Friend the Minister of State toured the worst affected areas on 15 February.

Scottish Homes

30. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he takes to ensure the effective management of Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has set both broad aims and specific targets for Scottish Homes and agreed with the body its first strategic plan. All of these will be reviewed annually to identify, determine priorities and quantify the action which can be taken on specific fronts. In addition, there is in place a comprehensive framework of documents which set out the parameters within which Scottish Homes may operate, where this is required by section 2 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988.

Responsibility for the effective internal management of Scottish homes rests with the board and with the chief executive as accounting officer.

Neptune Consortium

31. Mr Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board's involvement with the Neptune Consortium.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 26 February 1990, (Official Report, col. 84-85). I would like to clarify one point in that reply. Although the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board informed me about various detailed aspects of the development, including the identity of possible large customers earlier this month, as I informed the hon. Member on 26 February, it had informed me in November 1989 of the possibility that it might wish to involve itself in the development at some future date

Scotrail

32. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the general manager of Scotrail; and what subjects were discussed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and I discussed various topics relating to rail transport when we met the general manager of Scotrail in the company of the chairman of British Rail, Sir Robert Reid, on 31 October 1989.

CBI

33. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Confederation of British Industry Scotland; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 20 December 1989.

Rating (Debt Collection)

34. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of collecting debts due to default on the payment of domestic rates in 1988-89; and what are the current and projected costs for the collection of poll tax debts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) on 15 January.

Children (Employment)

36. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to assist local authorities in their duty to prevent employers from employing schoolchildren in the early hours for several hours per day before they commence school.

Mr. Lang: Schoolchildren in employment in Scotland are protected by existing legislaton and by local authority byelaws. Enforcement is, in the first instance, a matter for the police.

Private Landlords

37. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to require private sector landlords to reduce bills to tenants to take account of the abolition of domestic rates.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Tenants with registered rents are already paying a rent which contains no element for rates; and assured tenants should have a written statement of their liability for rent, exclusive of rates, which is all they need pay. Any regulated tenant who has not had a rent registered need only do so in order to ensure that the rent does not include rates.

Acute Services (Lanarkshire)

40. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received from Lanarkshire health board the report "Acute Services Strategy, Options Appraisal"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board submitted a consultative document on its acute services strategy on 3 November 1989. The public consultation period ended on 31 January 1990. Once the board has reached a final decision on its preferred option, it will make a submission to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for approval in principle.

Land (Use of Ownership)

41. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department has taken to promote the equitable ownership and use of land in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the Government's policy to intervene on matters of land ownership. The function of the land use planning system is to regulate the use of land in the interests of economy, efficiency and amenity.

Religious Education

43. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to improve the teaching of Christian-centred religious education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to issue shortly for consultation a draft circular on religious education in schools.

Equal Opportunities

44. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to implement an equal opportunities policy in his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1984 my Department has had a designated equal opportunities officer who, in addition to other duties, has to co-ordinate policy and advise on all aspects of racial and sexual discrimination. A joint management and trade union group has met regularly to take forward the proposals set out in the programme of action on equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service. Progress has been made on all fronts.

The amount of part-time working has increased and a much greater use is made of reinstatement. Staff have been advised of progress through office notices and specially prepared leaflets, and training courses and guidance material now give prominence to the anti-discrimination legislation. My Department is currently considering the case for provision of child care facilities and will shortly apply the recent relaxation of Civil Service rules which allow special unpaid leave for domestic reasons to be granted for up to five years.

Ethnic monitoring of recruitment is undertaken and efforts will continue to increase the ethnic intake to better reflect the proportion in the community. My Department has also undertaken a survey of the ethnic origins of staff as part of the nationwide survey of civil servants. The information is kept up to date by the completion by new entrants to the Department of a questionnaire showing their ethnic origin.

Legal Reforms

45. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has conducted into the effect of the proposed legal reforms on rural practices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 18 January 1990, Official Report, column 418.

Warrant Sales

47. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's policy in relation to the use of warrant sales for the recovery of poll tax arrears from domestic poll tax taxpayers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that the present powers available to local authorities to collect community charge arrears —including, where necessary, the use of warrant sales— are both adequate and appropriate for this purpose.

NHS Staff

48. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to address the wastage of highly trained staff by Greater Glasgow health board, and to provide employment to the nurses who graduated from Glasgow college in November 1989 and the midwives awarded qualifications by the Eastern college of nursing and midwifery in January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of nurses and midwives completing training in certain areas sometimes exceeds the number of jobs immediately available in the NHS in these areas. This need not imply waste as trained staff are widely required throughout the public and private sectors.

Homelessness

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a table showing the number of applications to local authorities under the homeless legislation for all cases where the household was deemed to be in priority need because of vulnerability due to old age; and if he will provide this information for every available year since 1977 and for each local authority and for Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Rifkind: The homeless persons legislation did not come into effect until 1 April 1978. There are therefore no figures for before that date. The number of applicant households assessed by local authorities as homeless or potentially homeless, and in priority need for reasons which included a person vulnerable because of old age, for the years 1978-79 to 1988-89, are set out in the following table.

Applicant households under the Homeless Persons Legislation assessed by Local Authorities as homeless or potentially homeless and in priority need which include a person vulnerable because of old age

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless children there are in (a) Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally.

Higher Education

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have recently been carried out by his Department on higher education students annual and monthly expenditure on (a) accommodation, (b) food, (c) transport and (d) other necessary items in (i) Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland.

Mr. Lang: No separate Scottish studies have been undertaken, but a survey of students' income and expenditure covering Great Britain as a whole was commissioned in 1989. The results of the study provided benchmark information on the financial position of students during the 1988-89 academic year. The report of the survey, by Research Services Ltd., was published in November 1989 and copies have been placed in the Library.

Schools (Self-Government)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any organisations seeking to encourage schools to opt out of the local authority education system have applied for any financial assistance from his Department.

Mr. Lang: No.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish a Scottish self-governing schools trust; what meetings have so far been held to this effect; and who has been involved in the discussions.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 February 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Cash Limits

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make further changes to the cash limits for 1989-90 within his responsibility.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 27, Hospital and Community Health Services, Scotland, will be increased by £16,237,000 from £8,697,000 to £24,934,000 to take account of increased expenditure by health boards. This increase will be partially offset by savings of £4,500,000 elsewhere within the Scottish block. The balance will be charged to the reserve.

Training Schemes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how standards of quality are maintained on the employment training scheme and YTS in Scotland; and what comparable studies he has made of major European competitors in their provision of training.

Mr. Lang: The Training Agency ensures standards of quality on employment training and YTS by requiring all employment training training agents and managers and YTS managers to become approved training organisations. In awarding approved training organisation status, the Training Agency verifies the design and delivery of the training as consistent with the aims of employment training and YTS. Furthermore the training standards advisory service provides an independent advisory service which has as its main role to assess the overall quality of training provision and to undertake evaluations of individual projects.

There is a lack of internationally comparable data on training volumes and expenditure. National surveys have been carried out in most countries, but their coverage and the definitions used often differ widely. The Scottish Office itself has made no study of provision of training in major European countries, but "Training in Britain", a report produced by the Training Agency, does make reference to training in France and Germany. In addition, a study is presently being carried out by the European centre for the development of vocational training and the Commission of European Communities to obtain systematic and comparable data of training expenditure at the European level, but results are not yet available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to publish the recent survey of training within the tourism sector undertaken by the Scottish tourist board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No decision has yet been taken. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the procedures by which the employment training scheme is monitored by his Department in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The monitoring of employment training in Scotland is undertaken by the Training Agency which is at present part of the Department of Employment. My officials in the Industry Department for Scotland liaise closely with the Training Agency on employment training issues.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the terms of his loan to fund Lothian health board's deficit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Subject to the approval of Parliament, I am providing additional resources to enable Lothian to meet the overspend of its 1989-90 cash limit. This is a short term measure which will add to the board's cumulative deficit in 1990-91. I have asked the board to prepare proposals designed to bring its underlying income and expenditure into balance in the medium term. In the light of the decisions on the board's proposals I will consider with the board the management of its cumulative deficit.

Dounreay

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make an announcement concerning the application by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to drill two boreholes at Dounreay.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This planning application is the subject of an appeal which is currently before my right hon. and learned Friend for decision. I expect that his decision on the matter will be issued shortly.

Housing

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has received from Councillor Gordon Murray of Cumbernauld concerning housing modernisation and improvements in the Balloch, Ravenswood, Seafar North and Carbrain East areas of Cumbernauld new town; if he will place a copy of his response in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: During my visit to Cumbernauld and Kilsyth district council on 16 February, Councillor Murray gave me a letter about the distribution of resources for housing projects within the district. I do not consider it appropriate for me to place a copy of Councillor Murray's letter in the Library, or a copy of the reply.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria his Department applies to district councils seeking grants for housing modernisation and improvements; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department does not give grants to district councils for this purpose. Capital allocations for local authorities' housing capital programmes are determined each year, within the aggregate public expenditure resources that can be made available, on the basis of the relative needs of individual authorities.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent advice his Department has given to district councils on the allocation of grants for having modernisation and improvements; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department issued a circular to local authorities on 16 January advising them of an amendment to the scheme of assistance for eligible owners of houses designed as defective under part XIV of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. The Department also issued a circular on 14 June 1989 concerning the preparation of housing plans by authorities and the relationship of these to capital programmes.

Radon Gas

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on levels of radon gas in the Aberdeen area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Measurements of radon gas levels in homes in the Grampian region have been carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB). The average value found in a representative sample is 16 Bq m^{-3} (becquerel per cubic metre of air). In Aberdeen city and in parts of Kincardine and Deeside district, additional measurements were made. The average for Aberdeen city is 18 Bq m^{-3} and the average for Kincardine and Deeside is 105 Bq m^{-3}. These values are to be compared with the average for the whole of the United Kingdom of about 20 Bq m^{-3}. The NRPB estimates that between 0·3 per cent. and 1·0 per cent. of homes in the Grampian region will exceed the new action level of 200 Bq m^{-3} advised by the NRPB.

The NRPB, on behalf of the Scottish Office, is carrying out further measurements in those areas where high levels have been discovered. These measurements are expected to be completed by the end of the year. In the meantime, the Government will continue to offer free radon measurements by the NRPB, available on demand to any householder in an area with potential for high radon levels. Also, grants continue to be available, through the present improvement grant system for any remedial action which may be necessary.

Innerclyde Enterprise Zone

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library an explanatory note and any other relevant documents setting out the terms on which the Commission of the European Communities approved the designation of the Inverclyde enterprise zone.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 February 1990]: In accordance with usual procedures, the Government's intention to create a new enterprise zone in Inverclyde and the European Commission's decision to raise no objection to the proposed measure were dealt with in an exchange of letters between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Commission of the European Communities. It is not normal practice to publish such correspondence. The Commission's approval was subject to the standard terms and conditions regarding observance of the Community rules and regulations applicable to such measures.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Roads (Ireland)

54. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the list of approved and unapproved roads between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Ryder: The list of routes approved for traffic with the Republic of Ireland is being reviewed by Customs and Excise at the present time. This is linked to the introduction of computer-assisted processing of customs declarations.

Child Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what proportion of those families with children will receive more in child benefit than they pay out in income tax in the current financial year.

Mr. Lilley: In 1989-90, an estimated 2·3 million families will receive more in child benefit than they pay in income tax. This represents about a third of all families with children. Estimates are based on a projection of the 1987 family expenditure survey and are subject to revision.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total take for corporation taxes as a percentage of gross domestic product, and of company incomes for each year from 1979-80, including his estimate of the outturn for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: The available information is as follows:

[3] Total company income in the calendar year as defined in the national accounts, net of interest payments.

Reliable estimates for the current year are not yet available.

Mortgages

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the median mortgage for residential property in each year since 1970 and the ratio of that median to the median annual earnings of the full-time adult male manual and non-manual worker, respectively.

Mr. Ryder: Information for 1978 to 1988 on median mortgages issued by building societies on residential property is published by the DOE in "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988", table 10.13. Tables 10.20 and 10.22 in the same publication contain information on the size distribution of bank and insurance company mortgages respectively, from which medians may be calculated. Earlier information for building society mortgages only is contained in previous editions of "Housing and Construction Statistics". Median gross weekly earnings in April of each year for full-time adult male manual and non-manual employees are published by the Department of Employment in table 15, part A, of the new earnings survey reports. Figures for 1970 to 1978 can be found in the 1978 report and for 1979 to 1989 in the 1989 report.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1970 his estimate of the number of mortgages for residential property together with (a) the average amount of mortgage, (b) average earnings of full-time adult male manual and non-manual workers, respectively, (c) average earnings of full-time adult female manual and non-manual workers, respectively, and (d) the number of workers in (b) and (c).

Mr. Ryder: Information on numbers of mortgage advances on residential property and average advances is published by the DOE in "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988", table 10.4. Information for years previous to 1978 is available for building societies only in previous editions of "Housing and Construction Statistics". Average gross weekly earnings in April of each year for full-time adult male and female manual and non-manual employees are published by the Department of Employment in table 15, part A of the new earnings survey reports. Figures for 1970 to 1978 can be found in the 1978 report and for 1979 to 1989 in the 1989 report. Disaggregated data on employment are published in the Employment Gazette, December 1989, table 1.10, and in previous editions of the Gazette.

Conveyancing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing for each year from 1970 the number of conveyances of residential property, the average value, and the ratio of that value to median earnings of (a) all full-time adult male workers and (b) all full-time adult male manual workers.

Mr. Lilley: Annual information on the numbers and value of conveyances in England and Wales is not available for years prior to 1986. Figures for 1986 to 1988 are available in table 15.1 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1989". Figures for the average price of dwellings purchased with a building society mortgage can be found in table 105 of the 1969-79 and table 10.11 of the 1978-88 editions of "Housing and Construction Statistics". Median earnings figures can be found in section 6 of the 1977, 1986 and 1990 editions of "Annual Abstract of Statistics".

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing for 1978 and 1983 the number of conveyances of residential property in each region, the average value, and the ratio of that value to median earnings of all full-time adult male workers.

Mr. Lilley: Annual information on the numbers and value of conveyances in England and Wales is not available for years prior to 1986.

Rateable Values

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the average rateable value of the highest and lowest 5 per cent. of rated dwellings.

Mr. Lilley: This information could not be produced without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for England and Wales the total rateable values of residential property at the time of the last revaluation together with the estimated capital value; and whether he will provide in each case the proportion accounted for by the half with the lowest values.

Mr. Lilley: As the book "Inland Revenue Statistics 1989" shows, the total rateable value of residential property in England and Wales at 1 April 1973 is £4,032 million. The information on capital value is contained in the book "UK National Accounts 1989." The other information could not be produced without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the highest and lowest 5 per cent. of gross incomes the percentage of gross incomes paid in income tax and national insurance contributions in (a) 1978-79, (b) 1988-89 and (c) 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: Information is given in the table; estimates are based on the distributions in 1978-79, 1988-89 and 1989-90 of the gross earnings and investment income of married couples and single people aged under 65 who would be liable to pay income tax or national insurance contributions. The estimates for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

Married Couples and Single People Aged Under 65 Liable to Income Tax and National Insurance Contributions Ranged by Gross Income

Distribution by Gross Income	Proportion of Gross Income paid in income tax and NIC
	1978-79 per cent.	1988-89 per cent.	1989-90 per cent.
Lowest 5 per cent. [1]	9	6	5
Highest 5 per cent. [1]	34	29	29

[1] The lowest/highest 5 per cent. each contain (a) 970,000 married couples and single people in 1978-79, (b) 990,000 in 1988-89, and (c) 1 million in 1989-90.

Independent Taxation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many households will gain as a result of the proposals for independent taxation; how many could potentially gain because of the ability of husband and wife to swap investment income; and what is the income distribution of these households;

(2) how many households will pay less in taxation as a proportion of household income as a result of the introduction of independent taxation; and what is (a) the income distribution and (b) the regional distribution of these households.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 February 1990]: Available information is given in the table. Estimates are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

Privatisation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total sale price received and the net asset value of each public undertaking sold since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lilley [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1990, c. 963]: I regret that the table relating to my answer was omitted; it is as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Malicious Communications

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria the Crown prosecution service follows when deciding whether to bring a prosecution under the Malicious Communications Act; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The criteria which the Crown prosecution service follows when deciding whether to prosecute any offence, including any under this Act, are set out in the code for Crown prosecutors promulgated under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. These are that there is sufficient admissible, substantial and reliable evidence to afford a realistic prospect of a conviction and that the public interest requires a prosecution.

Authorised Practitioners

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General what will be the extra manpower involved in carrying out the new responsibilities proposed in the Courts and Legal Services Bill in respect of authorised practitioners; and what is the anticipated extra financial cost.

The Attorney-General: The annual cost of the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board, the conveyancing ombudsman and the conveyancing appeal tribunals is anticipated to be approximately £0·9 million in its first full year. The secretariats and support staff will require about 15 staff and the board itself, the ombudsman and the tribunal members will total a maximum of 13 individuals. It is intended that the board, the ombudsman and their secretariats should be self-financing and that any initial Government funding should decrease as quickly as possible. It is not possible, however, to estimate at this stage how much of any Government grant might be recouped from fees.

Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to meet the Director of Public Prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I frequently meet the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss matters of departmental interest. Such meetings are arranged as and when necessary.

House of Fraser

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Attorney-General whether the criminal investigation into matters raised by the report by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors into the House of Fraser has been concluded; and when he expects the Serious Fraud Office to reach a decision on prosecution.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions and the director of the Serious Fraud Office have today issued the following statement:

"The Report of the Inspectors appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry was passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Director of the Serious Fraud Office on 14th July 1988. After careful consideration of the Report and the accompanying evidence, the Directors jointly referred the matter to the Metropolitan Police on 24th November 1988 and asked for necessary enquiries to be carried out. Following the request of the Directors, the Secretary of State witheld publication of the Report.

The Directors are now satisfied that all lines of enquiry have been pursued and that the evidence available is insufficient to afford a realistic prospect of conviction for any criminal offence relating to any matter of substance raised in the Report.

The Secretary of State has accordingly been informed that the Directors withdraw their objections to the publication of the Inspectors' Report."

HOME DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Court, Crawley

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to build a new magistrates court in Crawley.

Mr. John Patten: West Sussex county council has sought Home Office grant approval for the extension of Crawley magistrates courthouse to provide an additional courtroom. The council has not yet submitted a first stage investment appraisal, and will need to do so before a building start date can be considered.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each category of parliamentary questions which it is his policy not to answer.

Mr. Waddington: Of those questions not transferred, none.

Violent Crime (Compensation)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the nations that have signed the European convention on reciprocal compensation for victims of violent crime, and give details of the representations that have been made to those European nations which have not yet signed the convention.

Mr. John Patten: The Council of Europe convention on the compensation of victims of violent crimes, which lays down minimum standards for national arrangements for payment of compensation, was signed by the United Kingdom when it was opened for signature on 24 November 1983. The other signatory states are Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Turkey.

The convention came into force on 1 February 1988. On 7 February 1990, we joined Denmark, France, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Sweden as contracting states. The convention will come into force in relation to the United Kingdom on 1 June 1990, and we shall take every opportunity to encourage other countries to adopt it.

There have been various calls in both the Council of Europe and the European Community for states to sign and ratify this convention.

Prison Service

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Oxford, East on 19 February, Official Report, column 595, what was the cost of the contract awarded to the PA Consulting Group for its review of the prison service organisation above establishment level from its commencement until the end of its first extension in December 1989.

Mr. Mellor: The projected price of the contract was £271,230, and £255,740 has been paid to date. Both sums include VAT.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the role of the PA Consulting Group on the studies which led to changes in working practices in prison establishments, known as "fresh start"; and what was the cost of their work.

Mr. Mellor: PA Management Consultants were engaged by the prison service in September 1985 to assist in studies of complementing in prisons and of the shift systems worked by prison officers. PA's role was limited to that of bringing to bear knowledge and skills, for example in the complex area of adapting shift arrangements to the grouping of work arrangements which, at the time, were unavailable within the Home Office to the extent required by the exercise.

As part of this work, PA advised the prison service on the development of its "fresh start" proposals, which were put to prison service unions in February 1987, although they took no part in the subsequent negotiations. PA consultants also provided advice on the implementation of the proposals, including development work and training, and they assisted in the running of an evaluation of "fresh start" during November 1987. Their further assistance was used in the drawing up and implementation of an action plan, based on the evaluation, to ensure the development and establishment of best practice across all prison establishments.

The total cost of PA's services for work undertaken over a four-year period in respect of "fresh start" was £948,720·90. This amount includes expenses and VAT as well as fees.

Young Offenders

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of males under the age of 17 years appearing before the courts in England and Wales during 1988;

(2) what was the total number of males under the age of 17 years who appeared in courts in Wales during 1988.

Mr. John Patten: In 1988 in England and Wales, 43,600 males under the age of 17 were prosecuted for indictable offences, of whom 3,300 appeared before the Welsh courts.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of males under the age of 17 years who were remanded into prisons and remand centres in England and Wales during 1988.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the number of males aged 14 to 16 received on remand into prison service establishments in England and Wales is published annually in "Prison statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.6 of the latest volume, for 1988, Cm 825) copies of which are in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to reply to the letter of 13 June 1989, and the reminders of 14 September 1989, 25 October 1989 and 21 December 1989, from the hon. Member for Livingston on behalf of his constituent Mr. Wali Mohammed, his reference M294411.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to the hon. Member on 27 February.

HGVs (Roadside Checks)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces co-operate with local authority trading standards officers or environmental health officers in roadside checks of heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All police forces participate in roadside checks of heavy goods vehicles where resources permit, and, where appropriate, roadside check sites are available.

Terrorist Suspects (Interviews)

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the tape recording of interviews with suspected terrorists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Tape recording of summaries of interviews with suspected terrorists, and of their comments on the summary, is to be introduced on an experimental basis by the Metropolitan and Merseyside police from Monday 5 March. The experiment will run for two years and will be monitored by the research and planning unit of the Home Office, reporting to a steering committee which includes representatives of the police, the Crown prosecution service, the Criminal Bar Association and the Law Society. I have placed a copy of the relevant notes of guidance in the Library.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service Unions

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will take steps to improve communications with the Civil Service unions.

Mr. Luce: I believe that in general the present arrangements for communications with the Civil Service unions work well.

ENERGY

Atomic Energy Development (Files)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he requested that any files relating to atomic energy development should be withheld from release on 1 January under sections 3(4) and 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958.

Mr. Baldry: In accordance with established criteria, my Department has requested that certain files in the category referred to by the hon. Member should be withheld. It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose the contents of records which are so withheld from public release.

Reactor Projects

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom involvement in, and future financial commitment to (a) the international thermonuclear experimental reactor, (b) the next European Torus and (c) the compact ignition Tokamak fusion reactor projects.

Mr. Baldry: The proposed new framework programme for Community research and development for the period 1990-94 includes provision for continuing work on a "next step" fusion reactor. The international thermonuclear experimental reactor is the subject of collaboration in conceptual design between Euratom, Japan, the USA and the USSR which is due to be completed at the end of 1990. The United Kingdom is involved only through Euratom.

The design of the next European Torus is being defined by a small team based at Garching in Germany. The UKAEA is a party to the agreement setting up the team and makes a modest contribution by providing staff. Extension of either project to engineering design would require a further decision by the Council of Ministers.

I understand that the compact ignition Tokamak fusion reactor is a United States project in which the United Kingdom is not involved.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he is reviewing his policy on the fitting of flue gas desulphurisation to 12 GW of coal-burning electricity generating capacity;

(2) if he will make it his policy to deal with coal-burning power station emission problems by means of combustion process controls as distinct from importing low-sulphur content coal;

(3) what effect he envisages on the make-up of British Coal, after the current three-year contract with the principal generators, if flue gas desulphurisation proceeds only at the 4 GW Drax project.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are determined to implement in full the EC large combustion plants directive. This directive commits the United Kingdom to reduce its emissions of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides from existing plants, such as fossil-fuelled power stations, but does not specify the means by which this has to be done. It is for the electricity industry to plan how it will achieve its share of these reductions. The fitting of flue gas desulphurisation equipment will play an important part. Other measures, such as the burning of low-sulphur fuels, including gas, are also likely to contribute.

The scale of future purchases of British coal by the generators will be a matter for their commercial judgment. The best protection for the United Kingdom coal industry would be for it to produce secure supplies of coal at competitive prices.

Low-sulphur Coal

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to consider the sustainability of supplies, long-term price, and balance of payments effects of low-sulphur coal as part of a review of his Department's policy on coal-burning power stations.

Mr. Baldry: The source and cost of low-sulphur coal is a matter for the electricity generation industry.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what forecasts he has made of the long-term effects on British Coal (a) nationally and (b) in the east midlands region, of a policy of importing low-sulphur content coal.

Mr. Baldry: None. Such forecasts are a commercial matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Oil Imports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the proportion of oil imports to the United Kingdom used (a) in the manufacture of automobiles, buses and road haulage vehicles and (b) for fuelling road transport.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is not available.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when flotation of National Power and PowerGen will take place.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Erewash (Mr. Rost) and for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) on 28 February 1990 at column 226.

United Kingdom Petroleum Production

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the Government's latest forecasts of levels of United Kingdom petroleum production.

Mr. Wakeham: The latest forecasts for United Kingdom petroleum production in the years 1990 to 1994 are as follows:

	Million tonnes
1990	85-110
1991	80-110
1992	80-110
1993	85-115
1994	80-120

As in previous years, the forecasts are presented in the form of a range of outcomes for each year. These take into account the many uncertainties involved. The figures comprise stabilised crude oil, natural gas liquids and condensates. NGL and condensate production is expected to contribute between 5 and 10 million tonnes annually to the above.

PRIME MINISTER

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Q40. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister which of the conditions which were agreed at the Madrid meeting of the European Council as a basis for the United Kingdom joining the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system have not yet been met; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There has been significant progress on capital liberalisation, in competition policy and liberalisation of financial services, but further important decisions have yet to be taken. Further progress is needed to get inflation down.

German Unification

Q84. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has held recent discussions with (a) Chancellor Kohl and (b) other European Community state leaders on the subject of the unification of the two German states.

The Prime Minister: I last met Chancellor Kohl at the European Council in Strasbourg in December. Other EC Heads of State or Government were also present. We had a useful discussion of the question of German unity. This was reflected in the Council's declaration.

Walderslade, Chatham

Q.116 Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Walderslade, Chatham.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Q.125 Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for St. David's day.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 March.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had a meeting with the President of the European Parliament and presided at a meeting of the Cabinet. I also had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Environment

Q.142 Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on environmental issues.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received very many positive representations, particularly in relation to the proposals in the Environment Protection Bill.

Confederation of British Wool Textiles

Q.164 Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to the Confederation of British Wool Textiles office in Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I visited a textile mill during my regional tour to Bradford yesterday and was most impressed by the quality and enthusiasm of the staff and the excellence of the products.

European Community

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the programme for establishing the single market; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the trade which certain members of the Community have secured during the period of agreed European Economic Community sanctions; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Community has trade sanctions in place against South Africa only. Beyond the very limited scope of these, it is for individual member states to pursue trading relationships with South Africa as they see fit.

Policy Unit Staff

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the professional background of those joining her policy unit since 1979.

The Prime Minister: Those joining my policy unit since 1979 have had a variety of experience in a range of professions including:

Accountancy
Administration
Banking
Business management
Company directorship
Economics
Engineering
Finance
Industry
Investment analysis
Journalism.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will take steps to establish a ministerial working group to study the problems of coastal protection and sea defences and to co-ordinate the work of the various Departments concerned.

The Prime Minister: The policy responsibility for coast protection and sea defence rests, in England, with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and elsewhere with the territorial Departments. There may be direct or indirect implications for other concerns but such co-ordination as may be necessary is already carried out with the relevant Departments.

Office Running Costs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will detail the reasons for the increase in the costs of running her office from £6·55 million in 1988 to £7·9 million in 1989; and what steps she is taking to reduce this increase.

The Prime Minister: The estimated increase in costs is due almost entirely to capital expenditure on refurbishment work and security improvements. The increase in the normal running costs of my office is less than one half of one percentage point in real terms.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to ensure the security and non-infiltration of the Ernie draw by unauthorised persons.

The Prime Minister: All payments of premium bond prizes are made to winning investors, selected at random. The relevant accounts are audited by the National Audit Office, and the Department for National Savings is satisfied that there is no scope for abuse of the system.

TRANSPORT

A31, West Moors

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long it will take to intall safety fencing along the A31 trunk road at West Moors between Pinehurst roundabout and Boundary lane; and what are the reasons for the time taken.

Mr. Atkins: The work will take about three months. This is because of the need for carriageway works to enable the central reserve to be widened to accommodate the 850m long safety fence without interfering with statutory undertakers' services.

Traffic (London)

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many communications he had received at the close of 28 February of consultation on traffic in London and the London road assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It will take a little while to collate and analyse the responses received. We shall make a statement as soon as possible.

A41, Apex Corner

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects the road works on the A41 at Apex corner, where the turning into Mount grove has been closed, to be completed; and if he will take steps to ensure that, once the central gap has been reopened, it will remain open on permanent basis.

Mr. Atkins: The works are expected to be completed in spring 1991. The right turn into Mount grove will then be restored. There are no plans to close it permanently. I shall continue to have regard to the safety of the trunk road network and will take appropriate safety measures wherever they are shown to be necessary.

"A Change in the Air"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will obtain a copy of the transcript and video cassette of the television programme "A Change In The Air", on transport pollution, broadcast on 25 February, for his departmental library.

Mr. Atkins: We have already ordered the video. We do not need the transcript as well.

Channel Ferries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review transport safety conditions and emergency rescue plans for cross-Channel ferries carrying toxic chemicals and spent nuclear fuel unable to dock in channel ports due to storms during the past month.

Mr. McLoughlin: Ships which carry dangerous goods conform to the international maritime regulations regarding construction, equipment and manning, and are capable of riding out storms of the type recently experienced in the English Channel. It is the decision of the ship's master whether or not to leave port.

Contingency arrangements already exist to deal with pollution arising from chemical spillages, or to recover irradiated fuel flasks from the seabed.

Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives he has taken to inform the public of the various transport options available with regard to their comparative pollution effects.

Mr. Atkins: My Department publishes annually in "Transport Statistics Great Britain" trends in emissions of pollutants from different transport modes. Pollution emitted by road vehicles is related to fuel consumption. My Department regularly issues a booklet about the fuel consumption of new cars which also advises motorists on how to save fuel when driving. It is generally well known that pollution may be reduced if people use public transport instead of private cars.

M1 (Congestion)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute a service advising motorists of those times on each day of the week that they can drive in either direction between junctions 6 and 12 of the M1 without being subjected to delays through congestion; and if he will make it his policy to update this advice each time a significant roadwork is commenced or completed and in any event once every three months.

Mr. Atkins: The Department regards the provision of travel information as extremely important, and is considering with interested organisations ways of improving the reliability and availability of information through better arrangements for its collection, co-ordination and dissemination.

Congestion on the M1 between junctions 6 and 12 occurs more commonly during peak periods, of which the travelling public is generally aware. It can also arise for a number of unforeseen reasons, for example after an accident. The police, the media and motoring organisations provide an important service in disseminating news about congestion when it occurs.

Information is already made widely available when roadworks are in prospect, in operation or about to finish. Only on Tuesday I gave a press conference about works due to commence on both the M1 and M25 in Hertfordshire. I am concerned that drivers should receive more information about delays and the reasons for them. With this in mind, new signs are being displayed in advance of roadworks advising drivers of the work being undertaken.

Hackney Cabs

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to reform the hackney cab knowledge test outside London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Outside London, district councils are the licensing authorities for hackney carriages. It is a matter for them whether to require prospective hackney carriage drivers to undertake a geographical knowledge test for the area in which a licence would apply. The Government have no plans to propose the removal of that discretionary power.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hungary

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Hungary.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is currently in Hungary. He arrived on 27 February and will leave on 1 March. He will be holding talks with Dr. Horn, the Foreign Minister, and other members of the Government, and will be meeting representatives of the major opposition parties.

South Africa (Sanctions)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) submissions have been received and (b) meetings have been organised with Government representatives from each Commonwealth country since August 1989 on the subject of trade sanctions and South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: There were wide-ranging talks on South Africa at CHOGM in October 1989. Since then, there has been discussion of South Africa at both official and ministerial level as part of our normal contacts with Commonwealth Governments.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the procedures adopted by the European Economic Community to ensure that Community sanctions legislation relating to South Africa is adhered to by member states.

Mr. Waldegrave: As with any legislation adopted by the EEC, the Commission has the duty under the treaty to ensure that it is enforced and applied by member states.

Angola

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to enforce the ceasefire agreed last year between the warring parties in Angola.

Mr. Waldegrave: The terms of any settlement of the dispute in Angola are for the MPLA Government of Angola and UNITA to decide. We have consistently stressed to both sides the need for an early ceasefire and negotiations without preconditions, and we support President Mobutu's work as mediator.

Ethiopia

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the civil war in Ethiopia.

Mr. Waldegrave: After a long lull in the fighting in Eritrea, the Eritrean People's Liberation Front launched a major offensive on 8 February. The fighting is still going on, but it appears that the port of Massawa is in EPLF hands. In their statement of 20 February, the Twelve expressed deep concern about the implications of the renewed fighting for the famine relief operations which are urgently required, and for the prospects for peace negotiations.

South Africa

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has had with the Government of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We maintain regular contact with the South African authorities on a wide range of issues, both here and via Her Majesty's ambassador.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to the provision of funds to the African National Congress and other political parties in South Africa to assist with the development of democracy.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is a case for practical assistance to those in South Africa who have previously been excluded from the political process. We are considering what practical help we can give in a non-discriminatory way.

Arms Reductions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the position of the Bush Administration on the exclusion of certain air-launched missiles from the strategic arms reduction talks negotiations.

Mr. Waldegrave: Both the United States and the Soviet Union take the view that since these negotiations concern only strategic weapons, air-launched cruise missiles below a certain range should be excluded. The difference is that the Soviet Union want all such missiles with ranges of more than 600 km to be accountable, while the United States wants a higher range threshold.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government support the position of the Bush Administration on exclusion of air-launched missiles with a range of less than 1,500 km from the strategic arms reduction talks negotiations.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United States and the Soviet Union have not yet agreed on the range at which strategic nuclear air-launched cruise missiles would become accountable under a START agreement. The START negotiations are between the United States and Soviet Union, and it is for them to reach an understanding on this issue.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the position of the Bush Administration on exclusion of air-launched missiles with a range of less than 1,500 km from the strategic arms reduction talks negotiations has been discussed in any official NATO meeting.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United States regularly briefs its allies at official NATO meetings on progress in the strategic arms reduction talks, including the situation regarding air-launched cruise missiles.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff in his Department are currently allocated to work on nuclear non-proliferation; and if he has any plans to increase the departmental commitment to this work.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are 11 members of this Department working full-time on nuclear non-proliferation, including missile proliferation. In addition, there are a number of staff, both home-based and at posts abroad, who contribute to this work. There are no plans at present to increase the number of staff devoted to this issue.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to disseminate information to schools, colleges, universities, non-governmental organisations and other interested parties on the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The arms control and disarmament research unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office publishes notes on arms control on an approximately monthly basis, and a quarterly review. Both documents are circulated to a wide range of educational establishments and other organisations on request. Information about the non-proliferation treaty and the fourth review conference is regularly included.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent visit to Czechoslovakia, the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), or his accompanying officials raised the forthcoming fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with his hosts.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of any improvement or deterioration in the human rights situation in East Timor in recent years.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received diplomatic and other reports which confirm that there has been a sustained improvement in respect for human rights in East Timor in recent years. We have received reports of incidents which give rise to concern during the second half of 1989. We are watching the situation closely.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received concerning the execution of four people who had been in detention for over 24 years in Jakarta on 17 February.

Mr. Saimbury: The Indonesian Army confirms that four persons were executed on 16 February (Syryanto, Surono, Soleiman and Rohayan). There are unconfirmed reports of the execution of two others. On 21 February, the Twelve expressed their regret in the Presidency address to the UN Commission on Human Rights that these executions were carried out so long after conviction.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the occupation of East Timor by Indonesia.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our policy with regard to the annexation of East Timor by Indonesia is to support the UN Secretary-General's role in promoting a settlement between Indonesia and Portugal. We believe that both parties will be concerned to find a settlement which fully protects the interests of the people of East Timor.

Namibia

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures Her Majesty's Government propose to take to help the Namibian economy.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are actively discussing with the future Government of Namibia how we can best help them after independence, in particular through the aid programme.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Brazil

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there has been further progress on the approval of projects under the memorandum of understanding with Brazil since the Minister for Overseas Development's reply to the hon. Member for Fylde of 15 February, Official Report, column 350.

Mrs. Chalker: As I announced earlier this week, the first project has now been approved by the Brazilian Government. This is an important five-year climate research project, involving the Institute of Hydrology. We are contributing some £2·5 million. The first field mission will start this September. We are continuing our discussions with the Brazilian Government on other project proposals.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have any plans to cut their aid to Indonesia in the light of continued human rights abuses there.

Mrs. Chalker: In determining the appropriate level of United Kingdom aid to individual countries, the Government take account of a number of factors, including the importance of human rights. Indonesia is in the low-income group of developing countries and we believe that the current level of British aid to Indonesia is appropriate in current circumstances.

WALES

Welsh Language

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many tutors are employed in a full-time capacity in Wales to teach the Welsh language to adults; and whether his Department has any plans to increase the number of full-time tutors of Welsh for adults.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally. We are making available some £305,000 this year to colleges, voluntary bodies and other providers of adult education to help support activity in this area. We are currently considering the level of support for 1990-91.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to help and sustain the Welsh language and culture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The proposals for the introduction of Welsh in the national curriculum in Wales will provide the single most important boost to the Welsh language over the years to come. All other policies in support of the language will therefore complement and support what is happening in schools.

In addition, the Government provide financial support for Welsh language and culture by way of grants to a wide range of organisations involved with the use and promotion of the language. Direct grant support in 1989-90 amounted to some £4·4 million. This figure will increase next year by 30 per cent. to a total of £5·9 million. My right hon. Friend will continue to look to the Welsh Language Board for advice in relation to all matters to do with the language and on how these grants can be harnessed to the greatest effect.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been dispensed to Welsh local authorities in grants for bilingual education under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 in each year since that Act came into force; how much he anticipates will have been granted by the end of the present financial year; and how much he has allocated for this purpose in the 1990-91 financial year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with the information requested and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Health Care

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to set up a fund to help meet the additional travel expenses of relatives of patients who have been referred to treatment centres outside their own health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It will be for the patients concerned to assess the relative benefits of earlier treatment at the centres, including the possibility of additional travel for themselves and their relatives, compared with waiting for treatment more locally. As with any other hospital services, visitors on low incomes can apply for help with their travelling expenses to and from the centres from the Department of Social Security. We do not propose to introduce any additional assistance for the relatives of patients in treatment centres.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact on general practitioners' clinical responsibility of the decision to exclude general practitioners from referring their patients directly to treatment centres.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of general practitioners regarding his decision not to allow general practitioners to refer patients directly to treatment centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has received no requests to meet representatives of general practitioners to discuss treatment centres. The centres will not impinge on general practitioners' clinical responsibility. GPs will continue to refer new patients direct to hospitals of their choice, which will in turn continue to treat the majority of patients. Treatment centres are an additional resource to offer patients already waiting the choice of earlier treatment.

This principle would be undermined if general practitioners were to refer new patients to treatment centres direct since the centres would then be likely to build up their own waiting lists. However, the operational policies of the ophthalmology and general surgery centres provide for re-referrals by general practitioners of patients who have been waiting on inpatient lists for more than four months. The policy of the orthopaedic centre in this respect will be kept under review.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many health authorities have agreed contracts with private companies for the provision of health services to National Health Service patients in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra cash he will allocate to each of the Welsh health authorities to maintain current levels of services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 11 January at columns 725-27, when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the revenue and capital allocations to health authorities in Wales for 1990-91.

I would also refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North on 12 February at columns 12-13 in which my right hon. Friend announced the distribution of almost £10 million which had been reserved for schemes to be centrally funded under the programme for the valleys initiative.

Further announcements will be made in due course about the distribution of other sums reserved for centrally directed developments in 1990-91.

Finally, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 1 February at columns 260-62, when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that further revenue provision would be made available to health authorities in 1990-91 (over and above the sum announced on 11 January) in respect of pay awards to staff covered by the review bodies arrangement. The distribution of this additional provision will depend upon staff in post and will be notified to authorities as soon as possible.

South Gwent Health Unit

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to have discussions with the trade unions involved before authorising proposals for revised management arrangements for the South Gwent health unit.

Mr. Grist: No. We are satisfied with the existing arrangements for the consideration of DHAs' revised management arrangements involving consideration by the executive committee of the Health Policy Board.

I understand, however, that in formulating its proposals Gwent health authority has consulted trade unions and this will be borne in mind by the executive committee. After further local consultation the authority will submit the proposals to the Department for approval.

Religious Education

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to improve the teaching of religious education in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Education Reform Act enhances the place of religious education in the school curriculum, and central support is available to local education authorities which undertake in-service teacher training in the subject.

Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instigate investigations into the rates of incidence of cancer near nuclear installations in Wales following the recent report on Sellafield.

Mr. Grist: Analysis of the data available from the Wales cancer registry is under way. The data require careful scrutiny and validation. When the results are ready, I will make a statement.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what trends he is able to identify in respect of the incidence rates of various forms of cancer (a) in Wales as a whole and (b) in each district in Wales; and what information he has on trends in such incidence rates in the United Kingdom generally.

Mr. Grist: Information on the individual incidence rates and trends of cancer within Wales is presented in the Welsh Office publication "Cancer Registration in Wales, 1974-1984".

Figures for England and Wales are available from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication "Cancer statistics: registrations", while data for Scotland appear in "Scottish Health Statistics" published by the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service. Information on cancer registrations for Northern Ireland appear in the Department of Health and Social Services "Statistics and Research Bulletin".

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, in the light of the Gardner report, he will commission fresh independent research into the incidence of leukaemia in north Wales and into the causes of high incidence of specific types of cancer in any part of Wales.

Mr. Grist: Welsh cancer registration data are kept under regular review. Where it appears that the rate of incidence of any particular form of cancer is significantly higher than would be expected consideration is given to the need for, and the most appropriate form of, investigation into possible causes.

Additionally, as announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health on 15 February, the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment plans detailed epidemiological studies to obtain more information on the possible health effects in the offspring of parents occupationally exposed to radiation. These studies should start in the near future.

Community Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he will make a statement setting out his proposals for independent inspection units for community care services in Wales;

(2) whether he will make it his policy that independent inspection units for community care in Wales shall regularly review and report on the provision of services within the boundaries of each district authority in their area of responsibility;

(3) whether he will make it his policy that there shall be an independent inspection unit for the area of each local authority in Wales which has responsibility for social services.

Mr. Grist: A consultation paper on the setting up of independent inspection units in Wales has recently been widely circulated. Copies have been placed in the Library. Policy decisions on the establishment and operation of these units will be taken following consideration of the comments received as a result of the consultation exercise and the deliberations of a working group comprising representatives of the independent and public sectors which has been set up to consider the issue.

ENVIRONMENT

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the application of the new uniform business rate arrangements to the sale and purchase of small businesses.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on the question of the cessation of transitional protection when the rateable occupier of a business property, large or small, changes.

Radon Gas

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further advice is being given to householders affected by radon gas as to how to tackle the problem; and what efforts are being made to ensure that builders etc. contacted by the public to tackle radon problems give correct advice to the householders.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The advice already available to householders affected by concentrations of radon in "The Householders' Guide to Radon" is still valid. A second edition is currently being prepared to take account of the new action level.

The building research establishment is engaged in a continuing programme of research on tackling radon problems and the results of this will be published in the form of practical advice for builders and others as they become available. Meanwhile, where owners of buildings are uncertain about the best way to proceed, they should consult the building research establishment.

Household Waste (Incineration)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in England and Wales use incinerators to dispose of suitable household waste; and what plans he has to encourage more disposal of such rubbish by this method in the future.

Mr. Trippier: There are 30 municipal incinerators currently operated by local authorities in England and Wales and these dispose of some 8 per cent. of household waste. There is, however, no centrally held information on the number of local authorities which make use of these incinerators.

The Government encourage local authorities to employ the best practicable environmental means for the dispesal of their waste. It is for them to determine what that may be in the light of local circumstances.

Industrial Pollution

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a video tape and copy of the transcript of the "Northern Eye" programme on industrial pollution in Teesside, broadcast on 15 February.

Mr. Trippier: My Department already has copies of the transcript. It is unnecessary to have a copy of the video.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of contracts awarded by the Property Services Agency for each of the last three years were carried out by private building contractors; and what were their total values for each year.

Mr. Chope: All new construction work for the Property Services Agency is undertaken by private sector contractors. In the last three years, the proportion of maintenance work undertaken by the private sector has remained steady, at about 85 per cent.

The aggregate value of all of this work, at cash prices, was:

	£ million
1986-87	1,794
1987-88	1,827
1988-89	1,978

Local Government Finance

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of his Department towards attribution of liability for the community charge in respect of persons resident in buildings bisected by a district boundary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The rules for such buildings are set out in part V of the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989/438). Broadly, a building is deemed to fall within the area of the charging authority which contains its greater or greatest part. Any person subject to a community charge by virtue of residence in the building will be subject to the community charge of that area only.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his written reply dated 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable per adult for each region and so on, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for Humberside the estimated percentage of the adult population, including spouses, now paying rates; the percentage expected to be chargeable to the poll tax; and the percentage expected to contribute the same or less than at present as a result of the proposed increase of 29 per cent. in the rate/taxpayer's contribution.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not available.

Westminster Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the figure of the equivalent of £60 per head was arrived at for Westminster council's land drainage grant.

Mr. Chope: I have no knowledge of any "land drainage grant" for Westminster council.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the National Rivers Authority was consulted about Westminster's contribution to flood control expenses before it was decided how much central Government's grant to Westminster council would be.

Mr. Chope: The standard spending assessment element for flood defence is based on net current expenditure in 1989-90, as defined in annex A of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England). This information was available without consulting the National Rivers Authority.

House Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the ratio of house prices to earnings in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany and (c) France.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Personal Transport

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the environmental effects of increased personal transport opportunities in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the Department of Transport's recent publication "Trunk Roads, England—Into the 1990s", and in particular to chapter 5.

"A Change in the Air"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to obtain a copy of the transcript and video cassette of the television programme "A Change In The Air" broadcast on 25 February.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Automobile Manufacturing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual output of chemical toxic emissions from the automobile manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not collected or held centrally in the Department.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what volume of environmentally damaging solvents are typically released into the atmosphere from the paint spraying of an automobile on the production line; and what policies he has to reduce this pollution.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested on the specific solvent emissions from automobile spraying is not available.

The United Kingdom Government are engaged with other signatories to the UN Economic Commission for Europe convention on long-range transport of air pollution in the production of a draft protocol for the reduction of volatile organic compound emissions.

Within the European Community we are discussing measures to reduce photochemical pollution. These will include reductions of VOC emissions.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is preparing guidance defining the best available techniques not entailing excessive costs to reduce solvent emissions from large-scale automobile spraying.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what volumes of toxic wastes are created annually from the manufacture of automobiles and road haulage vehicles in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held centrally.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 411, whether all existing power stations will, in time, be required to be fitted with flue gas desulphurisation.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution regard the fitting of flue gas desulphurisation equipment as the best practicable means for limiting emissions of sulphur dioxide from coal or oil-fired power stations. Existing plant is required eventually to attain new plant standards if its lifetime justifies this.

Common Land

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 27 November 1989, Official Report, column 89, when he will make a statement on the Government's intentions on common land legislation.

Mr. Trippier: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 11 January 1990, at column 683.

Combustion Plants

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce a stated timetable for upgrading existing registered large combustion plants.

Mr. Trippier: I have already made clear our commitment to the timetable for reducing emissions from large combustion plants enshrined in the European Community directive. The detailed plan will be published at the time required by the directive.

Emission Reduction Plan

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish the consultation paper on the proposed national emission reduction plan prior to the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Trippier: Yes.

Pollution Abatement Technology

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the emission reduction plan will evaluate the cost-effectiveness of fitting pollution abatement technology, in terms of cost per tonne of sulphur abated, for differing sizes of plants.

Mr. Trippier: The emission reduction plan will contain the details specified in the large combustion plants directive (88/609/EEC).

Sewage Disposal (Torridge Estuary)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a decision has been made as to the type of sewage disposal intended for the Torridge estuary.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that a decision has not yet been made. South West Water Services Ltd. has carried out intensive environmental studies over the past three years in order to develop a comprehensive water quality plan for the Taw/Torridge estuary and to assess the long-term options for improved sewage disposal arrangements. Under the provisions of the Water Act 1989, any such improvement plans and related discharge applications will require the approval and formal consent of the National Rivers Authority. This is a matter, therefore, for South West Water and the NRA.

Special Needs Grants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many valid applications for special needs grants under the social fund were made to Grimsby and were refused because of cash limits on local expenditure; what advice his Department will give to applicants in the light of the recent High Court ruling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

In the period April 1989 to January 1990, 1,112 applications for community care grants were processed at Grimsby social security office. Of those applications 647 resulted in an award; of the remainder none was refused on budgetary grounds.

Our advice remains that any person who has a need which he considers might be met from the social fund should make an application to his local social security office in the normal way.

SCOTLAND

Nature Conservation

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to issue any guidance to the proposed Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland for the purposes of conserving land which is of national importance for nature conservation as provided for in section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 provides powers to the Secretary of State to make nature conservation orders. Such an order is made only where there is a dispute between the Nature Conservancy Council and a landowner about land notified by the council as a site of special scientific interest under section 28 of the Act. There are no powers for the Secretary of State to issue guidance to the council under either section 28 or section 29 of the Act.

Children (Tumours)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if all children with solid malignant tumours known to the health services are recorded in the Scottish health statistics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes.

Wind (North of Scotland)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations his Department has had with the Forestry Commission in respect of wind conditions in the north of Scotland; and what representations he has received from them in this matter.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission has three wind-monitoring stations in the north of Scotland—on Skye, at Leanachan near Fort William and at Rosarie in Moray—where wind speeds are recorded and the effect of wind on forests is studied. The commission has advised that the pattern of winds in this area has not been unusual in the first two months of 1990 and that there has been no significant damage to forests since the gale of February 1989.

New Towns

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of houses built by new town development corporations are now privately owned in each of the new towns.

Mr. Lang: As at 30 September 1989, the total number of corporation houses sold in each of the towns, as a percentage of houses completed by development corporations, is as follows:

	Percentage
East Kilbride	49·0
Glenrothes	46·5
Cumbernauld	51·7
Livingston	29·8
Irvine	24·0

Primary Teaching Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much the intake for primary teaching students is to increase in 1990 for each of the colleges under his control; and by how much he intends to increase the resources of these colleges to assist them to train these students.

Mr. Lang: The planned intakes for session 1990-91 to primary teacher training courses are shown in the table. The allocations of grant in aid for 1990-91 which I introduced on 22 February, Official Report, columns 869-70, include funding for all these students. Having regard to the benefit of changes in rates relief for charities, colleges of education will receive overall increases in public funding of 14 to 15 per cent. over 1989-90.

Recommended intakes to primary teacher training courses in Scotland—1990-91

TOTAL	1,000 (850)	450 (300)

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons training agents are paid £10 under the employment training scheme for trainees directly recruited by training managers and to whom training agents give no service.

Mr. Lang: Training agents provide an independent source of guidance and support to trainees recruited directly by a training manager on, for example, issues causing dissatisfaction or where trainees wish to change their training objectives. To ensure that this independent brokerage role is fully accessible to trainees who have been directly recruited by training managers, the Training Agency pays a flat fee of £10 to training agents in respect of each such trainee who remains in employment training for more than six days and for whom an action plan has been lodged with the training agent.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the income, not grant in aid, received by the Scottish Development Agency in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table:

(£ million)

	Business[1] income	Investment income	Public dividend capital	Borrowings from: National loans fund	European coal and steel community
1984-85	38·7	3·9	1·1	3·5	—

Note

The figures do not include repayments from sub-borrowers in respect of loans made from National Loans Fund and European Coal and Steel Community monies.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the grant in aid given to the Scottish Development Agency in cash terms and also indexed for inflation in each of the years of the Scottish Development Agency's existence.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table:

	Cash	At 1988-89 prices

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what happens to the proceeds of the sale of equities by the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Lang: It has been the practice for some years to allow the agency to use such income to finance new investments; in the current year there will be more income than is required to finance new investments and the surplus will be used to reduce the total amount of public dividend capital owing to the Exchequer. Public dividend capital has been drawn down by the agency over the years as the principal means of financing new investments.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will happen to the proceeds of the Scottish Development Agency's property portfolio sale.

Mr. Lang: The agency's budget has always been funded to a significant extent by business receipts, within which income from selling premises to tenants has been a substantial element. The receipts from the disposal exercise will likewise be taken into account in setting the level of the agency's budget and the proportion of the budget to be met from grant in aid.

Teachers (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for monitoring the numbers of teachers from the ethnic minorities in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: As my hon. Friend the then Minister with responsibility for education announced on 25 May 1989, column 657, there are no plans to survey the ethnic origins of school teachers in Scotland.

Crofting Estates

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the disposal of his crofting estates to community ownership.

Mr. Rifkind: I am issuing a consultation paper today seeking views on the possibility of transferring my crofting estates to trusts including representatives of crofting interests, or to some other form of community ownership. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many consortia bids for local enterprise company status the local enterprise company unit is currently considering; and which areas of Scotland they come from.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 February 1990]: Twenty-four applications for development funding have been received to date. The areas to which they relate are listed in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list his official visits to British industrial companies in each of the last three months;

(2) if he will list his regional visits in the last three months.

Mr. Ridley: My visits round the country, and my meetings with and visits to industrial companies are numerous, and do not lead themselves to the sort of precise classification suggested by the hon. Gentleman.

Company Audits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to amend the Companies Act 1989 so as to require companies' annual returns to state whether or not a close personal relationship exists between the auditor and any officer of a company.

Mr. Redwood: No. The professional rules that the relevant supervisory bodies are required to have under the Companies Act 1989 are sufficient to provide against conflicts of interest.

East Germany (Pollution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to offer assistance in the form of environmental clean-up technology developed in the United Kingdom to the German Democratic Republic.

Mr. Forth: On 22 January, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced that a know-how fund would be set up for eastern Europe. This would embrace our existing commitments to Poland and Hungary, and make available help for other east European countries once they are firmly committed to reform. It is too early to indicate the distribution of such funds by country or sector.

United Kingdom manufacturers of equipment for environmental improvement are being encouraged to develop links with prospective users in eastern Europe, including the German Democratic Republic, through a number of mechanisms. In particular, the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, to be held in Bonn between 19 March and 11 April 1990, will include opportunities for business men from eastern and western European nations to identify requirements for environmental protection equipment. United Kingdom associations in the environmental field have been asked to inform their members of this event.

Patent Office

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made towards the establishment of the Patent Office as an executive agency.

Mr. Ridley: I am today establishing the Patent Office as an executive agency. The Patent Office is the fifth executive agency to be established within the DTI.

Establishing the Patent Office as an executive agency will assist the Patent Office further to improve the quality and cost-effectiveness of its services. Accordingly, I have set the Patent Office the following productivity and quality of service targets for the next five years:

- to increase the productivity of patent examination by an average of at least 1·5 per cent. a year;
- to issue at least 90 per cent. of patent search reports within 12 weeks;
- to increase the productivity of trade mark examination by an average of at least 3 per cent. a year;
- to register at least 90 per cent. of unopposed trade mark applications within 24 months of receipt; and
- to reduce the cost of common services within the Patent Office by at least 20 per cent. in real terms.

Taken together these targets represent a requirement to improve efficiency by an average of more than 4 per cent. a year.

In addition, I expect the relocation of the Patent Office to Newport, Gwent, which is due to be completed in September 1991, to produce substantial savings in the running costs of the Patent Office.

Financial Services

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the purpose of the European Economic Community directive on capital adequacy; what will be the impact of the directive on the Financial Services Act; whether he has made any assessment of the impact of the directive on independent financial advisers in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The proposed EC directive on the capital adequacy of investment business is at an early stage and no draft has yet been presented to the Council of Ministers. It will set out the capital requirements with which those doing investment business must comply. It complements the investment services directive, which will allow an investment firm authorised in one member state to do business throughout the Community without the need for further authorisation.

Implementation of the provisions of the directive, once adopted, is likely to involve changes to the relevant rules of the Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulatory organisations and changes to the Bank of England's supervision of banks.

I am aware of the concern among independent financial advisers that the directive should take account of the way financial services business is done in the United Kingdom. We have made our position clear to the Commission on the aspects of the proposals which are of special concern to this group.

Soviet Union

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, when he last met his Soviet conterpart, they discussed the establishment of free market systems in the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: I am preparing to meet my Soviet counterpart, Mr. Sitaryan, the chairman of the state foreign economic commission, for the first time in Moscow next month, when I hope to discuss a wide range of trade and economic subjects.

House of Fraser

10. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding publication of the report on House of Fraser.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his answer, 17 January 1990, c. 286]: I have been informed today by the director of the Serious Fraud Office and the Director of Public Prosecutions that they have withdrawn their objections to the publication of the report by inspectors of their investigation under section 432(2) of the Companies Act 1985 into the affairs of House of Fraser Holdings plc. I intend therefore to publish it on 7 March. I do not intend to take any further action.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Statistics (Shropshire)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what has been the total number of people employed by Shropshire education authority in each of the past five years;

(2) what has been the total number of pupils and students enrolled in Shropshire in each of the past five years;

(3) what has been the total number of teaching staff employed by Shropshire education authority in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total numbers of teachers and pupils in maintained schools and colleges in Shropshire in each of the past five years are given in the table. Data on the total number of people employed by Shropshire education authority are not held centrally.

Teaching staff employed and pupils-students enrolled in schools and colleges maintained by Shropshire LEA (full-time equivalents)[1]

	Teaching staff employed	Pupils-students enrolled[2]
1985	4,207	68,827
1986	4,258	68,737
1987	4,221	67,805
1988	4,245	66,944
1989	4,222	67,901

[1] Figures relate to January of the year shown, except that the data on students enrolled in maintained colleges of further and higher education (FHE) included in the pupils-students row are for the preceding November.

[2] In 1989 there was a change in the factors used to convert numbers of student enrolments in maintained FHE colleges to full-time equivalents, which had the effect of increasing the total full-time equivalents.

Beechem Cliff School

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of people who were signatories to the 38 statutory objections to the grant-maintained proposals for Beechem Cliff school, Avon.

Mrs. Rumbold: The signatories to the objections comprised 397 individuals and the governing bodies of 17 schools.

Postgraduate Students

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the tuition fee for postgraduate students will be in the academic year 1990-91.

Mr. MacGregor: The levels at which higher education fees are set is for individual institutions. The maximum tuition fee that will be reimbursed through the awards system for eligible home students and those from other European Community countries on full-time postgraduate courses will be increased from £1,890 in the current academic year to £1,985 in 1990-91.

HEALTH

Anaesthetic Drugs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have (a) died and (b) suffered adverse side effects, from general anaesthetic drugs used in National Health Service hospitals for each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table gives the available information. It shows the number of deaths in England and Wales with an underlying cause of death attributed to general anaesthetics between 1979-88 and where the death has occurred in a National Health Service Hospital. Information relating to the number of adverse side-effects is not available.

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received urging health authorities be referred for unfair practice in competitive tendering for laundering facilities from the industry's trade association; and what response he has given.

Mr. Freeman: There has been continuing dialogue between the Department and the laundry trade association about the competitive tendering initiative since 1983. Some of its representations relating to problems about the process and its implementation by health authorities were met by guidance issued in January 1986 and November 1987, including a practical guide and handbook on monitoring of contracts following an independent study sponsored by the National Provincial Hospitals Trust and partially funded by the Department.

A report issued by the association in mid-1988 highlighted a number of areas of continuing difficulty. The Department investigated the complaints made and consulted widely on the report's recommendations before responding fully to the association. In summary:

Its proposed short model contract was seen as unacceptable because it failed to safeguard health authority interests. The association has been invited, however, to send in contract documents used by hospitals in Holland for consideration.

General concerns about capital accounting will be met by the new arrangements for capital charging and asset registers. Regarding a specific complaint about capital investment in laundering equipment by a district health authority, a rigorous scrutiny by the region at the time concluded that this represented best value for money.

Independent scrutiny of tendering arrangements, tender exercises and costs was already provided by the statutory process of external audit.

Where contractors had firm and factual evidence of unfair practices, this should be taken up at the time with the district health authority's general manager and if necessary with the appropriate regional health authority.

The association has also been invited to provide specific examples of completed tender exercises where, in its view, the in-house team's costings were manifestly incomplete and this has operated to the detriment of a competitive contractor's bid. Such evidence is awaited.

We welcome the fact that the competitive tendering initiative for laundry services has improved value for money and generated savings of over £9 million.

Rates

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount paid in lieu of rates for 1989-90 for each district health authority and special health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is reported in the annual accounts of health authorities. Information from such accounts for 1989-90 will not be available until the autumn.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what terms and conditions of employment within the National Health Service will apply once a self-governing trust is established.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: NHS trusts will remain firmly in the NHS. Staff who transfer from health authority to NHS trust employment will retain their existing contracts and all rights arising from them, subject to the substitution of the new employer for the old and any consequential technical changes. It will be open to NHS trusts to seek to introduce changes in existing contracts at any time after transfer. In doing so, they will be free to decide whether to continue to adopt NHS Whitley council conditions or to make alternative arrangements if they so wish.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places are currently provided by health authorities for the elderly in nursing homes in each health authority in England.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. The Government consider continuous nursing care services to be an integral part of NHS provision for those elderly people who require them. However, the actual level of service to be provided by a health authority is a matter for that authority to decide for itself based on local needs and priorities.

NHS Charges

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about National Health Service prescription and related charges and spectacle vouchers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I will shortly be laying before the House regulations for increases in prescription charges in the National Health Service in England and Wales to come into effect on 1 April 1990. The prescription charge will increase by 25p from £2·80 to £3·05. The increase of 8·9 per cent. reflects the higher cost of the pharmaceutical services and will provide about £13 million extra income to the resources available to the Health Service in England and Wales.

The new charge will continue to represent less than half the cost of an average prescription to the NHS. Under existing exemption arrangements over three quarters of prescription items are provided free of charge and these exemption arrangements will continue. The four-monthly and annual prepayment certificates will continue to be provided, the fees for which will increase from £14·50 and £40·00 to £15·80 and £43·50 respectively. A prescription charge will be paid in respect of less than 20 per cent. of all items dispensed in the NHS as a result of the exemption arrangements and continued availability of prepayment certificates. The charges for elastic stockings and tights, wigs (with the exception of the charge for a full bespoke human hair wig) and fabric supports supplied through the hospital service will also be increased from 1 April, as set out in table A.

I am pleased to announce a significant move to help those who receive vouchers for spectacles. The value of the vouchers will be increased from 1 April and some definitions changed so that more prescriptions fall into the higher bands. In all, the amount paid in spectacle vouchers is expected to rise by some 10 per cent. As from 1 April, spectacle voucher values will be increased by around 4·7 per cent. overall with the value of the most frequently prescribed A and D vouchers rising by 5·9 and 6·1 per cent. respectively. Voucher values for the hospital eye service will also rise by the same amount. In addition to the general increase, the specification of the higher spectacle voucher bands B and E will be more widely defined to take in more optical prescriptions. Those affected by this change will benefit by receiving significantly more money from which to buy the spectacles of their choice. The revised voucher values are set out in table B.

National Health Service Contracts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when further guidance on National Health Service contracts will be published.

Mr. Freeman: I have today had copies of "Contracts for Health Services: Operating Contracts" placed in the Library. This includes "specimen" contracts, which have largely been developed within the National Health Service with financial support from the Department. These contracts are first efforts at those which will be necessary to stipulate the nature of the service to be delivered, the quality to be achieved and the resources to be provided for every aspect of National Health Service services across the country. They are not blueprints, nor do they set precedents to be followed by every district health authority. The contracts and the further guidance, together with the previous document "Contracts for Health Services: Operational Principles", are intended to stimulate further detailed work across the country by clinicians and managers to develop useful forms of contract for every part of the service. We intend to implement contract funding in April 1991.

Child Cancer

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of child cancer, including leukaemia, patients recorded in each of the paediatric hospitals in the United Kingdom each year over the past 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The exact information requested is not available.

The data shown are collected from cases reported to local cancer registries (based at regional health authority level), and are not subdivided into those recorded from paediatric hospitals. The data cover the years 1980 to 1984, later data for the United Kingdom as a whole not yet being available.

Gay People (Adoptions)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy concerning the fostering or adoption of children by individual unmarried lesbian or gay persons who fulfil all the requirements of suitability and fitness to adopt or foster.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In reaching a decision relating to the fostering or adoption of a child by any person, courts and child care and adoption agencies are required to give first consideration to the need to safeguard and promote the child's welfare. There is no prohibition on fostering or adoption by single people, who are equally subject to the statutory requirements for thorough investigation and assessment as prospective foster parents and adopters.

Eye Tests

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will seek to exempt, with immediate effect, all retirement pensioners from eye test charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Pensioners as a group have never been automatically exempt from the payment of optical charges since NHS charges were first introduced in 1951. The Government are keen to focus help with sight test charges on those who need it most, and we have therefore ensured that pensioners who are on a low income or who have certain special medical needs, will continue to be entitled to a free NHS sight test. We have no plans to extend entitlement to NHS sight tests to all pensioners regardless of income.

Tuberculosis Vaccine

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether regular supplies of tuberculosis vaccine are now being received; and whether the health authorities have been advised on whether to resume their routine school immunisation programme.

Mr. Freeman: Temporary supply difficulties arose last year whilst our source of supply moved production facilities to a new site. This necessitated conserving remaining stocks by restricting vaccination to those at particular risk of exposure to tuberculosis. These include children who may be contacts of people with pulmonary tuberculosis as well as recent immigrants from developing countries with a high prevalence of tuberculosis and any infants born to them subsequently. Adequate stocks remain for that purpose.

Fresh supplies should be available by the end of April 1990, so routine school vaccination could commence from that time. In October 1989, the Department asked health authorities to make plans to vaccinate the missed 1989 cohort of children at the same time as the 1990 cohort. The Department will be writing again in March to all health authorities suggesting that they can now resume the routine BCG schools' vaccination programme, in the summer or autumn terms depending on local arrangements.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the reports from health authorities about the hours worked by junior hospital doctors in September 1989 were provided by regional health authorities or district health authorities; and whether these reports cover all junior hospital doctors in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 8 February at column 770. The reports relate to junior hospital doctors in England.

Hospital Complaints

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether hospital trusts will be subject to the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes.

Community Care

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will be responsible for co-ordinating and supervising at a local level health and community care for persons in care both public and private.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: District health authorities and local authority social services departments will be responsible for assessing the health and social care needs of their resident populations. Each will then commission a range of services to meet those needs. DHAs will secure their services through a system of contracts or service agreements, as will local authorities when not directly providing them. In agreeing contracts, DHAs and SSDs will wish to satisfy themselves about a number of factors including the quality of treatment and care. It will be important for both district health authorities and local authorities to ensure that services are integrated and co-ordinated: they will need to ensure there is close and effective collaboration between the various elements which make up community care.

Alcohol Research

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department spent on animal experiments related to alcohol reseach since 1980.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The Department is not currently funding any such research. Readily available information about research for previous years is contained in the DHSS handbooks on research and development published annually. Copies are available in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Schools

8. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teachers and pupils are currently in Northern Ireland schools; what were the comparable figures for five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1988, the latest year for which information is available, there were 18,491 teachers and 339,741 pupils.

The comparable figures for five, 10 and 15 years ago, for teachers and pupils respectively, were 18,887 and 352,557; 19,116 and 372,380; 15,983 and 358,801.

Dogs

17. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the control of dogs in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Northern Ireland has its own separate legislative provisions in relation to dogs under the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983. The legislation is administered by the 26 Northern Ireland district councils. The system is working well.

Londonderry

18. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on new commercial and industrial developments in Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: Since 1983 private sector commercial investment in Londonderry has totalled some £40 million either spent, under way or projected on local retail, offices, shops, restaurants and hotel developments. The most welcome recent proposed commercial development is the announcement of a substantial investment in a major town centre shopping complex together with a proposed new hotel development.

Laganside

19. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what actions are proposed for the regeneration of Laganside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I am pleased to report that the Laganside corporation has made good progress in the regeneration of Laganside.

County Towns

20. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what actions he is taking to revitalise county towns in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, West (Dr. Blackburn) on 1 February 1990, Official Report, Vol. 166, c. 337.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

21. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Government of the Irish Republic about article 4(b) of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: I discussed political matters with Mr. Collins most recently at our meetings on 4 and 21 February. Both Governments have made clear that they wish to encourage political dialogue in Northern Ireland.

28. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent ministerial discussions within the framework of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: I met Mr. Collins on 4 and 21 February and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State met Mr. Burke on 15 February. At these meetings, discussions centred on important issues with which it had been intended to deal at the postponed conference on 31 January.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has had any recent discussion regarding the dismantling of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No. The Government remain committed to the Anglo-Irish Agreement and the principles it embodies. However, we remain willing to examine any proposals concerning the agreement, particularly if they are likely to command widespread support.

Small Firms

22. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further steps he plans to take to encourage small firms.

Mr. Needham: The Government in Northern Ireland continue to encourage the promotion of enterprise within the Province's small business sector.

Railways

23. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of Northern Ireland railways; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 16 January 1990, when policy, financial and operational matters were discussed.

Conservation

24. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to conserve the environment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Northern Ireland has an up-to-date legislative code for nature and countryside conservation.

There are 45 national reserves, nine areas of outstanding natural beauty and 24 areas of special scientific interest. We are taking steps to ensure that further designations will be made over the next few years.

The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has embarked on the first stages of the designation of Northern Ireland's first marine nature reserve at Strangford lough.

The Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside provides valuable advice on all these aspects. The Department of the Environment encourages conservation by means of grant aid to voluntary bodies and others and by the provision of educational literature and information in particular at its seven country parks and at countryside centres.

The listing and scheduling procedures for historic buildings and monuments are continuing, and 7,612 buildings have been listed. One hundred and sixty-seven historic monuments have been taken into state care while 1,000 have been scheduled.

The Department of the Environment exercises control over water and industrial air pollution in the Province and has responsibility for oversight of the environmental health functions of the district councils. In general, water and air quality are of a high standard in Northern Ireland.

The Department of the Environment, as sole planning authority for Northern Ireland, is aware of its responsibilities in the area of conservation. This is reflected in its rural planning policy, in the preparation of development plans and in its consideration of planning applications which involve proposals that would affect the environment.

The Department of Agriculture also has a significant influence on environmental conservation in the countryside. Among other things, it carries out a wide range of environmental research work and gives conservation advice to farmers. It provides positive incentives to farmers to engage in environmentally friendly farming practices under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme. Two such areas have been designated and consideration is being given to further designations.

Housing Executive

25. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations were held between the Department of the Environment and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive about the internal rationalisation proposals and subsequently about the reduction of the regional offices from six to four which is proposed to take effect from 1992.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that the rationalisation proposals will ensure that the services provided by district offices, which are the normal point of contact for the executive's clients, will be fully maintained and the operation of additional sub-district offices is being considered as a means of bringing services even closer to them.

The Department of the Environment has not yet been formally consulted about the proposals currently being developed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. We know that the executive is considering such a reduction as part of an organisational review for the new decade and has consulted the Northern Ireland housing council, district councils, voluntary housing bodies and the Northern Ireland public service alliance. The Department encourages the executive to improve its organisation to provide its services in the most efficient and cost-effective way possible.

Kincora Boys' Home

26. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any further information on the Kincora boys' home and the Wallace file that was lost.

Mr. Cope: I have nothing to add to the information contained in the answer given in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Mr. Marshall) by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 30 January 1990, Official Report, Vol. 166, columns 110-13, and in a letter written by the Secretary of State for Defence to the same hon. Member, a copy of which was placed in the Library.

Labour Statistics

27. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment.

Mr. Needham: At 11 January 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 100,413 unemployed claimants in the Province, representing 14·2 per cent. of the work force. Seasonally adjusted unemployment, which gives a better indication of trends, has fallen by an average of 1,100 per month during the past six months and is now at 14 per cent., which is its lowest level for over seven years.

30. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current rate of unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The latest unemployment figures for January 1990 show that there were 100,413 persons claiming unemployment benefit in Northern Ireland and this represented 14·2 per cent. of the total work force. The seasonally adjusted figure, which gives a better indication of trends, is at its lowest level for more than seven years and shows that the strong underlying downward trend in unemployment in the Province is continuing.

36. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently self-employed in the Province and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The most recent estimate derived from labour force surveys and the June agricultural census is that at June 1989 the number of self-employed in Northern Ireland was approximately 70,000.

51. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are unemployed in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 11 January 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 100,413 persons claming unemployment benefit in Northern Ireland.

Electricity Exports

29. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to offer electricity for export to the Republic.

Mr. Needham: None at present. The interconnector between Northern Ireland and the Republic was put out of action by terrorist attacks in the 1970s and has not been restored.

Mutual Understanding

31. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to promote education to improve mutual understanding between the communities in the Province.

Dr. Mawhinney: Major steps are already being taken in this direction through the education for mutual understanding (EMU) programme which is incorporated as a compulsory cross-curricular theme in the new common curriculum. EMU enables young people to learn about and value their own culture and traditions and the culture and traditions of others.

Grant aid under the cross-community contact scheme, introduced in September 1987, has supported joint programmes by about a third of schools and 300 youth groups. The Department of Education for Northern Ireland also supports a number of organisations which promote reconciliation in school and youth groups.

Community Care

32. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his proposals for community care.

Mr. Needham: Our proposals will be set out in a paper to be published shortly.

Organic Food

33. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland is taking to encourage the development of organic agriculture in Northern Ireland in response to the increasing demand for organic food.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Northern Ireland's food is usually more natural since our agriculture is based upon low input with high health standards in livestock and plants.

We are also setting up a demonstration organic farming unit which should encourage and benefit those interested in organic farming.

Rural Development

34. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to promote rural development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is a need for a better focus and co-ordinated action towards social and economic development in the most deprived rural areas of Northern Ireland. The inter-departmental committee on rural development will oversee Government policies and programmes in these areas to ensure the maximum impact of existing expenditure with due sensitivity to identified needs in the areas themselves. Opportunities for further action will be consulted. There is a determination to achieve rural improvement.

Ambulance Dispute

35. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the effects of the ambulance workers' dispute on the emergency services in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Full accident and emergency care has been maintained by the ambulance service since the dispute began. Some services to outpatient clinics have been affected, but all patients requiring urgent treatment have been transported. No outpatient clinic has been cancelled because of this dispute. It has not been necessary to seek assistance from the RUC or from voluntary aid societies.

Security

37. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

44. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the right hon. and hon. Gentlemen to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross).

Road Closures

38. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on road closures between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

50. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the closure of cross-border roads.

Mr. Cope: The Government recognise that many crossing points between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland serve a valuable social and economic purpose. We are also aware that some crossing points are particularly valuable to terrorists. No crossing point is closed unnecessarily. But the first duty of Government is to protect life. In accordance with that duty, we will continue to support action by the police, assisted where necessary by the Army, to close or reclose border crossings when we are satisfied that this is necessary to protect the lives of those, including many particularly vulnerable members of the community, who live or work in border areas.

Irish Prime Minister

39. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet the Irish Prime Minister; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Brooke: I have no current plans to meet the Taoiseach.

Tobacco Products

40. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to stop the sales of tobacco products to children.

Mr. Needham: The sale of tobacco products to children who appear to be under 16 is illegal. Responsibility for enforcing the law rests with the police.

Industrial Development Board

41. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the report of the Northern Ireland Economic Council on the performance of the Industrial Development Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The report of the Northern Ireland Economic Council on the performance of the Industrial Development Board was published on 22 February. The Government welcome the report as a valuable contribution to debate on industrial development in Northern Ireland and will be giving full consideration to its detailed recommendations.

Police Operations

42. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when public confidence in policing policy and operations was last discussed with Ministers from the Republic of Ireland within the Anglo-Irish Conference.

Mr. Cope: This matter was raised at the last conference meeting on 30 November.

Devolution

43. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in consultations regarding devolution.

Mr. Brooke: Since the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 1 February, I and my colleagues have had a number of exploratory meetings to discuss the scope for political progress within Northern Ireland, both with the leadership of the main constitutional political parties and with the Irish Government. I expect to have further such meetings.

Vehicle Examinations

45. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the waiting time for an official vehicle examination; and if he will make a statement on procedures for such examinations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average waiting time for a vehicle inspection appointment has been reduced from six weeks in August 1989 to four weeks at the present time. The annual inspection of private cars, heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles is carried out by the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland, in 15 purpose-built centres.

Economic Growth

46. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the trend of growth of the economy in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: The Northern Ireland economy, like the United Kingdom economy, has experienced sustained growth since 1981. Latest figures show an impressive growth of manufacturing output recently. The prospects for 1990 are substantially dependent upon economic conditions in the United Kingdom economy as a whole.

Belfast

47. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on commercial and industrial development in Belfast.

Mr. Needham: I am pleased to report that in recent years commercial and industrial development in Belfast has reached unprecedented levels.

Terrorism

48. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of terrorist incidents since 3 November 1989.

Mr. Cope: Since 3 November 1989 there have been 137 terrorist-related incidents, 13 of which resulted in fatalities.

Integrated Education

49. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how he proposes to offer opportunities for integrated education; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Part VI of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, which came into operation on 20 February 1990, makes provision to facilitate the development of integrated schools.

Under the new legislation, it is now possible for the Government to give financial support to integrated schools being set up from new and for parents of pupils at existing schools to vote that integrated status should be sought for their schools.

The statutory duty is also placed upon the Department of Education to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education.

Nuclear Magnetic Facilities

52. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when nuclear magnetic resonance and X-ray facilities will be available in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: An assessment of need is at present being undertaken by the Eastern board. Subject to satisfactory completion, a magnetic resonance imaging service will be considered with other priorities for funding in the 1991-92 year.

Drug Education

53. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on drug education in schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: Schools have an important role in discouraging young people from getting involved in drugs. As part of health education, which recent legislation includes as a compulsory element of the common curriculum for all schools in Northern Ireland, children will be taught about the serious risks inherent in the misuse of drugs and other harmful substances. This will build on what is already good practice in many schools.

Musgrave Park Hospital

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current waiting time for those residing in each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland for hip replacements and other similar orthopaedic operations at the Musgrave Park hospital, Belfast.

Health Service

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to take a decision on the provision of a new hospital for the Coleraine, Ballymoney and Moyle district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: A decision will be taken when the further appraisal initiated by the Northern board has been completed.

Handicapped Children

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many handicapped children are in residential care in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There are eight mentally handicapped children aged under 16 years currently in residential care in Northern Ireland. There are no physically handicapped children in residential care.

Licensed Premises (Metric Measures)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the consultation procedure on the introduction of metric measures on licensed premises.

Mr. Needham: A consultation paper entitled "Metrication: Sales of Spirits for Consumption on Licensed Premises" was issued on 18 September 1989 to 35 trade and other bodies; five replies were received. As required by article 48(2) of the Weights and Measures (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, interested parties will have a further opportunity to comment when the draft amending legislation is published.

Business Failures

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the levels of business failures in Northern Ireland in 1989.

Mr. Needham: During 1989, 176 companies went into liquidation compared with 174 in the previous year. Two hundred and twenty one bankruptcy orders were made in 1989 compared with 146 in 1988.

Community Projects

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in the development of community projects between schools; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the cross-community contact scheme was introduced in September 1987 to promote contacts across the community divide, about a third of the schools in Northern Ireland have received assistance towards the costs of structured, ongoing joint programmes.

In addition, the education for mutual understanding programme is incorporated as a compulsory cross-curricular theme in the new common curriculum.

Inward Investment

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the prospects for inward investment into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The attraction of inward investment is a crucial factor in the economic development of Northern Ireland, but the prospects for investment are always difficult to predict.

Milk Quota

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the distribution of the additional milk quota.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 13 February that he had submitted to the European Commission for approval the United Kingdom proposals for the allocation of the extra 1 per cent. quota.

The proposals include allocation to new entrants; to small producers; to producers in remote areas; and to producers whose tribunal awards had not been granted in full because insufficient quota was available.

Employment Training

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of employment training.

Mr. Needham: Some 2,764 persons are now participating in the job training programme which is the equivalent of employment training and I plan to expand the programme next year.

Football

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he is making to the Irish Football Association following incidents at a recent football match at Windsor Park.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 February 1990]: The Irish Football Association is aware of and shares my concern at the crowd disturbances at Windsor park. The Association is undertaking a thorough investigation and I shall receive a copy of its report.

Mushrooms

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial assistance LEDU has given in each of the last five years towards the development of the mushroom industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 28 February 1990]: LEDU grants paid to the mushroom industry over the past five years were as follows:

	Amount (£)
1984-85	90,997
1985-86	209,948
1986-87	95,899
1987-88	154,907
1988-89	293,981

Income Support

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single pensioner households in Scotland are in receipt of income support or have been in receipt of income support or supplementary benefit for each of the past five years, expressed as a percentage of all single pensioner households and as a numerical total.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available information is in the table. The figures relate to single people aged 60 and over. The information requested is not available for single pensioner households.

Residential Care

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those organisations whose evidence as to the cost of providing care in voluntary and private residential and nursing homes is taken into account in setting national income support limits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We receive a considerable number of views and representations from a variety of interested organisations and individuals who are entitled to have their communications treated in confidence. They are of course free to publish this evidence themselves if they wish.

Social Fund

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate for social fund spending on loans and grants for the next two years.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 November 1989 at column 813. An announcement regarding the budget for 1991-92 will be made nearer the time.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals have so far benefited from social fund loans.

Mr. Scott: Since the beginning of the scheme in April 1988 over 1·7 million budgeting loans and crisis loans have been awarded. It is not possible to say how many individuals have benefited as an applicant may have received more than one loan.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking, following the High Court judgment on 21 February on the operation of the social fund, to ensure that every social fund application which has been refused is reviewed in the light of the judgment and in accordance with direction 31 in the social fund manual.

Mr. Scott: Our intention is that the revised guidance to social fund officers to which I referred in my reply to the hon. Member on 26 February at column 58 should be accompanied by any necessary advice on the question of reviews.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether social fund officers are free to disregard the paragraphs of the social fund manual in which they are told they should under no circumstances make an award which cannot be paid from the local office budget.

Mr. Scott: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 26 February at column 58, a letter was sent by electronic mail on the day of the High Court judgment which advised social fund officers that the local office budget and the level of priority that might usually be met are factors to be taken into account in reaching a decision and that the state of the local office is not the overriding factor. We intend to issue revised guidance shortly.

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the effect on the income support of participants in the action credit pilot scheme who receive financial help in kind towards their travel-to-work and meal costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The rules for the treatment of payments for travel and meal costs are the same for participants working under the action credit scheme as for anyone in part-time employment and receiving income support. Financial help with these expenses is normally treated as earnings and taken into account in the usual way. However, any payment in respect of expenses which are incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of the duties of the employment is fully disregarded. Similarly, payments made in kind, such as the provision of a meal or a bus pass, are completely ignored.

Family Benefits

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving family credit in the areas covered by the (a) Poplar, (b) Stepney and (c) Shoreditch Department of Social Security offices; and how many in Tower Hamlets as a whole.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of families receiving family credit who were living in the areas covered by the local social security offices in Tower Hamlets at the time their award was made is as follows:

	Number
(a) Poplar	490
(b) Stepney	260
(c) Shoreditch	1,010
TOTAL	1,760

Women Claimants

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of women in part-time or full-time employment who receive benefits excluding child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table.

Estimated numbers of women in full-time or part-time employment in receipt of benefits excluding child benefit and one parent benefit in Great Britain in 1987

	Number in receipt of benefit (000's)
Part time	375
Full-time	405
Total	780

Notes:

1. The estimates are derived from the 1987 Family Expenditure Survey which is a sample survey, and may be subject to sampling errors. Only benefits personally received by women are counted.
2. The table is confined to employed and self-employed women under pension age. Full-time work is defined as 24 hours or more per week.
3. Benefits include all State Benefits (including Widows Benefit) except child benefit and one-parent benefit.

Food Prices

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to adjust pension and income support payments in light of the increases in the price of food; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Increases in food prices are taken into account in the indices used to calculate annual increases in these benefits.

Pensioners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the percentage increase in real terms in the incomes of pensioners receiving supplementary benefit or income support between 1979 and 1987; and how much of the increase was accounted for by (a) social security benefits, (b) occupational pensions, (c) income from savings and (d) earnings, respectively.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

DEFENCE

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those categories of parliamentary questions on which it is the policy of his Department not to answer, together where known with the date of the blocking answer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is our policy to answer all parliamentary questions. However, successive Governments have judged that there are a number of defence-related matters on which it would not be in the national interest to offer detailed comment; among these are operations, intelligence and security.

It would involve disproportionate cost and effort to list the dates of past answers which reflect this policy.

Low Flying

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from members of the public in respect of low-flying aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: During January 1990, the Ministry of Defence received 381 inquiries or complaints about military low-flying training in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints he has received over the past 12 months about low-flying military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: Between 1 February 1989 and 31 January 1990, the Ministry of Defence received 7,896 inquiries and complaints about military low flying in the United Kingdom.

Disarmament Conference

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part his Department is playing in the Geneva conference on disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence contributes in a number of ways to the conference on disarmament, particularly through the provision of military, technical and scientific staff and other assistance to the United Kingdom delegation in Geneva.

Laser Targeting Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what distance is the United States Air Force laser targeting system, Pave Tack, hazardous to the sight of an observer viewing with (i) the naked eye and (ii) binoculars.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These distances are classified. However, the military laser safety committee issues strict safety instructions on the use of all military lasers in the United Kingdom and these are observed at all air weapons ranges when Pave Tack is being used.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents of temporary blindness have been reported by range staff and civilians that may have been caused by laser targeting systems for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No such incidents have been reported.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ranges in the United Kingdom are cleared for use by the Pave Tack laser targeting system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following ranges in the United Kingdom are cleared for use by the Pave Tack laser targeting system:

RAF Holbeach; RAF Wainfleet; RAF Donna Hook; RAF Jurby; RAF Cowden; RAF Tain; RAF Rosehearty and Garvie Island.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information is provided for the range staff and the local civilian population in the area of ranges cleared for use by aircraft operating the Pave Tack laser targeting system regarding the dangers of observing aircraft on practice bombing runs using this equipment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Instructions on laser safety are contained within the station standing orders for each air weapons range. Staff are instructed not to use magnifying optical devices, such as binoculars, when lasers are in use, unless the devices are fitted with filters or staff are wearing goggles. Visitors to the ranges are briefed on these requirements. No specific information is provided to the public. However, warning signs instruct people to keep away from danger areas when the range is in use. If any unauthorised person is identified within the danger area, all use of the range will cease.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regulations cover use of the Pave Tack laser targeting system over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of joint and single service publications, together with air weapons range orders, cover the use of the Pave Tack laser targeting system at ranges in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which laser targeting systems, other than Pave Tack, are cleared for use on United Kingdom training ranges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Three laser targeting systems, other than Pave Tack, are cleared for use on United Kingdom training ranges. These are an airborne laser ranging and marked target seeker (LRMTS); a ground-based laser target marker used in conjunction with LRMTS; and Pave Spike, a system similar to Pave Tack.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police person-days are involved in (a) escorting vehicles involved in an off-base dispersal exercise in support of the ground-launched cruise missile system from Greenham Common to the Salisbury Plain training area, (b) guarding the Salisbury Plain training area for the duration of the exercises and (c) escorting the vehicles for their return to RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice, for operational and security reasons, to give information of this kind.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many off-base dispersal exercises in support of the ground-launched cruise missile system at RAF Greenham Common are scheduled for the next 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These exercise deployments will continue for about a further year until the withdrawal of ground-launched cruise missiles is substantially complete. However, for operational and security reasons it is not the practice to give details of future such exercises.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many off-base dispersal exercises in support of the ground-launched cruise missile system at RAF Greenham Common there have been in the last 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Eleven.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all areas of special use airspace within 15 miles of RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: The following categories of "special use" airspace lie within 15 miles of RAF Greenham Common: airways and the London terminal manoeuvring area, military aerodrome traffic zones, restricted areas and a military avoidance area.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the implications for flight safety of the existence of (a) a Hilton hotel and (b) a Tesco superstore under the flight path at the western end of the runway at RAF Greenham Common;

(2) whether his Department was consulted before planning permission was given by Newbury district council for (a) a Hilton hotel and (b) a Tesco superstore under the flightpath at the western end of the runway at RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: In both cases the Ministry of Defence was consulted before planning permission was given but, as the established criteria for safe runway use of RAF Greenham Common were satisfied, no objection was raised.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for flight safety of the unreported light civil air traffic in the area of RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: All aircraft in the immediate vicinity of RAF Greenham Common come under the control of the base's air traffic controllers. I know of no problems concerning civilian light aircraft.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the reasons why no practice approaches are allowed at RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: There is currently no operational requirement for aircraft to make practice approaches to RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state what restrictions there are for aircraft using visual flight rules landing on runway 29 at RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: No general restrictions apply within the military air traffic zone at RAF Greenham Common, but the air traffic controllers at the base will regulate the use of runway 29 according to circumstances prevailing at the time.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has formulated a disaster response plan for responding to an accident involving an aircraft crashing into (a) a Hilton hotel or (b) a Tesco superstore under the flightpath at the western end of the runway at RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: Like other operational RAF stations, RAF Greenham Common has formulated accident response plans, covering accidents both on and off the base. These are co-ordinated as appropriate with the local authority and local emergency services.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the ground-launched cruise missile system at RAF Greenham Common is still subject to NATO unit assessments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The ground-launched cruise missile system at Greenham Common will remain subject to NATO evaluation until its withdrawal is complete.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the cost per annum to his Department of the ongoing off-base dispersal exercises in support of the ground-launched cruise missile system at RAF Greenham Common;

(2) what is the cost per annum to the Ministry of Defence police of the ongoing off-base dispersal exercises in support of the ground-launched cruise missile system at RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice, for both operational and security reasons, to give information of this kind.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Air Force makes any financial contribution to the costs of escorting vehicles involved in off-base dispersal exercises in support of the ground-launched cruise missile system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Apart from payments in lieu of rates to the local authority in respect of Greenham Common, the United States Air Force does not contribute to meeting the costs incurred by the civil police and Ministry of Defence police in escorting the ground-launched cruise missiles in off-base training deployments.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Lands Tribunal has started work on deciding levels of compensation for commoners with rights on RAF Greenham Common; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following our decison to proceed with the full extinguishment of the rights of common over RAF Greenham Common, we have now made a specific offer of compensation to the chairman of the commoners' committee. If we cannot agree appropriate levels of compensation it is then open to either party to refer the case to the Lands Tribunal.

RAF Exchange Pilots

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force exchange pilots are currently serving with units in the United States of America; and which aircraft types they are flying.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 32 RAF exchange pilots serving with units in the United States of America. Of these, 24 are in flying appointments. The aircraft they fly include fast jets, trainers, transports, helicopters, and refuelling aircraft.

US Air Force Exercises

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all exercises that are scheduled to take place in (a) the Coronet, (b) the Volant and (c) the Busy Brewer series of exercises at bases in the United Kingdom during 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Planning for these exercises is not yet complete. The Busy Brewer series of exercises is now known as Busy Warrior.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all exercises that took place in (a) the Coronet, (b) the Volant and (c) the Busy Brewer series of exercises at bases in the United Kingdom during 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The list of exercises is as follows:

Coronet Exercises 1989

		Base
Coronet Hoop	2 to 21 April	RAF Alconbury
Coronet Pine	20 May to 17 June	RAF Sculthorpe
Coronet Diamond	1 to 26 June	A&AEE Boscombe Down
Coronet Venom	22 June to 18 July	RAF Bentwaters
Coronet Python	25 August to 21 September	RAF Woodbridge

Volant Exercises 1989

	Date
Volant Gopher	4 to 7 June

Busy Warrior (former Busy Brewer) Exercises 1989

	Base
15 to 25 April	RAF Fairford
7 to 25 September	RAF Fairford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he, or any official in his Department, is consulted by the United States Air Force about scheduling of Coronet and Volant series exercises before the United States Air Forces Europe consolidated tasking schedule for the relevant year is produced.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Air-to-surface Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current North Atlantic Treaty Organisation requirement for tactical air-to-surface missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Alliance has long made clear its commitment to keeping its forces, including nuclear forces, effective and up to date. Part of this process is the replacement of ageing free-fall nuclear bombs. The United Kingdom is considering both French and American options to replace its WE177 but, as yet, no decisions have been taken.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation requirement for tactical air-to-surface missiles was (a) first and (b) most recently publicly stated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Alliance has long made clear its intention to maintain adequate, effective and up-to-date nuclear forces and most recently reaffirmed this strategy at the October 1989 meeting of the nuclear planning group in Portugal.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any studies into the replacement of the WE177 free-fall bomb have included air-launched missiles of a range greater than 400 km.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on the detailed specifications for weapons systems under consideration as possible future replacements for the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

F117A Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received any proposals regarding a permanent or temporary deployment of F117A aircraft of the United States Air Force at any base in the United Kingdom or any United Kingdom-operated base overseas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

RAF Chicksands

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether RAF Chicksands is assigned to NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Chicksands provides communications support to United States armed forces in Europe, but is not itself assigned to NATO.

Submarine Personnel

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regular medical checks are carried out on service personnel who have served on Her Majesty's submarines (a) during their service and (b) after they have left the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Before entering the submarine service Royal Navy personnel undergo various medical checks to ensure that they are fit to do so. Throughout their service they undergo regular routine preventive medical examinations, in common with all other RN personnel. About 10 per cent. of those submariners who serve in nuclear-powered submarines are classified as radiation workers, and they undergo routine medical surveillance as required by the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985.

Prior to leaving the service, a full assessment of the individual's naval medical history is made and a thorough medical examination is carried out. Subsequently, full medical records are available to the individual's general practitioner on request, including the classified radiation worker history where applicable.

Financial Planning

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he has made in (a) the role of the financial planning and management committee, (b) the chiefs of staff committee and (c) the long-term costings review for his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Cypriot Ferry Attack

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence following the attack on 25 February on a Cypriot ferry which RAF Wessex helicopters attended to rescue wounded, what information he has on the type, calibre and origin of the rounds which struck the ferry and the estimated size and nationality of the attacking vessel; which navies operating in the area have vessels of this size, carrying such armaments; why the RAF was scrambled to respond to this particular emergency; and what assessment he has made of the implications of this attack for British shipping in this area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The car ferry Baroness M was attacked in darkness on 24 February during one of her regular journeys between Larnaca, Cyprus and Jounieh, Lebanon. My understanding is that the ship is believed to have had Syrian markings but I am not in a position to confirm this. I am not able to comment on the size or type of vessel involved or the type of ammunition used in the attack. The RAF Wessex helicopters based in Cyprus include a search and rescue role among their duties and were well-placed to respond to the request for humanitarian assistance from the Baroness M. As to the implications of this attack for British shipping, I understand that as far as the General Council of British Shipping is aware, no British flagged ships trade with Lebanon or operate in the area where the attack took place.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the details and nature of the series of administrative errors, to which he referred in his letter to his hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Mr. Marshall) on 30 January, a copy of which was placed in the Library, and which led to Mr. Colin Wallace's file of documents being mishandled.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the information given in the letter to which the hon. Member has referred.

Submarines

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how deep in the ground the cables for wires in the experimental trial ELF transmitter at Glen Garry forest will have to be buried: and if they will need to be buried in any particular medium;

(2) if he will place in the Library a map showing the area to be covered by the experimental trial ELF transmitter at Glen Garry forest including all access routes, and any areas from which the general public may have to be excluded;

(3) what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of a permanent installation based on the trial experimental ELF transmitter at Glen Garry forest;

(4) which roads will be used for access during the construction of the experimental trial ELF transmitter at Glen Garry forest; and whether any existing forest roads in the area will need to be extended, widened, or altered in any way.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 19 February, column 573.

The detail of any proposals would be addressed in full in the notice of proposed development and supporting environmental impact assessment which would be submitted to Highland regional council, a copy of which would be placed in the Library at the appropriate time.

If a permanent installation were planned, a further environmental assessment would be made at the time.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Irradiated Food

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will place in the Library a summary of the evidence he has about the safety of food irradiation.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the following reports, all of which are already in the Library of the House.

Report on the Safety and Wholesomeness of Irradiated Food by the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods (published by the HMSO 1986).

Report of the Scientific Committee for Food (Eighteenth Series) (published by the Office of Official Publications of the European Communities, 1987).

Report on the Irradiation of Foodstuffs by the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities (published by the HMSO, 1990).

Food from Britain

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his plans for the future of Food from Britain.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to continue financial support for Food from Britain beyond the end of 1991.

Mr. Curry: I was pleased to announce on 9 February that the current arrangements for Government funding of Food from Britain would be extended until 1992-93. Under these arrangements Food from Britain will receive £3·5 million a year to cover establishment costs plus up to a further £1 million a year on the basis of £1 for every £3 contributed by industry in the previous year. It is now for the industry to demonstrate its commitment to Food from Britain by making full and best use of the services it offers.

Veterinary Product Licensing

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the new scale of fees for veterinary product licensing.

Mr. Maclean: The fees charged for veterinary medicines licensing operations have been reviewed to ensure that they recoup the full economic costs involved. Following informal discussions between my officials and the National Office of Animal Health (NOAH), I have received through hon. Members representations from several pharmaceutical companies criticising the proposed fee increases. Statutory consultation and further informal discussions are in hand.

British Apples

Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Food From Britain will conduct an information campaign in schools to promote awareness of the readily available types of British apples.

Mr. Curry: Food From Britain's promotional activities are a matter between it and its prospective clients. However, I have no doubt that it would be more than happy to explore with the British apple industry the possibility of a joint venture to promote awareness of quality British apples.

Pesticide Data

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food where he stores his records of pesticide data following evaluation at Harpenden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Data supporting evaluations are retained at Harpenden.

North Sea (Dumping)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library any correspondence he has received from other countries concerning his applications to the Oslo commission to dump (a) waste waters from the synthesis of antibiotic and anti-ulcer medicines and (b) the chalk solution from sugar refining in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: My Department has received letters from the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Denmark and Norway concerning my intention to give a further licence for the first waste.

I am arranging to place copies in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library any correspondence he has had with the companies that dump industrial waste in the North sea concerning the agreements of the second North sea conference in 1987.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the meetings he has had with the companies that dump industrial waste in the North sea to discuss the agreements of the second North sea conference in 1987, giving the name of the company and date of meeting in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have not held any such meetings.

Food Imports (Cyprus)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions or correspondence he has had with the Cypriot authorities concerning pesticide residues in imported fruit and vegetables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We have asked the Cypriot authorities for comments on recent reports about pesticide residues in their fruit and vegetables.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will give the results of all tests on imported fruit and vegetables from Cyprus for pesticide residues in 1989, giving the type of residue found and the quantities;

(2) what tests he is currently carrying out on imported fruit and vegetables from Cyprus for the levels of pesticide residues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government undertake a continuous monitoring programme of fruit and vegetables from all sources, including Cyprus, to ensure that residue levels of pesticides do not exceed statutory levels contained in the Pesticides (Maximum Residue Levels in Food) Regulations 1988. The results are published; the latest report covering the period 1985 to 1988 was published by HMSO in 1989 (food surveillance paper No. 25).

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the fruit and vegetables that were imported into the United Kingdom from Cyprus in 1989, giving the quantities in each case.

Mr. Gummer: Provisional figures show that the quantities of the main fruit and vegetable crops imported from Cyprus during 1989 were as follows:

	Quantity (tonnes)
Potatoes (fresh or chilled)	90,746
Grapefruit (fresh or dried)	32,989
Citrus fruits	22,881
Lemons and limes (fresh or dried)	12,336
Vegetable products, chiefly used for human food, eg. locust beans	10,813
Grapes fresh	8,759
Grape juice (including grape must)	4,498
Carrots, turnips, salad beetroot, celeriac, salsify, radishes and similar edible roots	2,342
Mandarins (fresh or dried)	2,047
Citrus fruit (prepared or preserved)	1,042

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amounts of money received from (a) farmers, (b) agro-chemical companies, (c) other parts of the agricultural industry and (d) other sources for the operation of (i) the farm and countryside service, (ii) the state veterinary service and (iii) the research and development service of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service for each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Sources of Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) income are not recorded in the form requested but in any event to provide them in that form would raise questions of commercial confidentiality.

Charging for ADAS services on a general scale was introduced with effect from April 1987 and the present service structure of ADAS also dates from that time. Income for the ADAS services for financial years since April 1987 is as follows:

	1987-88 (£ million)	1988-89 (£ million)	1989-90 (10 months) (£ million)
Farm and Countryside Service	8·9	10·4	10·6
State Veterinary Service	2·3	4·9	4·7
Research and Development Service	5·5	5·8	5·1
Total	16·7	21·1	20·4

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of participating farms have received a site inspection after acceptance on to the set-aside scheme; and how many of these site inspections have revealed breaches of (a) the set-aside regulations and (b) the guidelines for the management of fallow land.

Mr. Curry: The Community set-aside rules require member states to inspect a minimum of 5 per cent. of holdings on which land is being set aside under the scheme. It is not departmental policy to indicate the expected or achieved levels and inspection in the interests of proper enforcement. Information on the results of inspections in the first year of the scheme is not yet available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers indicated on their set-aside application forms that they had (a) applied for and (b) obtained planning permission for land entered under the non-agricultural use option of the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Curry: Applicants for set-aside are not required to give this information. However, the scheme literature draws attention to the requirement to obtain planning permission before the land is used for certain non-agricultural purposes.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area and what percentage of land set aside in each county in 1989 falls within less-favoured areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The information is available by MAFF division but not by county. It is as follows:

Division in which LFA land has been set-aside	Area of LFA land set-aside (hectares)	Percentage of Division total of set-aside land
Carlisle	15·4	12·7
Newcastle	561·7	47·3
Northallerton	50·5	3·3
Truro	25·7	6·0
Taunton	14·8	1·5

Note: The information relates to 1989 entrants only and is provisional.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the reduction in the 1989 United Kingdom cereal harvest due to the operation of the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Curry: The area of arable land set aside in the 1988-89 season represented about 1·2 per cent. of the United Kingdom arable area. The effect on the cereal harvest depends on assessments of what crop would otherwise have been grown on the land concerned and what the yield per hectare would have been. I shall be able to form a better view on this matter when I have the results of an evaluation of the scheme which has been commissioned by my Department from Reading university.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the impact of the set-aside scheme on agricultural employment in 1988 and 1989; and what is his estimate for 1990.

Mr. Curry: Levels of employment in agriculture are influenced by a number of factors, of which the existence of the set-aside scheme is only one. I will be in a position to form a judgment on the employment effects of set-aside when I have the results of an evaluation of the scheme being carried out which has been commissioned by my Department from Reading university.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of land in the non-agricultural use option of the set-aside scheme is being used for enterprises connected with (a) tourism, (b) recreation and (c) leisure.

Mr. Curry: The information is not available in the form requested. The information I have suggests that the majority of the land set aside to non-agricultural purposes is being used for horse-based activities, golf courses and sports fields.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will produce a breakdown by county of the number of participating farms and total set-aside areas for the second year of the scheme and options chosen per county for both years of the scheme.

Mr Gummer: The table shows a breakdown by English county of 1989 entrants and figures of United Kingdom uptake for 1989 compared with that for 1988. Information on land use options is not available broken down by county, but overall percentages for the two years are given in the table.

Veal Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by volume, value and country of origin imports of veal into the United Kingdom for each of the last four years.

Mr. Curry: The following table shows imports of veal into the United Kingdom between 1986 and 1989 by country of consignment. Figures for 1988 and 1989 exclude cuts of veal because of changes in the commodity coding.

Low-fat and Dairy Spreads

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any representations for a change in the law to bring the contents of low-fat and dairy spreads into line with current laws covering water and vitamin content of butter and margarine; and whether he has any plans to discuss the subject with interested parties.

Mr. Curry: I have received numerous representations from interested parties during the recent consultation period on the Ministry discussion paper on yellow fats legislation. The views of the food advisory committee are being sought before I decide how to proceed, but interested parties will be given an opportunity to comment on any proposed changes to existing legislation.

Sheep Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep farmers in each of the counties in England have flocks of over 1,000 ewes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Information on flock sizes is not available in the form requested.

Food (Pesticide Residues)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of correspondence he has had since 1 February with food retailers and manufacturers about pesticide residues in food.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Food Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much he has allocated on research into food spoilage and applied nutrition for each of the last five years, including the current year; and how much he estimates will be spent in 1990-91.

Mr. Gummer: Details of my Department's expenditure on food spoilage and applied nutrition in 1988-89 are contained in a report to the priorities board for R and D in agriculture and food which I have placed in the Library of the House. For 1989-90 and 1990-91 I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 19 February, Official Report, column 576. Information for earlier years is not readily available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline the effect of the financial arrangements for the capital requirements of grant-maintained schools on the capital spending budget for the local education authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend pays 100 per cent. grant to a grant-maintained school for approved expenditure on capital projects. There is no recovery of such payments from the local education authority. In addition, the Department sets annual capital guidelines for education for each LEA. These guidelines do not take account of capital grant to GM schools in an authority's area. It is for each LEA to decide capital spending on its schools in the light of local needs and circumstances, and LEAs are free, within the flexibilities of the Local Government Acts, to spend above the level of their annual capital guidelines from capital receipts and other resources.

Books (Romania)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any requests from Romania (a) to replace historic and academic books lost in fires during the Romanian revolution and (b) to supply textbooks for schoolchildren learning English as a second language.

Mr. Jackson: Any such requests would normally be directed to the British Council.

The British Council received an appeal for replacement books from the director of the central university library, Bucharest, but the following action was already being taken:

i. Following an appeal by four British academics Richard Crampton, Richard Clogg, Dennis Deletant and Stevan Pavlowitch, 250,000 books have been donated by the general public and publishers, and the British Council is paying for the transportation of the books to Romania. The British Council is also supplying books and library equipment direct to the central university library and other university libraries.

ii. No specific requests for books for schoolchildren learning English as a second language have been received but among the books going out are English language books. A main area of activity for the British Council in Romania has always been support for English language teaching, in particular to university English language departments. It is hoped that this can be expanded in the future.

GCSE

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consult the representatives of headmasters in the state and independent sectors in order to hear their assessment of the effect of GCSE examinations taking place earlier in the academic year.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has already received a number of representations from head teachers on this matter. The joint council for the GCSE is itself considering a consultation of all centres offering the GCSE. My right hon. Friend will expect to discuss with it the outcomes of that consultation.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consult the GCSE examining groups, the joint council for the GCSE and other relevant bodies with a view to ending the practice whereby GCSE examinations are taking place earlier in the summer term.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is asking for a meeting with the joint council to discuss this matter.

National Curriculum

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline the phases to which he referred in his reply of 21 February, Official Report, column 796, covering the implementation of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The phases of implementation of the national curriculum and related assessment arrangements are set out in the table:

Timetables for history, geography, modern foreign languages, art, music and physical education are provisional.

None of the attainment targets and programmes of study in maths, science and English will be a requirement for pupils with statements of special educational needs until autumn 1990. This gives time for their statements to be revised if necessary.

Individual pupils' results in any statutory assessments or public examinations will have to be reported to their parents from 1991 onwards. Schools will not be required to publish statistics of key stage 1 assessments, though they will be encouraged to do so. They will be required to publish statistics of key stage 2 and 3 assessments, but only from the second year of operation onwards. For key stage 4, they will already be under a requirement to publish GCSE results.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of passenger traffic to the continent he estimates will eventually use the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: Eurotunnel expects 43·9 million passengers to use the tunnel in 2003, 36 per cent. of passenger traffic to and from the continent.

London Roads Assessment

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many letters he had received by 23 February from residents living in London (a) in support and (b) opposed to the London roads assessment options; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what has been, for the latest available date, the number of letters that his Department has received (a) in favour and (b) in opposition to the London roads assessment options; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It will take a little time to collate and analyse the responses received. The outcome will be announced as soon as possible.

Quarterly Statistics

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations informed the decision to discontinue bus and coach data from quarterly transport statistics and replace them by information on United Kingdom-registered goods vehicles carried on roll-on roll-off ferries from Great Britain to mainland Europe.

Mr. Portillo: As part of the Government's continuing objective of lessening the burden on industry of responding to surveys, it has been decided that the quarterly monitoring of bus and coach operators' performance is no longer required for Department of Transport purposes. The decision to include in the quarterly transport statistics information on United Kingdom-registered goods vehicles carried on roll-on roll-off ferries to mainland Europe was made by the editor.

The performance of the bus and coach industry will continue to be monitored on an annual basis, and will be included in the Department's annual publication, "Transport Statistics Great Britain". More detailed information will be available in the annual specialised publication, "Bus and Coach Statistics".

Train Accidents

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of train accidents caused by technical defects in 1989; and what was the comparable number for (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and (c) 1987.

Mr. Portillo: The number of train accidents caused by technical defects in 1989 is not yet available. For 1979, 1983 and 1987 the numbers were respectively 244, 276 and 268.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inflation

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the underlying rate of inflation in each member state of the European Community at the latest available date.

Mr. Ryder: The inflation rates given in the table exclude estimates of home owners' costs and are, therefore, more comparable across countries:

12-month growth rate of consumer prices in the European Community

	December 1989[1]
United Kingdom[2]	6·1
Germany	2·6
France	3·6
Italy	6·4
Belgium	3·6
Denmark	4·8
Greece	14·8
Ireland	4·2
Luxembourg	3·9
Netherlands	1·0
Portugal	11·6
Spain	6·6

[1] Except United Kingdom, Germany and Italy (January 1990), and Ireland (1989, 4th quarter).

[2] United Kingdom figure is for RPI excluding mortgage interest payments (MIPs). Where other countries include estimates of home owners' housing costs, these have been excluded to put figures on a more comparable basis.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Poland

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Government have so far committed from the £50 million know-how fund for Poland; and how much they expect to spend in the current financial year.

Mrs. Chalker: Possible commitments on projects financed under the £50 million know-how fund for Poland now stand at around £18·3 million. We expect to spend approximately £2·3 million in the current financial year.

Oban-Korup National Park

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Cameroons on the need to prevent commercial logging companies logging in the Oban-Korup national park.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Governments of France and Germany about French and German timber companies logging in and near the Korup rain forest in Cameroon; and if he will make a statement on the consequences of such action for Her Majesty's Government's aid policy.

Mrs. Chalker: No logging is permitted in Korup national park itself. The recent press reports have been about licences granted for logging in the buffer zone around Korup. Under Cameroonian law these licences should not have been granted without prior consultation with local government leaders and village chiefs in the interests of preserving economically important trees, water supplies and traditional hunting zones in the vicinity of each village. We share the concern of the World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF) that recent logging activities may not have been subject to this condition and may be detrimental to the WWF's Korup project, which is being partly funded from the British aid programme.

The British embassy in Yaounde has already expressed its concern to the Cameroonian Ministry of Agriculture and the ambassador is being instructed to raise the matter formally at ministerial level. Meanwhile we are assured by the Cameroon authorities that existing licences for exploitation within the Korup buffer zone were issued before the establishment of the national park and that no new licences will be issued for exploitation within the zone.

We are now considering whether it would be desirable to make demarches to the Governments of countries whose logging companies are active in the vicinity of Korup, bearing it in mind that the powers of those Governments in respect of private companies may be strictly limited.

Children (Vaccination)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions Britain has made in the last year to the vaccination of children in developing countries against the main killer diseases.

Mrs. Chalker: We support immunisation programmes through the United Nations Children's Fund, to which we contributed £8·4 million in 1989-90. In the same period we provided £200,000 to the Polio Plus Campaign run by Rotary International and £64,000 to the WHO Cold Chain Support Unit. In addition, many of the bilateral primary health care projects we fund and the 315 health projects run by non-governmental organisations, which we support under our joint funding scheme, include an immunisation component.

International Organisations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those international organisations to which the United Kingdom is affiliated which grant or lend money, giving the United Kingdom's latest annual contributions where applicable in each case.

Mrs. Chalker: The international organisations and the United Kingdom contributions paid for from the overseas aid programme showing the amounts paid in 1988 (the latest year for which full data are available), are as follows:

THE ARTS

Museums

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister for the Arts what provision he has made for the refurbishment of museums in the current year.

Mr. Luce: The grant in aid in 1989-90 for the building and maintenance programme of the national museums and galleries which I sponsor was £48 million. I announced on 16 November 1989 that the provision would rise to £57 million in 1990-91; in 1992-93 the provision will be £64 million, a rise of 34 per cent. over the three years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

The Three Graces

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will further defer a decision on the application for a licence to export Antonio Canova's The Three Graces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: After consultation with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts, I have decided to extend the present period of deferral for the application for a licence to export The Three Graces until Wednesday 4 April.

Export control procedures affecting heritage items have been under review, including the policy of deferring a decision on an export licence application to enable a United Kingdom public institution to make an offer to purchase. As a result, I propose henceforth to take account of an offer from any source, whether public or private. I am ready to consider any representations by persons affected by this change of policy, which will apply both to new applications and to outstanding applications such as The Three Graces; other deferrals, including those for interim review, due to expire before 4 April will also be extended to that date.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North of 20 February, Official Report, column 781, and to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) of 20 February, Official Report, column 783, if he will list which organisations or individuals within the borough of Sunderland made representations to him opposing the recommencement of shipbuilding at the Southwick shipyard.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Representations have been made in private discussions questioning whether a return to shipbuilding some years hence, and the uncertainties that must be inherent in such a proposal, represents the best prospect for the long-term development of Sunderland and of the sites in question.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what legal basis the European Commission has to approve or disapprove the sale of land within the United Kingdom to companies within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Article 222 EEC states that

"This Treaty should in no way prejudice the rules in Member States governing the system of property ownership".

However, the Commission of the European Communities, acting under articles 92-93 EEC and any relevant Community legal instruments, may include conditions on the use of land as part of the terms on which it approves state aid where such use is material to the case concerned. Thus, for example, the payment of closure aid for shipbuilding allows the Commission to impose conditions on the use of the site concerned, and that would need to be reflected in any subsequent disposal of that land.

Biotechnology

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to control the purchase of biotechnology companies by agrochemical companies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 28 February 1990]: There are no grounds for intervention to distort market mechanisms in the purchase of biotechnology companies. Small, research-based firms in biotechnology cannot take ideas through to commercial production alone; purchase by an established company can provide the significant extra resource needed.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to ban the patenting of genetically manipulated animals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 28 February 1990]: As I indicated to the hon. Gentleman in my answer of 16 January 1990 (Hansard, column 187, Vol 165, No 31), a European Community proposal for a directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions would, if adopted, confirm that patent applications for inventions concerned with genetically manipulated animals would be granted, provided other patentability criteria were met.

Discussions on this proposal are continuing, however, and the Government will take a view on it at the appropriate time.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to assess the chlorofluorocarbon recycling technology developed by Volvo in Sweden to evaluate its applicability to British industry.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 1 March 1990]: The DTI commissioned a major study in 1989 to assess the options for CFC recovery, recycling and disposal. This study will provide us with an assessment of commercially proven recycling technologies and their applicability to the United Kingdom industry.

WALES

Health Care

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 6 February, Official Report, column 551, whose budget any follow-up treatment will be under if a patient who has been referred to a treatment centre outside his/her own health authority to receive initial treatment, is examined at facilities other than the said treatment centre following the agreement of the referring consultant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: If, with the agreement of the referring consultant, a patient from a treatment centre receives follow-up treatment in his or her home health authority, then the cost will be charged to that authority. This will still leave the referring authority with a net financial benefit in most instances since the cost of operating on the patient will have been borne by the treatment centre.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans there are with regard to the non-geriatric care currently provided to patients from Wales by the five community hospitals in Shropshire health authority, following their being sold off and converted to private nursing homes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what will happen to patients from Wales who are receiving care at the five hospitals in the Shropshire health authority when those hospitals are sold off and converted into private nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for Health on 23 February. If Shropshire health authority should decide to proceed with its proposals to change the use of some of its cottage hospitals, it will be required to consult all interested parties, including those Welsh health authorities whose residents may have cause to use the facilities. Welsh health authorities would need to consider what alternative provision might need to be made in the light of any such consultation exercise being undertaken.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to increase the funding for kidney transplants at Cardiff royal infirmary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Proposals from South Glamorgan health authority to increase kidney transplant provision at Cardiff royal infirmary are presently being considered by the Welsh Office.

Education Grants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the grants made in Wales under section 21 of the Education Act 1980, since that Act came into force, indicating the year in which each grant was made, the amount of each grant, the local authority to whose area each grant applied, and the specific purpose to which each grant was to be directed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with the information requested and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Sewage

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the amounts of raw sewage that were returned to land during the recent coastal storms in north Wales; and what steps have subsequently been taken to decontaminate areas polluted by such sewage.

Mr. Grist: The area of Towyn, Rhyl, Kinmel bay and Abergele is sewered by short sea outfalls and it is estimated that some 50,000 litres of sewage is produced per day. Until tidal surges penetrated the sea wall at Towyn, the sewage flow continued to discharge to the sea. Soon after the wall was breached, power supplies were lost and any sewage pumping would have ceased. Gravity discharges would also have ceased because there was no longer any free discharge. After the majority of the population from the affected parts of Towyn was evacuated to dry areas, sewage generation would largely have stopped in that area. Sewage from surrounding areas would have continued to flow, however, and this sewage would have been mixed with the incoming sea water. It is not possible to say whether the sewage discharged through the outfalls or escaped into the mass of flood water through drains and manholes but it is probable that quantities of sewage are present in the flood water and the proportion of sewage will increase the longer the flood waters remain. The sewage will have been diluted both by the rainfall during the period and, to a much greater extent, by the invading sea water. A small number of properties are on cesspits and septic tanks and the contents of these tanks will by now have mixed with the flood water.

Responsibility for the possible public health consequences of the flood and therefore for the clean-up operation rests with the appropriate environmental health officer who has powers to take such action as he deems fit to reduce any risk to human health.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport West, Official Report, 23 February, column 933, regarding the export criteria set out, since 1979, whether any plutonium has been exported to (a) the United States of America from the United Kingdom not kept under safeguards, and (b) to Japan from the United Kingdom which was not produced in the United Kingdom or an EEC member state; how much plutonium was exported to Canada in 1983; and from which reactor or reactors this came.

Mr. Baldry: Exports of unsafeguarded plutonium are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

During the period mentioned by the hon. Member, plutonium from the reprocessing of irradiated fuel from a Japanese reactor has been returned to Japan.

The plutonium returned to Canada in 1983 was produced from the reprocessing of irradiated fuel from the Calder Hall and Chapelcross reactors. The plutonium was brought under safeguards after extraction from the irradiated fuel and prior to its export to Canada for civil purposes. The amount involved cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality but is included in the overall total given in the reply by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 17 January 1989 at column 157.

South Africa (Oil Imports)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish his report on whether the tanker Almarc Terza broke the guidelines on oil exported to South Africa.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have nothing to add to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 11 January 1990, at columns 693-94.

Nuclear Energy (Safeguards)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assistance the United Kingdom has afforded the International Atomic Energy Agency in developing safeguards expertise under the provisions of article 12 of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom carries out a safeguards research and development programme in support of the International Atomic Energy Agency. The programme is carried out by AEA technology and currently costs approximately £1 million per year; the costs are borne by my Department.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if Her Majesty's Government have ever made available details of technical studies conducted on safeguards implementation at United Kingdom nuclear reprocessing plants to the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. BNFL and the UKAEA provide technical studies to the IAEA when agreeing safeguards approaches for their facilities; these naturally include reprocessing issues. A safeguards research and development programme is carried out for the IAEA by the UKAEA and this involves some work on plant reprocessing studies. In addition, the international study group on large scale commercial plant reprocessing (LASCAR), in which the United Kingdom is involved, provides technical guidance to the IAEA.

The information given to the IAEA on reprocessing plant safeguards is either commercially sensitive or has security implications.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. John Harker

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has received the file of information relating to the case of Mr. John Harker, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison, Kirkham; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he intends to notify the hon. Member for Stockton, South about the outcome of his Department's inquiry into the case of Mr. John Harker.

Mr. John Patten: A reply was sent on 26 January to my hon. Friend acknowledging recent representations from Mr. Harker. The representations are under consideration and a further letter will be sent as soon as the examination of the case is complete.

Deportation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations his private office has received requesting arbitration on a decision of the Chief Immigration Officer to deport individuals from the United Kingdom since the introduction of the system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. The "Guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases" describe the way in which Home Office Ministers exercise their responsibilities for implementing an effective and efficient immigration control. A copy of the guidelines is available in the Library.

Electoral Law

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to reform election law to give homeless persons the right to vote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Representation of the People Act 1983, to be entitled to vote a person must be resident at an address in a constituency or electoral area on the qualifying date and must be registered there. We have no plans to change this requirement.

Crime Victims

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will amend existing legislation to enable victims of crimes or their representatives to exercise the same right to a hearing for a retrial in the Court of Appeal as that given to a convicted criminal when new evidence is produced and a miscarriage of justice has been established.

Mr. John Patten: The victim's charter we published on 22 February—a copy of which is in the Library—sets out some questions for discussion including whether the victim could or should be given some opportunity to be heard in court. As the charter explains, we have no immediate proposals for change, but would welcome views. We could not however support a change which would enable the victim to call into question an acquittal, which would violate the principle that a person who has been acquitted should not be tried a second time.

Members' Inquiries

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long he expects to take to answer questions from hon. Members about constituents in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We aim to answer all correspondence from hon. Members as quickly as possible. At present, the average time taken to reply to hon. Members' letters on prison issues, including those about constituents in prison, is 31 days.

Football

Miss. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis showing (a) when the national football intelligence unit of the Metropolitan police will be fully operational, (b) what is the staffing level of the unit and (c) what is its annual budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The national football intelligence unit's staff (one superintendent, one inspector, one sergeant, three constables and one typist) has been at work since December 1989. Its computer support is expected to be operational shortly. Its budget for the financial year 1990-91 is £300,000. These matters do not fall within the responsibility of the Commissioner.

Romania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide easier methods for the fostering in the United Kingdom of children orphaned in the Romanian revolution.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no provision in the immigration rules for children from overseas to come to the United Kingdom to be fostered. However, children adopted in Romania, or coming to the United Kingdom from Romania for adoption, may be admitted provided that careful inquiries into the circumstances of both the child and the prospective parents show that the proposed adoption is in the child's best interests. These inquiries are necessary to ensure that children adopted from overseas are protected in the same way as children adopted in the United Kingdom.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of hepatitis B infection in prisoners have been reported since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Cases have been reported for statistical purposes only since 1984. The latest information is given in the table:

Hepatitis B: Prisoners requiring treatment or special precautions

Reporting period	Acute cases	Chronic cases (carriers)
1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985[1]	152	240
1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986	165	295
1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987	150	285
1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988	155	198
1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989	105	242

[1] 15 months.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if prisoners are informed of or offered vaccination against hepatitis B; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Vaccination policy for prisoners is modelled on practice in the general community. Prison medical officers decide which prisoner patients should be offered vaccination, using their clinical judgment and having regard to guidelines issued by the director of prison medical services. The guidelines recommend that medical officers consider offering vaccination to those prisoners who are identified as belonging to a high risk behaviour group and who are expected to remain in the prison system long enough to complete the six-month course.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action his Department has taken to prevent the spread of hepatitis B in prison;

(2) what instructions his Department issues to prison governors regarding combating the spread of hepatitis B.

Mr. Mellor: Our measures include medical inquiry and examination at the reception stage, selective vaccination on a voluntary basis, education and counselling, and limited regime restrictions for identified hepatitis B carriers at the discretion of the prison medical officer.

Governors have an important part to play in facilitating educational initiatives within the resources available to them. They have been encouraged to make wide use of the prison service education package "AIDS Inside and Out", which provides a context for the delivery of important messages relevant to the prevention of hepatitis B infection.

Broadcasting

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the transitional arrangements to be made in the Broadcasting Bill for existing cable systems other than broad band cable franchise holders.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) announced our proposals on the future licensing arrangements for local delivery systems, including SMATV systems, on 27 April last year. The transitional arrangements we are envisaging are to be seen against the background of those proposals.

As those proposals made clear, systems covering fewer than 1,000 homes will not need to be licensed by the Independent Television Commission under the new arrangements. This proposal will be implemented, subject to parliamentary approval, by the making of a designation order under the provisions of clause 65(1) of the Broadcasting Bill. Accordingly, any existing SMATV licences for systems covering fewer than 1,000 homes will lapse when the relevant provisions of the Bill are brought into force. Any existing unlicensed systems covering fewer than 1,000 homes will be able to continue in operation. Any system covering fewer than 1,000 homes, whether previously licensed by the Cable Authority or not, will be able to carry BBC services, services regulated by the ITC, S4C and services originating from a Council of Europe or convention country.

SMATV systems licensed to cover 1,000 homes or more, and which fall wholly or partly within a cable franchise area (ie an area covered by a prescribed diffusion service licence issued by the Cable Authority by the time the relevant provisions of the Bill are brought into force), will continue to be able to operate under their existing licences while they remain in force. The ITC will be empowered to extend those licences if necessary until such a time as it is satisfied that the broad band cable operator is able to offer an alternative service to the homes passed by the SMATV system.

SMATV systems licensed to cover more than 1,000 homes, which fall wholly outside any cable franchise area, will be deemed to have a local delivery licence starting from the date on which the relevant provisions of the Bill are brought into force. This licence will last for five years, and will be renewable under the provisions of clause 71 of the Broadcasting Bill after three years. The percentage of qualifying revenue for the purposes of clause 67 will be deemed to be zero. Licensees will not be granted the use of MVDS frequencies.

Systems covering more than 1,000 homes which carry only the four terrestrial channels, and which are in consequence unlicensed at present, will continue to be able to operate without the need for an ITC licence while they carry only those channels.

Other unlicensed systems covering more than 1,000 homes (including systems carrying the IBA's DBS services) which have not previously been licensed as SMATV systems by the Cable Authority will, if they fall wholly or partly within a cable franchise area, be deemed to have a SMATV licence under the terms of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. This licence will be deemed to start on the day when the relevant provisions of the Bill are brought into force, and to last for five years. The ITC will be empowered to extend the licence until such a time as it is satisfied that the broad band cable operator is able to offer an alternative service to the homes passed by the system.

Unlicensed systems meeting the same criteria which fall wholly outside cable franchise areas will be deemed to have a local delivery licence starting from the date on which the relevant provisions of the Bill are brought into force. The terms of this licence will be the same as those described outlined above in relation to SMATV systems which will be deemed to have local delivery licences.

The provisions necessary to implement these proposals will be included in the Broadcasting Bill. Subject to parliamentary approval, we are planning that the proposals will come into effect on 1 January 1991.

Blundeston Prison

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on current staffing levels at Her Majesty's prison, Blundeston, in the light of the 1988 fresh start agreements.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 February 1990]: There are at present 140 officers (including senior and principal officers) in post; regional management's target level is 146 for 1989-90 and it plans to post a further six officers to Blundeston this month.

PRIME MINISTER

Regional Development

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received about regional development in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: The Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry, for Scotland and for Wales receive regular representations on regional industrial development.

Zoonoses

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received about zoonoses.

The Prime Minister: I have not received any such recent representations. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health keeps these diseases under review.

Heritage

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on built heritage.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend and I receive representations frequently. The built heritage makes a particularly important contribution both to the quality of life within our communities and to the tourism industry. The Government are concerned to ensure that the nation's wealth of important buildings, monuments and sites are preserved wherever possible.

Global Warming

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what current involvement the United Kingdom has in (a) the international geosphere-biosphere project and (b) the world climate research programme, in regard to research conducted into global warming and the greenhouse effect.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology's report on the greenhouse effect which gives full details of the important contribution the research councils and the Meteorological Office are making to these international research programmes.

Clockwork Orange

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 27 February, when General Sir Frank King made it clear to her that he did not recall any project specifically named Clockwork Orange.

The Prime Minister: General Sir Frank King and General Sir Peter Leng gave that information to officials on Saturday 17 February.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her reply of 27 February, whether any projects not specifically named Clockwork Orange but of a similar intent or nature were known to Her Majesty's Government or military officers.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the information given by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces during the Adjournment debate on 6 February at columns 866-68.

Environment (International Co-operation)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter), Official Report, 22 February, columns 872-73, how the figures of (a) £3 million United Kingdom annual contribution to the United Nations environment programme and (b) £100 million United Kingdom contribution over three years to the conservation of tropical forests were reached.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom more than doubled its contribution to UNEP in 1989 in recognition of the increasing awareness and importance of international environmetal issues and the need to strengthen UNEP's capacity to meet these challenges.

In deciding to commit a further £109 million of bilateral aid over the next three years as part of Britain's help to conserve tropical forests we took account of the global significance of the issue, the way in which we judge the United Kingdom is equipped to help effectively in this field, the scope for contribution from other aid donors and other pressures on our aid programme resources.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what policies she has formulated in regard to (a) aid to promote democratic development, (b) aid to support educational development, (c) aid to support environmental improvement and (d) aid to support energy efficiency and security in the countries of eastern Europe following political changes in these states in the past six months.

The Prime Minister: On 22 January, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced a single know-how fund for eastern Europe. This included our existing commitments to Poland (£50 million) and Hungary (£25 million), and new money would be made available to finance help to other eastern European countries once they are fully committed to reform.

So far we have made detailed plans in respect of Poland, where we expect to spend some £2·3 million in the current financial year. Proposals are being worked out for assistance in the energy sector, and will look, among other things, at the issues of energy efficiency and the reduction of environmental pollution from power stations. The Polish authorities have also asked for assistance with the creation of new language teacher training institutes, for advice on educational reform, and an exploratory mission will be visiting Poland this month. We have also enabled groups of politicians from Poland and Hungary to participate in seminars on the United Kingdom's parliamentary system organised by the Great Britain/east Europe centre, training in media techniques, and training directly relevant to the local government elections to be held in Poland in April.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the review of tourist policy in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Following the publication of the tourism policy document "Tourism in Northern Ireland—A View to the Future" in June last year, considerable work has been undertaken to implement the proposals it contained. A number of the measures, including a new scheme of financial assistance, have already been introduced and work is in hand on the preparation of the new legislation which will be required to give effect to the full range of the proposals.

Public Houses

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grants are available for the provision of accommodation in public houses.

Mr. Needham: A new scheme of selective financial assistance will be available from 2 April 1990 to private sector projects providing additional tourist accommodation or upgrading existing facilities. Assistance in the form of interest relief grants or loans will be offered to projects which can demonstrate the potential to achieve more holiday visitors to Northern Ireland, leading to additional revenue and/or employment. Public house developments which meet those criteria will be considered. Projects in Belfast and Londonderry may also qualify for urban development grant in appropriate cases.

Prisoners

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland are presently serving sentences of detention at the pleasure of the Secretary of State; of these how many are for (a) murder and (b) other serious offences; and of these how many were admitted members of (i) the Ulster Defence Association, (ii) the Ulster Freedom Fighters, (iii) the Ulster Volunteer Force, (iv) the RUC, (v) other loyalist paramilitary groups, (vi) the Official Irish Republican Army, (vii) the Provisional Irish Republican Army, (viii) the Irish National Liberation Army, (ix) other Roman Catholic paramilitary groups, (x) any junior wing by each category of the foregoing and (xi) none of the above, at the time the crime was committed.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The sentence of detention at the pleasure of the Secretary of State can be imposed only in cases of murder. Twenty-five prisoners are currently serving such sentences. At the time of conviction, their paramilitary affiliation was as follows:

Paramilitary affiliation	Number convicted
Ulster Defence Association	3
Ulster Volunteer Force	1
Provisional Irish Republican Army	16
None	5

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons serving (a) a life sentence for murder, (b) a life sentence for other serious crime and (c) a sentence at the pleasure of the Secretary of State have been released from prison in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years; of these, how many were admitted members of each paramilitary or terrorist group or their junior wing when the crime was committed; if he will indicate the periods served; and if he will set out the information in a table.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Indeterminate sentence prisoners released by affiliation and years served (1 January 1980—31 December 1989)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of keeping a prisoner in a prison and other places for the detention of criminals by category of establishment (a) per week and (b) annually in Northern Ireland; and what comparable information is available to him on prisons in (i) Scotland and (ii) England and Wales.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Prison establishments in Northern Ireland are not categorised in the same way as in Great Britain and direct comparisons are therefore not meaningful. This is mainly because of the additional security measures required in Northern Ireland in relation to custody of large numbers of paramilitary-type prisoners. The average cost of keeping a prisoner in Northern Ireland in 1988-89 was £1,046 per week and £54,406 annually.

Roads

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total expenditure each year on maintenance of (a) motorway and trunk roads and (b) other roads in each of the last five years; and what are his projections for the current and next calendar or financial year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available in the precise form requested. Expenditure details on road maintenance are as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	[1]1989-90
Motorways	1·8	1·7	1·8	1·5	3·3
Class I and class II roads	17·2	16·0	14·8	18·5	21·7
Other roads	27·8	30·3	32·6	31·7	32·6

[1] Estimated.

Present plans are better to meet by spending some £60 million in 1990-91.

Portavogie Harbour

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to enlarge Portavogie harbour to accommodate the present fishing fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 1 March 1990]: The Northern Ireland Fishery Harbour Authority has no plans to enlarge Portavogie harbour.

The authority has submitted proposals for extra shelter at Ardglass which could add to capacity there. There are doubts about whether fish stocks can sustain the expansion in the local fleets during the last two years.

Security Forces (Dwellings)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dwellings have been searched by the security forces in each year since 1968.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 21 February 1990]: The available information on searches of premises under section 15 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 is as follows:

Year	Army		RUC
	Occupied	Unoccupied
1984	n/a	n/a	n/a
1985	104	58	n/a
1986	137	41	1,818
1987	393	72	2,474
1988	751	278	4,136
1989
1st quarter	217	89	1,144
2nd quarter	115	79	559

Most searches involve both the Army and RUC and are registered in their respective records. Both figures therefore are shown separately since there is an element of double counting.

Army Helicopter, County Tyrone

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the make, rate of fire calibre and range of the weapon or weapons used by the IRA against the Army helicopter destroyed in County Tyrone recently or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 23 February 1990]: The incident is under investigation. No further information is available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has received to his proposals for helping disabled people who are not able to work full time.

Mr. Scott: We have sent copies of "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cm. 917) to a wide range of disability organisations and other interested bodies inviting their comments on our proposals to improve the balance and structure of social security help for people with disabilities. We have now received comments from seven organisations and six individuals on our proposals to introduce a disability employment credit for people who are partially capable of work. The Social Security Advisory Committee has also written to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State describing our proposals as a significant improvement to the system of benefits for disabled people. The committee particularly welcomed the introduction of a disability employment credit.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve disability benefits in order to give assistance with communication costs.

Mr. Scott: The Command Paper "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" published on 10 January contains several proposals that will give financial help to disabled people with communication costs. The introduction of an age-related addition for severe disablement allowance will assist many disabled people who have communication needs who have been disabled early in life or at birth. People with communication needs will be eligible for the new disability allowance in the same way as other disabled people. The introduction of a disability employment credit will also help people with communication needs who are partially capable of work. In addition, people who are both deaf and blind will, from April of this year, be able to receive mobility allowance at a rate of £26·25 per week.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the additional numbers of (a) disabled people aged 60 to 79 years and (b) people aged 80-plus years who became entitled to and were awarded (i) income support and (ii) housing benefit as a result of the increases to the premiums introduced in October 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 23 February at column 937.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of (a) single men, (b) married men, (c) single women and (d) married women who will qualify for each rate of the proposed addition to severe disablement allowance and the number in each category who will not qualify for any addition.

Mr. Scott: The available estimates are in the table:

	Men	Married women	Single women
Higher rate	80,000	15,000	65,000
Middle rate	10,000	25,000	15,000
Lower rate	10,000	25,000	10,000
No addition	2,500	—	—

Benefit Fraud

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officials in his Department are involved in investigating benefit fraud.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Precise figures are not available, but it is possible to estimate the number of full-time equivalent posts on the basis of records of staff time expended on benefit fraud work. In 1988-89, the last year for which figures are available, the number of full-time equivalent posts was 2,940. Benefit savings achieved in 1988-89 were £262 million.

Charities

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the role played by charities in the provision of welfare benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Charities play no role in the provision of social security benefits. In the income-related benefits, however, we have recently announced improvements which will enable charities to increase the additional help they give to people without affecting their benefits.

Benefits (Overpayments)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances overpayments of social security benefits are recovered at common law; how many such actions were brought in the last year for which records are available; which benefits were concerned; and how much was recovered.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Certain overpayments are not subject to a determination by the adjudicating authorities under section 53 of the Social Security Act 1986, for example, where duplicate payments of benefit have been made. Where the circumstances indicate that the claimant should have been aware of duplicate payments and taken appropriate action, repayment is sought on the common law principle that money paid under a mistake of fact should not be retained.

No central records are kept on which an answer to the second part of the question could be based.

Regulations

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the draft regulations of the Social Security (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 8 February at column 787.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the amendment to regulation 72 of the Social Security (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1990 will be referred to the Social Security Advisory Committee.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Social Security Advisory Committee has agreed that the Social Security (Miscellaneous Provisions) Amendment Regulations 1990 should not be referred to it.

Family Incomes

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a table showing the level of gross earnings in April 1990 at which (a) a single householder, (b) a married couple, (c) a married couple with two children aged four and six years and (d) a single parent with one child aged three years will lose in housing benefit, assuming full take-up of family credit, average rent and rates and other assumptions, as in his reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay), Official Report, 1 December 1987, columns 565-66;

(2) if he will publish figures, similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for a lone mother with two children aged four and six years under the benefit system as uprated in April 1990 and in each of the following circumstances: (a) not working, after one year on benefits, (b) earning £20 a week from part-time working and (c) working full time and earning (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £100, (vi) £110 and (vii) £120 per week;

(3) if he will publish tables similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table showing net weekly spending power for each of a single-wage married couple (a) with two children aged four and six years and (b) with three children aged three, eight and 11 years, earning (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £100, (vi) £110, (vii) £120, (viii) £130, (ix) £140, (x) £150, (xi) £160, and (xii) £170 under the benefit system as uprated in April.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested will not be available until after the Budget. I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible after the Budget.

Community Charge

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide as much information as is available to him regarding the take-up of poll tax benefit, with a local breakdown showing the number of successful applicants in each local area and the range of benefit levels awarded.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimates of levels of take-up of community charge benefit can be obtained only when data from the relevant family expenditure survey become available. Figures for the numbers of benefit recipients in each local authority area will be available in due course but it will not be possible to provide a breakdown of the range of benefit levels awarded.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to give a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Northampton, North about community charge rebate for pensioners, tabled for priority written answer on 15 February.

Mrs Gillian Shephard: I have answered my hon. Friend's question today.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the increased cost of community charge rebate if the rebates available to pensioners were unaffected by their savings which would not be taken into account.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 February 1990]: Information is not available to make precise estimates, but it seems probable that expenditure on community charge benefit would increase by between £175 million and £225 million if the capital limit were abolished for pensioners and no income was assumed to be derived from their capital holdings.

Cash Limits

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there have been any changes to the cash limit of his Department for 1989-90.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cash limit for class XV vote 7 will be reduced by £87,000 from £1,594,692,000 to £1,594,605,000.

This reduction represents the Department of Social Security's contribution towards the scheme for providing temporary shelters by certain health authorities, local authorities and voluntary organisations in the event of a spell of exceptionally severe weather to safeguard the health of people sleeping rough in central London, as announced by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health on 20 February.

There will be a corresponding increase on administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social Services, England vote, class XIV, vote 3.

HEALTH

Northern Ireland Students

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of courses at universities and colleges in England for which his Department refuses to pay tuition fees for students from Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman: There are none. If a student successfully competes for a place tuition fees will be paid provided the student fulfils the EC residency requirements of the award scheme.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to establish whether any discrimination exists against Northern Ireland students academically eligible to enrol on courses at universities or colleges in England for which the Department of Health normally pays tuition fees.

Mr. Freeman: None. Northern Ireland students can compete for places on courses for which the Department of Health normally pays tuition fees.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Department of Health pays tuition fees on behalf of students from the Republic of Ireland and other European Community states accepted for courses at universities and colleges in England.

Mr. Freeman: Tuition fees are payable on behalf of students from Republic of Ireland and other European Community countries provided they fulfil the EC residency requirements of the award scheme.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why his Department stopped its grant to the tranquilliser withdrawal group TRANX; and what other similar groups his Department now supports.

Mr. Freeman: TRANX was grant-aided under the Department's central funding initiative for drug misuse for the maximum three-year period. Following this, TRANX obtained further funding from local statutory authorities. As TRANX continued to experience funding difficulties negotiations took place with the local statutory authorities but no agreement could be reached whereby funding could continue.

It is Government policy that support and planning for direct client services should be the responsibility of the local statutory authorities which are best placed to decide, which organisations best fit in with local service plans and budgets. In order to help regions develop such services for drug misuse, substantial amounts of earmarked funding have been allocated each year since 1986-87. This funding totalled nearly £15 million in 1989-90.

When the North West Thames regional health authority and the London borough grants unit decided not to continue to support TRANX the Department wrote in December 1989 explaining that because of this and given the constraints on central funds no further grant aid was available from the Department.

The Department is supporting MIND to produce a national directory of local tranquilliser services and public information material on tranquillisers.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of places currently provided by (a) private and (b) voluntary registered residential homes in each local authority area in England.

Mr. Freeman: The number of places provided by (a) private and (b) voluntary registered residential homes in each local authority, as at 31 March 1987 is published in "Residential Accommodation for Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People: Number of local authority, voluntary and private homes and places at 31 March 1987 England" and "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes Year Ending 31 March 1987 England". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Tuberculosis Vaccine

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the supplies of tuberculosis vaccine that are available to children.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) on 1 March at columns 304-5.

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to issue guidance to the Devon family practitioner committee to the effect that women who have had hysterectomies and those who, at their own request, do not wish to be placed on the cervical cytology recall system will not cause their general practitioner to be placed at financial disadvantage with regard to the calculation for new target payments under the new contract for general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The method of calculating target payments for cervical cytology is set down in paragraph 28 of the revised statement of fees and allowances. The population used in the calculations includes all women aged 25 to 64 save those who have had full hysterectomies. The Devon family practitioner committee is well aware of these arrangements.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the authority under which non-medical personnel may request information from general practitioners as to why patients on their lists are not on the cervical cytology recall system.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: HC(88)1, a copy of which is in the Library, states that all women aged 20 to 64 should be invited for cervical screening, unless their general practitioner has indicated that they should be excluded. The detailed operation of computerised call and recall systems for cervical screening is a matter for family practitioner committees on behalf of district health authorities.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are registered as requiring speech therapy in Liverpool; how many currently receive such help; how many speech therapists are employed by the health authority; how many vacancies remain unfilled; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Liverpool health authority has had difficulty recruiting qualified speech therapists and is currently examining, with the help of an expert adviser, how the situation can be improved. A report is due at the end of March. For detailed information, the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Liverpool health authority.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the provision of facilities for sufferers of schizophrenia on Merseyside; how many acute admission wards, day hostels and day hospitals exist for the care of schizophrenics on Merseyside; how many trained psychiatric staff are employed by the health authority; and how many schizophrenics are registered with the health authority.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Mersey regional health authority.

AIDS

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will review compensation payments for HIV patients who contracted the AIDS virus as a direct result of blood transfusions made during the course of surgery; what are the latest estimates of the number of patients involved; what would be the total cost if they were treated on a par with haemophiliac HIV victims; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The additional ex-gratia payment made to the Macfarlane Trust enabling lump sum payments of £20,000 to each haemophiliac with HIV was not compensation.

It recognised the wholly exceptional circumstances which haemophiliacs and their families face, that their insurance, employment and mortgage prospects were already affected by their serious disability, and the hereditary nature of haemophilia can mean that more than one member of a family may be affected. The situation of someone who has contracted HIV as the result of a blood transfusion is, therefore, not directly comparable.

The position at the end of January 1990, as reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre, is that in England, Wales and Northern Ireland there have been 18 cases of AIDS in people known to have been transfused in the United Kingdom, of whom 13 are known to be dead (not necessarily directly as a result of AIDS). The comparable figure on HIV seropositive transfused in the United Kingdom was 17.

Compensation is a matter for the courts.

Durham Health Authority

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for City of Durham for answer on 9 February concerning spending by Durham health authority.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 28 February at columns 226-27.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost involved in the running of the Yorkshire regional health authority headquarters and administration for 1990-91 and for each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 25 January 1990]: Figures for headquarters administration expenditure in the Yorkshire region for the years 1983-84 to 1988-89 (the latest year available) are shown in the table:

Headquarters administration expenditure—Yorkshire region
£ thousand (cash)

	Regional health authority	District health authorities	Total
1983-84	4,926	22,444	27,370
1984-85	5,924	23,741	29,665
1985-86	7,113	23,199	30,312
1986-87	7,997	24,218	32,215
1987-88	8,675	28,113	36,788
1988-89	8,962	30,479	39,441

Source: Annual accounts of the Yorkshire regional health authority (RHA) and the district health authorities (DHAs) comprising the Yorkshire region.

Notes:

1. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (for recent years including general managers) employed at headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit level: such costs are regarded as operational.

2. Prior to 1 April 1985 some districts had an associated family practitioner committee (FPC). Those authorities' expenditure for the years before that date include small elements relating to FPCs administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.

3. Regions are managed in an integrated way and total expenditure by the Yorkshire region is more meaningful than that for the Yorkshire RHA in isolation from the districts within the region.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

BBC External Services

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of developments in eastern Europe, he will review the level of provision of English language teaching of the BBC external services in those countries.

Mr. Sainsbury: We regularly review with the BBC World Service the hours of English language teaching (ELT) for eastern Europe and other regions. ELT in English to Europe and the Soviet Union increased by 50 per cent. to 26·5 hours a week between 1986 and 1989. In addition, 4·5 hours a week are broadcast in eastern European and Russian vernaculars.

Nicaragua

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the elections in Nicaragua.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Sir M. Fox) on 27 February.

NATO Arms Definitions

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are NATO's current definitions of (i) main battle tanks, and (ii) combat aircraft currently being discussed at the conventional forces in Europe talks in Vienna; and how these differ from NATO's previous definitions.

Mr. Waldegrave: Copies of the NATO texts tabled on 8 February for a new definition of tanks/armoured combat vehicles and for a revised proposal on combat aircraft are being placed in the Library of the House.

The new texts reflect western efforts to meet Warsaw pact concerns. On tanks the weight limit has been reduced to capture more vehicles (13 tonnes for tracked tanks; 20 tonnes for wheeled) and a limit of 1,500 has been introduced on heavy armoured combat vehicles (the category into which less heavy but comparably armed vehicles would fall). On combat aircraft a new ceiling of 4,700 has been set (to include medium bombers and land-based naval aircraft); aircraft whose primary function is training have been excluded and an additional 500 limit is set on air defence interceptors. The 30 per cent. sufficiency rule will still apply.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the total withdrawal of Soviet short-range nuclear forces from eastern Europe outside the terms of a multilateral disarmament agreement between NATO and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Waldegrave: NATO has repeatedly called on the Soviet Union to reduce the number of its short-range nuclear missile systems, in which it enjoys a substantial numerical superiority vis-a-vis the West.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the total withdrawal of Soviet armed forces from eastern Europe (a) at the request of east European Governments and (b) as part of the conventional forces in Europe talks in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: The CFE agreement will set limits on participating states' armed forces in the area of application (from the Atlantic to the Urals). The western treaty text (tabled on 14 December) envisages that it will be for each alliance to determine how these residual forces will be apportioned among its members. Soviet armed forces are already being withdrawn from certain east European countries as a result of bilateral agreements. The future of Soviet forces in the GDR has yet to be agreed. But we could imagine the continued presence of Soviet troops for a transitional period.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to states that are capable of producing chemical weapons having signed a chemical weapons convention before the transitional period for the implementation of a chemical weapons convention can be deemed to have been concluded.

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall encourage all states to sign and ratify a chemical weapons convention at the earliest possible time after it has been agreed.

Conventional Force Talks

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the time scale for the resumption of further conventional force reduction talks in Europe upon completion of the current conventional forces in Europe talks in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: This was set out in the speech by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the Ottawa open skies conference on 12 February.

He said:

"I believe that we should launch immediately after the CSCE Summit later this year continuing consultations among all the countries concerned, with a view to new negotiations on an agreed basis as soon as possible. We should focus on both types of dividend—on the political, as well as the military, goals of arms control. Those negotiations should be closely supervised at the political level and involve participation by Ministers, where necessary."

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the Warsaw pact's armed forces in the Atlantic to the Urals region in the categories of (i) main battle tanks, (ii) other armoured vehicles, (iii) artillery, (iv) anti-tank weapons, (v) combat aircraft and (vi) personnel belong to member states other than the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: Updated data on armed forces (which corresponds to agreed definitions) will be exchanged formally on signature of a CFE agreement. Until this is done, it is not possible to say precisely what proportion Soviet forces form of total Warsaw pact forces, but as the figures provided in the NATO booklet "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts" show, it is substantial.

Under the sufficiency rule in the CFE negotiations, individual country holdings will be limited to a fixed proportion of total equipment holdings in the area. Under the West's envisaged 30 per cent. limit, the Soviet Union would be entitled to 60 per cent. of the Warsaw pact entitlements (under the eastern 35-40 per cent. limit, 70-80 per cent.). As this sufficiency rule would take effect after parity, it implies the Soviet Union holds more than that proportion now.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in light of non-proliferation goals set by the European Community, he will make it his policy to make representations to his French counterpart concerning the agreement made on 21 February by France with Pakistan to sell a nuclear plant.

Mr. Waldegrave: If the sale to which the hon. Member refers goes ahead, we are confident, in view of the stated French position, that it will be subject to adequate guarantees that no nuclear material can be diverted to non-peaceful uses. Such guarantees would include the application of safeguards by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any member state of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty has notified Her Majesty's Government over its concern with Anglo-French technical collaboration on air-launched nuclear missile systems, in the context of United Kingdom commitments under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty article 1.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Article 1 of the non-proliferation treaty would be relevant to possible Anglo-French collaboration on an air-launched missile only if that collaboration were to involve the transfer of a nuclear warhead, which it would not.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have made any representations since May 1979 to any other Government following the violation of diplomatic immunity of an embassy or ambassadorial residence by forces not representing the Government of the state where the embassy was based.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

UN Disarmament Literature

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has any commitment to the United Nations for the responsibility of distribution in the United Kingdom and dependent territories of United Nations disarmament literature.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Romania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to assist in the provision of books, journals and academic literature to Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the destruction of Bucharest university central library during the Romanian revolution, the British Council has agreed to pay for the transport to Romania of more than 250,000 academic books collected from the public and publishers by Professors Deletant, Crampton, Clogg and Pavlovitch.

Diplomatic Personnel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requirements are placed on United Kingdom diplomatic personnel based at Her Majesty's embassies abroad with regard to keeping within the law of the state where they are based; and what guidance is given to diplomatic personnel concerning their actions under conditions when the Government of the country in which they are based are removed by a revolution.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with article 41 of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations, staff of missions overseas are expected to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving state. Guidance on this point, but not on the specific circumstances of a Government being removed by revolution, was issued to all posts and to staff in London in October 1989.

HIV

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States Government concerning that Government's practice of requiring disclosure of the HIV status of visitors to the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: In January the United Kingdom made an official approach to the United States Department of State on the question of United States immigration policy in relation to people with HIV and AIDS. The United States authorities recognised the difficulties caused by the present rules, which they have undertaken to apply flexibly and sympathetically, but they pointed out that a change in policy would require new legislation by the United States Congress.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department offers to United Kingdom citizens on questioning about their HIV status by United States of America immigration authorities.

Mr. Sainsbury: No United Kingdom citizens have sought advice from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on how to respond to questions regarding HIV status from the United States immigration authorities.

EMPLOYMENT

Advice Interviews

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a claimant attending employment service counselling interviews with either (a) a new client adviser, (b) a restart counsellor or (c) a claimant adviser who feels they are being treated unfairly or harshly can ask for the interviewer to be changed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: If a client wishes to see a different counsellor or adviser this can be arranged.

If no other suitable counsellor or adviser is available the client may see the office manager instead.

Review Interviews

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether an unemployed claimant at a review interview whom an employment service councillor thinks is refusing suitable employment either before or after the interview and completes a UB195 and UB195A, or his or her representative can ask for and receive copies of both documents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Form UB195 is a report of a claimant who fails to take the chance of a job or training offered by an employment service counsellor. It contains details of the job vacancy or training opportunity offered and the submission to, and decision of, the statutory adjudication officer. Copies of this form are not available to the claimant.

Form UB195A, which is issued to the claimant as a matter of course, includes an exact copy of the details of the vacancy/training opportunity from the UB195. The UB195A offers space for the claimant to comment on their refusal, to assist the independent adjudicaton officer in deciding whether there was "good cause" for their refusal. Claimants may keep a copy of the UB195A; or retain the original form and submit their comments on a separate sheet of paper. They may, as an alternative, ask the unemployment benefit office for a copy of the UB195A.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ensure that the operation plans of each TEC are available in the Library; and if he will also place copies in the main libraries of the areas covered by the TECs.

Mr. Eggar: The contract between my Department and each TEC will require the publication of a summary of the TEC's corporate and business plans. I shall arrange for these summaries to be placed in the Library as they become available. The contract will also provide that a full copy of the corporate plan must be made available to the public at the registered office of the TEC. TECs will be free to choose whether to place copies of their plans in local libraries.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all workplace nurseries known to him, by county, together with the number of places in each.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not collected, but indications are that the provision of such facilities is growing.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on which occasions and for what reasons the Health and Safety Executive sought outside assistance from Her Majesty's inspectors of mines with reference to health and safety issues raised during construction of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Nicholls: Her Majesty's inspectorate of mines is an integral part of the Health and Safety Executive, not an outside agency, and is involved as appropriate on health and safety matters relating to the Channel tunnel.

Radiation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if, in the light of the Gardner report on radiation risks, he will review current radiation exposure limits at facilities in Scotland licensed to handle radioactive materials;

(2) if, in the light of the Gardner report on radiation risks, he will review current radiation exposure limits at facilities in England licensed to handle radioactive materials;

(3) if, in the light of the Gardner report on radiation risks, he will review current radiation exposure limits at facilities in Wales licensed to handle radioactive materials.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 28 February 1990]: The radiation exposure limits for all workers are set out in schedule 1 of the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985. These regulations are based on internationally accepted recommendations from the International Commission on Radiological Protection which are currently being reviewed in the light of revised estimates of risk from radiation.

On 5 February the Health and Safety Commission published a consultative document inviting comments on additional interim guidance on dose limitation pending receipt of revised international recommendations.

In view of the importance of the Gardner report it is to be referred to the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) for immediate consideration. In addition, HSE, subject to the agreement of the individuals concerned, will be investigating in co-operation with BNFL whether other common factors were relevant in the Sellafield study cases. This may help to identify further measures to protect employees.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Industrial Waste

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the licences for dumping industrial waste including the substances, companies and amounts involved which have been (a) submitted to him, (b) submitted to the Oslo commission and (c) approved by him since 1 December 1989 giving the dates in each case.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

Sterling Organics
Aqueous residue from preparation of paracetamol 42,000 tonnes.
Submitted to Oslo Commission: 19 September 1989.
Application for renewal received: 18 December 1989.
Licence approved: 23 February 1990.

Fisons
Wash waters from synthesis of Intal—a treatment for asthma and allergies 4,000 tonnes.
Submitted to Oslo Commission: 19 September 1989.
Application for renewal received: 18 December 1989.
Application rejected: 16 January 1990.

Orsynetics
Salt solution from manufacture of o-tolyl-biguanide 3,000 tonnes.
Submitted to Oslo Commission: 5 October 1989.
Application for renewal received: 14 December 1989.
Licence approved: 22 February 1990.

Fine Organics
Wash waters from synthesis of antibiotic and anti-ulcer medicines 8,000 tonnes.
Submitted to Oslo Commission: 21 December 1989.
Application awaited.

Tate and Lyle
Chalk solution from sugar refining 30,000 tonnes.
Submitted to Oslo Commission: 16 February 1990.
Application awaited.

I also refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 22 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans), Official Report, column 899, in which I stated that it is the Government's intention that none of these wastes will continue to be dumped at sea after the end of 1992.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 4 December 1989, Official Report, columns 105-8, if he will list the licence applications for dumping industrial waste which in 1990 he expects to (a) renew, and (b) refuse; if he will list those for which alternative methods of disposal will be found: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have renewed licences held by Orsynetics and Sterling Organics. I expect to renew licences held by Fine Organics, Tate and Lyle, National Power and ICI. I have refused a licence to Fisons. Other licences will not be renewed if alternative means of disposal of the wastes concerned are available at the time existing licences expire.

Alternative means of disposal will be implemented for all the wastes concerned. As I stated in my written answer of 22 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) Official Report, column 899, it is the Government's intention that none of these wastes will continue to be dumped at sea after the end of 1992. For several of those licences to be renewed in 1990 an alternative means of disposal is expected to be in place within a year.

I also expect to renew licences held by British Coal for dumping stone from colleries.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 4 December 1989, Official Report, columns 105-8, if he will list the applications for dumping industrial waste which he approved in 1989, listing the substances, quantities and companies involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 4 December (Official Report, columns 105-8), which lists the applications received. All except the solid waste from boric acid production were approved.

I also refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 22 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) (Official Report, column 899) in which I stated that it is the Government's intention that none of these wastes will continue to be dumped at sea after the end of 1992.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place the details in the Library of the applications for dumping industrial waste to include the chemical components, the amounts involved and the companies involved for (a) wash waters from the synthesis of antibiotic and anti-ulcer medicines and (b) chalk solution from sugar refining.

Mr. Gummer: I am arranging to place in the Library copies of the information sent to the Oslo Commission about these wastes.

I also refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 22 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans), Official Report, column 899, in which I stated that it is the Government's intention that none of these wastes will continue to be dumped at sea after the end of 1992.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the pesticides which have been reviewed since 16 March 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list those pesticides which are currently being reviewed which are undergoing (a) a full review and (b) a partial review; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list those pesticides which have been reviewed that have (a) been subject to a full review and (b) been subject to a partial review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The following pesticides approved by my Department have been reviewed by the advisory committee on pesticides:

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those pesticides for which a review is planned that will be subject to (a) a full review and (b) a partial review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The advisory committee on pesticides will consider the most appropriate form of review for each active ingredient, listed in the reply given on 11 December, Official Report, column 512.

Sea Wall Defences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make an assessment of the adequacy of sea wall defences along the north Wales, Lincolnshire and Somerset coastlines following the extensive flooding from the storms on 25 to 27 February.

Mr. Gummer: The state of flood defences, including sea walls, is continually monitored by the responsible authorities, and close liaison is maintained by my river and coastal engineers with authorities, in particular the National Rivers Authority, which undertake most of the works. Increases in grant provision following the public expenditure surveys in 1988 and 1989 resulted from our review, in close consultation with the National Rivers Authority and other responsible authorities, of current and future coastal and flood defence needs.

On the Lincolnshire coastline, where some £9 million has been invested since 1984 in the improvement of the defences between Mablethorpe and Skegness and an accelerated programme of works of the order of £20 million is planned over the next three years, the defences have successfully resisted two recent surge tides.

On the Somerset coastline the defences, which were constructed following the serious floods of 1981 at a cost of some £16 million, have in general resisted the extreme conditions, although there has been some flooding as a result of the unusual combination of high tide, surge, and wind. Among those locations where flooding has been experienced, schemes at Shirehampton and Pill are already programmed.

Authorities responsible for defences are assessing the effects of the storms, and we have asked for an early indication of changes to programmes. Grant at rates up to 70 per cent. (rising to 75 per cent. in 1990-91) from my Department will be available for schemes which satisfy our technical, economic and environmental criteria.

Government responsibility for the north Wales coastline rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

National Fruit Collection

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest position in relation to the proposed move of the national fruit collection from Brogdale to Wye college.

Mr. Curry: The transfer of the national fruit collection from Brogdale to Wye college is proceeding on schedule. Wye college is due to take over management of the collection on 1 April, and the detailed arrangements for its transfer and maintenance are being finalised.

All the rootstocks for the first phase of fruit trees have been obtained and some have been planted. The remainder will be planted as soon as weather and soil conditions permit. Some cuttings of soft fruit have also been taken. The rootstocks will be budded in late July/August and the first fruit trees will be established at Wye in the winter of 1991-92.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with representatives of the Scotch whisky industry.

Mr. Curry: I have nothing to add to my reply of 8 February 1990, Official Report, column 726.

Bottled Water

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responsibilities the food safety directorate has in the analysis of bottled water purity.

Mr. Maclean: The responsibility for the routine analysis of bottled water rests with local authorities. The food safety directorate undertakes analysis of food and drink as part of the Government's food surveillance programme or if there is a more general safety concern. The rapid response to the recent problem experienced by Perrier is an example of the latter role.

Fish Farming

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy towards the development of fish farming.

Mr. Curry: Our policy is to encourage the development of an efficient fish farming industry within the framework of statutory controls relating to fish disease and environmental considerations.

Eggs

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many eggs were imported from the continent in 1989.

Mr. Curry: The latest figures supplied by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise show that 1,129,347 cases of eggs were imported in 1989, of which 1,109,706 cases came from countries on the European mainland.

Alar

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now order a full review of alar.

Mr. Gummer: The advisory committee on pesticides reviewed consumer safety aspects of daminozide and concluded that the margins of safety are extremely large. Further data would be required for assessment if food uses were to continue.

Mink Farm

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his replies to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 22 February, Official Report, columns 896-97, whether there is a mink farm at Stansted in Essex; and if he will make a statement about his method of compiling statistics on the numbers and locations of mink farms.

Mr. Maclean: There is a licensed mink farm at Stansted, Essex. Applications for licences to operate mink farms in England are received at the Ministry's divisional offices, which record locations and numbers of licences issued. The other agricultural departments are responsible for compiling statistics relating to farms in their regions. My answer of 22 February, column 897 contained a typographical error; the table showing numbers of mink farms should have shown a total as at 20 February 1990 of 50, not 51.

Battery Hens

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area would be required for a caged hen to allow her to perform all natural functions without hindrance; what is the area designated within the battery system per hen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Recent research has indicated that the activity demanding most space for a single bird (wing flapping) requires a considerably greater area than the minimum space allowance of 450 sq cm laid down in the Economic Community battery hens directive. In the review of the directive which is due to commence this year we will press for the minimum space to be increased.

DEFENCE

Savings

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has given any recent consideration to possible defence savings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given at column 596 on 6 February 1990 to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan).

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last discussed deployment of short-range nuclear weapons in Europe with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend met his NATO counterparts at the NATO nuclear planning group meeting in Armansil, Portugal on 24-25 October 1989, where the planning group confirmed its long-standing commitment to keep NATO's nuclear forces responsive, survivable and effective across the required spectrum of ranges.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now answer questions seeking to establish the countries in eastern Europe on which British and NATO nuclear weapons are targeted.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no grounds for any departure from the long-established practice of successive Administrations of not commenting on targeting policy.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had with the United States defence authorities regarding the stockpiling of unassembled nuclear missiles in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Military Sufficiency

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has on the policy of the Soviet General Staff towards the doctrine of military sufficiency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have taken careful note of the statements by Soviet leaders on the shift in their military doctrine towards a more defensive posture, and the impact this is having on the structure of their armed forces. The unilateral force reductions and withdrawals from eastern Europe have provided some practical evidence of this shift, as have recent Soviet exercise patterns, although enhancements in the capability of remaining Soviet forces continue. We will continue to keep this under close examination and look forward to a CFE agreement which will bring about further reductions in Soviet forces in Europe.

Information (Access)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy to compare the access to information available to hon. Members in respect of the various responsibilities of his Department with the equivalent access available to elected representatives in the United States of America and consider widening the scope and detail of the former.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is our policy to make available as much information as possible while preserving the confidentiality essential to national security and the effective working of the Department.

Aircraft (Alnwick)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any near miss report was made in respect of two Tornado aircraft and a Harrier flying over Alnwick at 14.32 on Tuesday 9 January; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: No such airmiss report has been filed.

SA80 Rifle

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to make further adaptations to the SA80 rifle.

Mr. Alan Clark: Modifications have already been trialled and tested, and will be introduced this year into production and as a retrofit.

Free-fall Bomb

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the parameters of range requirement of any new tactical air-to-surface missile being considered by his Department as a possible successor to the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on the detailed specifications for weapons systems under consideration as possible future replacements for the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether formal consultation procedures exist within NATO for the use of chemical weapons by the United States of America in Europe in time of conflict.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 11 December 1989 at column 526.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether recent assessments by United States intelligence agencies regarding the Soviet stockpile of chemical weapons will lead to any reassessment by his Department of the size of the Soviet stockpile of chemical weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 14 November, Official Report, column 188.

Forces Levels (Europe)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with reference to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989," volume 1, pages 46 and 47, what will be the balance of total ground forces (a) in the central region and (b) in the region from the Atlantic to the Urals as a result of President Bush's recent proposal to limit the number of United States and Soviet troops to 195,000 on each side being implemented.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A limit of 195,000 for United States and Soviet ground, air and air defence personnel to be stationed in a central area, comprising Belgium, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Poland, was agreed in Ottawa earlier this month. I am not aware that either side has yet decided what effect this limit will have on ground forces.

D Notices

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to introduce any new D notices.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: D notices are not issued by the Secretary of State for Defence but by the defence press and broadcasting committee. I understand that currently there are no proposals for the issue of any new D notices.

Nuclear Materials (Military Use)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the mutual defence agreement 1959 between the United Kingdom and United States of America on the mutual provision of nuclear materials for military uses is still in force; and what amendments have been made to the agreement since it entered into force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I can confirm that the "Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the United States of America for Co-operation on the Uses of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes" of 1958 remains extant.

The original text may be found in Cmnd. 537 (1958) whilst the amendments—which have generally served to extend the duration of the agreement, provide for the continued supply of materials and take account of developments in the technology being exchanged—may be found in Cmnd. 859 (1959), Cmnd. 4119 (1969), Cmnd. 4384 (1970), Cmnd. 6017 (1975), Cmnd. 7976 (1980) and Cmnd. 9336 (1984).

ENVIRONMENT

Cheshire Councils (Expenditure)

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out a table showing for each year since 1979 the expenditure of Cheshire county council, Macclesfield borough council and Vale Royal borough council in (a) cash terms, (b) constant price terms and (c) cash terms per head;

(2) if he will publish details for each year since 1979 of the direct revenue grants made to Cheshire county council, Macclesfield borough council and Vale Royal borough council in (a) cash terms, (b) constant price terms and (c) cash terms per head of population.

Bradshaw Brook (Sewage Discharges)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many instances of excessive sewage discharge into Bradshaw brook, in the North West water authority area, have been recorded during periods of wet weather, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No records are held of the frequency of operation of storm sewer overflows which primarily act as emergency outlets during periods of heavy rainfall. We have recently brought many of these overflows under the pollution control system for the first time, thereby ensuring that planned programmes of improvements will be carried out where necessary. I understand that North West Water Limited is undertaking a major resewerage scheme which should alleviate problems associated with unsatisfactory overflows into the lower Bradshaw brook at Bolton.

Local Authority Spending

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate local authority spending for 1990-91 per head of population in (a) Westminster, (b) Brent, (c) Wandsworth, (d) Humberside and (e) South Yorkshire.

Mr. Chope: I have as yet no firm information on local authority spending in 1990-91.

Shropshire County Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total spending by Shropshire county council during each of the past five years; and what has been the corresponding amount of Government grants.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Shropshire County Council

	Net current expenditure (£ million)	Direct revenue Grants[1] (£ million)
1985-86	141·981	81·087
1986-87	157·148	88·607
1987-88	173·019	93·063
1988-89	190·483	98·747
1989-90[2]	201·141	95·655

Community Charge

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a person with dual sensory impairment, such as deaf-blindness, but mentally alert, can gain exemption from the poll tax; what are the procedures for claiming exemptions; whether homes for such people qualify residents for the collective community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Disability will qualify an individual for exemption from the community charge if it involves severe mental impairment as defined in the legislation. People with other disabilities may qualify for rebates and transitional relief, the detailed rules of which contain special thresholds and allowances for disabled people. People resident as patients in NHS hospitals or in residential care homes, nursing homes, mental nursing homes or certain hostels (again, as defined in the legislation) are exempt from the community charge. Exemption is claimed by giving the registration officer details of the ground on which it is sought. The collective community charge applies only to the residents of buildings where turnover is so frequent that it appears to a registration officer that individual registration and collection of the charge would be impracticable.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rebates and reductions obtainable under the community charge system that are in real terms (a) more generous and (b) less generous than the rebates and reductions currently obtainable under the domestic rate system.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 1 March 1990]: Rebates of, and reductions in, the community charge are available through community charge benefit and transitional relief. There is no rates equivalent of transitional relief, which is therefore a generous addition to the existing provisions. Community charge benefit is based on the same income and capital criteria as housing benefit, under which rate rebates are paid; but the rate at which benefit is withdrawn as income rises is lower, which means that community charge benefit is available at higher levels of income, and is higher for any given level of income. There is no equivalent under the community charge of rate rebates under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978; but those rebates were intended to prevent disabled people having to pay higher rates as a result of necessary alterations which increased the rateable value of their home. They are not necessary under a system which is not based on property values.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received about conflict between local authorities' duties under the Coast Protection Act 1949 and the Nature Conservancy Council's responsibilities for sites of special scientific interest in respect of coastline protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: While I am aware of a number of cases where the interests of nature conservation have seemed at variance with the need for coastal protection under the Coast Protection Act 1949, I am pleased to be able to report that these are generally resolved by agreement between the parties involved.

Tenants' Choice

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to promote tenants' choice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Tenants' choice came into force in April last year and gives public sector tenants the opportunity to seek a new landlord for their homes. Many tenants are currently looking at the possibilities with the Housing Corporation. The spur of competition has also encouraged many local authorities to seek to improve the service they provide to their tenants.

We propose, with the Housing Corporation, to provide local publicity to raise awareness of the possibilities under tenants' choice in areas where it is relatively low. Advertisements will be placed in local newspapers and with local radio stations operating from the following centres: Manchester, Bradford, Huddersfield, Halifax, Leeds, Birmingham, Leicester, Nottingham, Bristol, Plymouth and Southampton. These areas were selected on the advice of the Housing Corporation. The publicity will run for three weeks from mid-March and will cost approximately £130,000. We are considering further publicity later this year in other areas where awareness of tenants' choice is currently low.

The Department, with the Housing Corporation, commissioned four videos which explain tenants' choice in detail. They should be completed by the end of March at a cost of approximately £120,000. They will be available to tenants through the Housing Corporation which has power to provide information, advice and assistance to tenants who are interested in tenants' choice.

Contracts for the publicity and the videos were awarded according to the conditions laid down by the Government information service.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce tenants' choice to Nottingham council estates; if he has made any estimate of the cost of such proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway).

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom to be targeted in his Department's campaign on the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988;

(2) what budget has been set for his Department's campaign on the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988; and whether any contracts have been awarded to outside bodies for preparation of such a campaign;

(3) whether he has any plans to jointly launch a campaign with the Housing Corporation to promote the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 1 March 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), today to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway).

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inquiries have been received from tenants or groups of tenants concerning tenants' choice.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 1 March 1990]: At 30 January 1990 the Housing Corporation had had 766 inquiries from tenant groups or individual tenants.

Local Government Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the 1990-91 revenue support grant entitlements of all local authorities in Kent in the same format as in the reply given to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling by the Secretary of State for Wales on 22 February, Official Report, columns 862-3.

Mr. David Hunt: The entitlements for revenue support grant (ie after allowing for safety net adjustments) for the local authorities in Kent are listed in the following table:

Name	Revenue support grant entitlement £
Ashford	11,426,620
Canterbury	16,979,259
Dartford	12,254,297
Dover	14,848,572
Gillingham	13,255,746
Gravesham	12,357,886
Maidstone	16,868,067
Rochester Upon Medway	20,461,365
Sevenoaks	11,966,395
Shepway	11,640,754
Swale	16,228,029
Thanet	18,493,602
Tonbridge and Malling	13,492,043
Tunbridge Wells	12,060,160
Total for all districts	202,332,795

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales in his reply on 22 February gave figures for the revenue support grant entitlements for Welsh county councils. It is not possible to calculate such figures for English county councils as although revenue support grant is paid to district councils in support of services provided by both the district and county council, there is no amount separately identified as being attributable to the county council.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his written reply dated 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable in 1990-91 per adult for each region and so on, (1) whether he will provide in each case the amount of the average rate bill per adult as a percentage of the median full-time adult male earnings; (2) whether he will provide in each case the amount of the long-run community charge per head as a percentage of the median full-time adult male earnings.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 February 1990]: I have no information on median full-time adult male earnings in 1990-91.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the relevant notional amount for each charging and precepting authority which is the amount which would have been calculated by each charging and precepting authority in relation to the financial year 1989-90 on the assumption that 1989-90 was a chargeable year; and if he will show what other assumptions he has made in arriving at the relevant notional amount, using his powers under part VIII of the Local Government and Finance Act 1988 for community charge capping.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 1 March 1990]: I have made it clear that I shall not hesitate to cap authorities which insist on budgeting excessively for 1990-91, but it would not be right for me to speculate on any aspects of the operation of any capping scheme which might be needed.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of non-domestic properties in each English region and in Wales will be treated as small properties for the purposes of the business rate transitional arrangements.

Mr. Chope: The percentage of non-domestic properties in each English region and in Wales with a rateable value in the draft local rating lists which are to take effect on 1 April 1990 of £500 or more which have a value below the thresholds of £15,000 in Greater London and £10,000 elsewhere is as follows:

	Percentage
Northern	80
Yorkshire and Humberside	79
East Midlands	77
East Anglia	73
Inner London	62
Outer London	74
Rest of the South East	65
South West	76
West Midlands	76
North West	79
Welsh Valleys	83
Wales, except Valleys	82
All properties	74

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the fullest breakdown available to him of the 1990-91 standard spending assessment figures for Tonbridge and Malling of £5·364 million and £0·466 million in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling of 26 February, Official Report, column 22.

Mr. David Hunt: The sub-components of the service elements of the standard spending assessment for Tonbridge and Malling are:

	£ million
Other services—district level	5·328367
Other services—county level	0·060166
Flood defence	0·133639
Interest receipts	−0·158585
Total other services	5·363586
Debt charges	0·696891
Capital expenditure charge to revenue account	0·043102
Interest on capital receipts	−0·273607
Total capital financing	0·466386

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 1990-91 standard spending assessments per head of population, before safety net adjustments, for each borough and district council in Kent in descending order of magnitude.

Mr. David Hunt: There is no safety net adjustment to standard spending assessments. The standard spending assessment per adult for each charging authority in Kent is shown in the table:

1990-91 Standard Spending Assessments per Adult

	SSA per adult £/adult
Thanet	106
Rochester upon Medway	105
Gillingham	99
Dover	95
Shepway	94
Canterbury	92
Gravesham	92
Ashford	90
Swale	90
Maidstone	88
Tunbridge Wells	88
Dartford	84
Tonbridge and Malling	76
Sevenoaks	73

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the approximate public expenditure cost in 1990-91 of limiting the amount that ratepayers and ratepayer couples in England need pay in community charge to £3 a week over their 1989-90 rates bill, through the transitional relief scheme to individuals that he announced in October 1989, if local authorities in England spend (a) not more than 10 per cent. above their standard spending assessment and (b) not more than 15 per cent. above their standard spending assessment.

Mr. David Hunt: The transitional relief scheme gives relief based on the lower of the assumed charge or the actual charge. If the scheme operated in the way described, relief in many authorities would therefore be based on actual charges rather than assumed charges. I have no firm information on planned spending in most authorities and I am therefore unable to estimate the cost of the schemes described.

International Garden Festival Site (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of the international garden festival site, Liverpool.

Mr. Moynihan: The Merseyside development corporation is currently negotiating terms for the disposal of the site to a private company for development of leisure facilities.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), Official Report, 23 February, column 929 (a) how many copies of the consultation paper on the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 issued on 25 January, to which he makes reference, have been published, (b) to which organisations and individuals the consultations have been distributed and (c) when he expects to collate and analyse comments received on the paper.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is as follows:

(a) 1,800 copies of the consultation paper have been printed;

(b) the organisations to which the paper was initially distributed are listed in the annex to the Department's consultation letter of 25 January, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Since then copies of the consultation paper have been sent on request to 330 organisations and individuals; and

(c) comments on the proposals in the consultation paper have been invited by 30 April 1990 and I will consider those received as soon as possible after that date.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), Official Report, 23 February, column 930, if he will make it his policy to ask Her Majesty's chief inspector of pollution to compile a list of all firms known to (a) have imported toxic wastes since 1979 and (b) be currently importing toxic wastes.

Mr. Trippier: There is no central record of firms known to have imported toxic waste since 1979. From November 1988, information arising from the consignment notes required under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988, which includes the identity of importers of waste for disposal in Great Britain, has been collected by HMIP and the waste disposal authorities concerned.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any further information from the United States authorities or from any other source concerning the problem of toxic waste in Wath upon Dearne.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 1 March 1990]. I will write to the hon. Member.

Sewage

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the amounts of sewage that were returned to land during the recent coastal storms; and what steps have been taken to decontaminate areas polluted by such sewage.

Mr. Trippier: It is unlikely that more than minimal amounts of sewage were returned to land during the recent storms, and consequently there should have been no pollution of land requiring treatment. Any decontamination which might have been needed would be a matter for local authorities.

Water Charges

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he took into account, other than those from the West Kent water company, before he announced his proposals for that company's K factor on 7 February.

Mr. Trippier: Under section 14(5) of the Water Act 1989 the requirement for the Secretary of State to consider representations before determining a company's initial K factor relates only to representations by the company.

Change of Landlord Applications

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications have been received by public sector landlords under section 96 of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 1 March 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) on 27 February 1990, to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen), Official Report, column 174.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many preliminary procedures under part IV of the Housing Act 1988 have commenced.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 1 March 1990]: At present, 20 tenant groups have been introduced to potential tenants' choice landlords by the Housing Corporation.

Fifty-eight other tenant groups are involved in preliminary discussions with the Housing Corporation.

Flood Protection

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the 1990-91 standard spending assessment for flood protection for the London borough of Westminster calculated on the same basis as the 1990-91 levy from the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 1 March 1990]: The flood defence element of the standard spending assessment for Westminster is £7·271 million. I have no information for Westminster on the 1990-91 levy from the National Rivers Authority.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy to floodlight the river frontage of the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 February 1990]: The river frontage of the Palace of Westminster is floodlit during the summer recess only, mainly because at other times the bright lights would disturb those working in the rooms on that side of the building.

I have no plans to change the current practice.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Women Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many applications from women teachers who elect to cover pre 6 April 1988 service for family benefits purposes are outstanding;

(2) how many applications have been made by women teachers since the Government announced that women teachers could elect to cover, for family benefits purposes, their services prior to 6 April 1988;

(3) what is the average length of time taken to process applications made by women teachers who elect to cover pre 6 April 1988 service for family benefits purposes.

Mr. Alan Howarth: About 13,000 women teachers have elected for their service before 6 April 1988 to count for family benefit purposes. Only 500 elections remain to be processed and these are mainly cases where either the teacher or employer has incorrectly completed the election form or has provided insufficient information. Information on the average length of time taken to process the cases is not available.

University of Wales

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what, over the last five years for which figures are available, have been the proportions of University Grants Committee/Universities Funding Council grants to universities in the United Kingdom allocated to the university of Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Recurrent grants to the university of Wales as announced in the University Grants Committee's allocation letters were as follows.

Academic Year	Wales £ million	All Great Britain £ million	Wales as per cent. of total
1985-86	70·55	1,184·7	6·0
1986-87	71·84	1,220·9	5·9

Single Sex and Religious Schools

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) boys and (b) girls there are in single sex and religious schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of boys and girls in maintained single sex and religious schools in England is as follows:

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many and what percentage of women sit on boards awarding research grants.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend sponsors the five research councils—the agricultural and food research council; the economic and special research council; the medical research council; the natural environment research council and the science and engineering research council, all of which award grants for scientific research. At present, total membership of the councils is 102 and the number of women is 7, or 6·9 per cent.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) women lecturers and (b) men lecturers there are in (i) polytechnics and (ii) universities; and whether he will provide a break down of these by grade.

Mr. Jackson: Information for academic staff in universities is shown in the table.

Great Britain Full-time university academic staff 1988-89

	Men	Women	Total
Professors	4,252	137	4,389
Readers/Senior lecturers	8,357	765	9,122

Other grades	3,089	2,122	5,211
Total	37,490	8,792	46,282

Source: USR staff record.
Information on the gender of polytechnic lecturers is not available centrally.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sessions on equal opportunities are included in all the Department's management training courses. There are two managers at grade six or above outside headquarters: both have received some equal opportunities training.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many research grants were given to (a) women and (b) men in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available. Most Department of Education and Science research grants are placed with research institutes rather than individuals. The research councils are responsible for the allocation of research grants within their areas.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what child-care provision his Department provides for pre-school children of the employees; what child-care provision for school holidays and after school care is provided for employees' children aged five years and over; what plans he has to improve provision in the next five years; and how these will be funded.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has not yet provided child-care facilities for either the pre-school or school aged children of its employees; it has however contributed to the Westminster holiday play scheme. Currently consideration is being given to the provision of creche facilities and a holiday play scheme at the Darlington office. In London the Department is participating in an interdepartmental study of the scope for providing creches centrally and in commuting areas. Provided that the schemes can be justified as good value for money the Department could contribute to both the capital and running costs.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mrs. Rumbold: Senior executive officer.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the number of women in senior academic positions.

Mr. Jackson: The recruitment and promotion of staff is a matter for individual institutions.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mrs. Rumbold: The percentage of women in each grade requested is as follows:

Grade	Per cent.
7	25
6	23
5	21

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has plans to ensure that local education authorities' development programmes for further education provision will provide child-care facilities which allow (a) parents and (b) mothers to attend colleges, further education institutes, polytechnics and universities.

Mr. Jackson: No. Under the arrangements for local management of colleges provision of child-care facilities will normally be a matter for the governing bodies of institutions to determine.

Disabled People (Training Courses)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many training courses are funded by his Department for the disabled.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not directly fund courses of training or education: this is for the local education authorities. The training needs of the Department's disabled staff are provided for as they arise.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mrs. Rumbold: This Department's policy is that sexual harassment is a form of misconduct which is unacceptable and where substantiated, will be dealt with as a disciplinary matter. Guidance about sexual harassment, reporting complaints and disciplinary procedures was issued to each member of staff last year. Over the last five years three cases have been reported each of which was investigated. In one case a formal warning was issued.

Pin-ups

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's policy is to encourage staff to respect the feelings of others. It has issued guidance to all staff about sexual harassment which could include offensive pin-ups. It is not considered necessary to issue specific instructions about offensive pin-ups.

Exam Results

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will provide a breakdown of GCSE and A-level results by gender and subject.

Mrs. Rumbold: The figures in the table relate to school leavers of all ages in England in 1987-88, including their achievements at O-level and CSE gained in earlier years.

Child Minders

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many training courses for child minders are funded by his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total public expenditure on nursery schools and classes in each year from 1975-76; and what was the total public expenditure on these services as a percentage of the gross domestic product for England and Wales for each of these years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures for expenditure on nursery schools and classes alone are not available. Figures for current expenditure on all pupils aged under 5 in England are given in the table.

1989-90	561	517	0·11

Notes to table:

1. Under-5s include those in nursery schools, nursery classes in primary schools, and other classes in primary schools.

2. The current spending figures are taken from successive DES Chapters of the Public Expenditure White Paper. The figure for 1975-76 is an estimate derived by applying to the White Paper figure given at 1980 survey prices a conversion factor calculated from local authority returns of price changes. The figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are provisional.

3. The money Gross Domestic Product figures are taken from Table 21·2·1 of Chapter 21 of the 1990 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm 1021). The GDP covers the whole of the United Kingdom; a GDP for England and Wales is not available.

Teacher Training

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish (a) the target intake figures for each polytechnic or college education department of faculty for 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990, and (b) the actual intake in each case for 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Initial teacher training target and intake figures for public sector institutions are as follows:

Replan

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his decision about the future of Replan.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend will announce his decision on the future of the Replan programme when he has considered the issues fully.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish the evaluation undertaken by his Department of the Replan project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Replan programme was introduced in 1984 with the aim of creating better opportunities for unemployed adults. It was initially funded to run up to 1987, but was subsequently extended on four occasions and will continue in its present form up to October 1991. The Government are currently undertaking a policy review of the programme, and have commissioned the preparation of an evaluation study as part of that review. The final report of the study is expected shortly. My right hon. Friend will consider whether the findings of the evaluation study should be more widely available when the policy review is completed.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply on 26 February, Official Report, column 3, whether he will carry out a survey of the current availability of land for use as school playing fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so. The provision of school playing fields is a matter for LEAs and others responsible for the schools.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will seek a report from the London borough of Enfield about the position of school playing fields for the proposed Southgate school consolidation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has received a submission from Enfield LEA seeking formal approval to a building project associated with the proposed consolidation of Southgate school. The submission includes a certificate confirming that the proposals will comply with the statutory standards. These include playing field requirements. The proposal will be considered by the Department in accordance with normal procedures.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will ask the medical research council to undertake research concerning the relationship between the development of chronic bronchitis or emphysema and exposure to substances associated with the processing, smelting, working or production of steel.

Mr. Jackson: No; it is for the council to determine its own priorities for funding from its grant in aid.

Human Infertility

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the research the Government are currently funding into the causes of human infertility; and what is the cost to the Government of this research.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 30 October 1989, Official Report, columns 11-13. The cost of research into the causes of human infertility has not been separated out from the overall cost of research into human infertility.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the terms of reference of the Sir Anthony Duff inquiry of 1987 into the security services.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my statement in the House of 6 May 1987.

Sea Dumping

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to transfer responsibility for regulating sea dumping from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to the Department of the Environment.

The Prime Minister: No.

Deforestation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 28 February, what she is doing to implement Dr. Holdgate's suggestion that the priority for western Governments is to steer deforestation practices in the direction of sustainable cropping systems.

The Prime Minister: Helping developing countries with sustainable forest management is the key objective of the British aid programme's increasing support for tropical forestry activities.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on Tuesday 27 February, what sums have been expended by Her Majesty's Government in preparation or advocacy of self-governing status of hospitals within the National Health Service.

The Prime Minister: Over £80 million has been made available this year for preparation for the implementation of the National Health Service review proposals as a whole. Resources have not been specifically allocated from within this sum for the preparation of National Health Service trusts.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, Official Report, 26 February, column 8, she will set out the policy considerations involved in her decision not to place in the Library the letter to Mr. Colin Wallace to which the hon. Member made reference.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to do so.

Press Briefings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give details of the contents of the press briefings by her press secretary in relation to the Leader of the Opposition in the week beginning 12 February.

The Prime Minister: It is not the practice to give details of press briefings.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Notice Questions

Mr. Beith: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many private notice questions were answered (a) from Back Bench Members and (b) from Opposition Front Bench Members in the sessions of 1977-78, 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: For sessions 1977-78 and 1978-79 it is not possible accurately to identify whether private notice questions were asked by Back Bench Members or Opposition Front-Bench Members. However, of the 20 questions asked in Session 1977-78 my best assessment is that six were asked by Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen and for Session 1978-79 the numbers were 29 and 13 respectively. In Session 1988-89, a total of 35 private notice questions were asked; of these, 21 were asked by Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Baltic Gold

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Baltic gold; and what is its current value.

Mr. Waldegrave: When the Baltic states were incorporated into the Soviet Union in 1940, the property of a number of British nationals was seized without compensation. The Soviet authorities also did not accept responsibility for the external debts of the Baltic states, including three external loans which had been placed in London. To safeguard British interests, the British Government responded by freezing the gold reserves of the three Baltic central banks which were deposited in London, and which were claimed by the Soviet authorities.

Negotiations between the British and Soviet Governments culminated in an agreement which was signed on 5 January 1968. This provided that the British and Soviet Governments would not pursue their respective claims. It thus enabled the British Government to use most of the money realised from the sale in 1967 of the Baltic gold reserves (in addition to certain other assets of the Baltic States and ceded territories) to meet in part the claims of British creditors who had lost assets in the former Baltic states and in certain other territories incorporated into the Soviet Union. The judicial determination of these claims was carried out by the Foreign Compensation Commission in accordance with the Foreign Compensation (Union of Soviet Socialists Republics) Order 1969; claimants eventually receiving 42·6 per cent. of the assessed value of their claims.

The Baltic gold (weighing 460,220 fine ounces) realised £5·8 million when sold in 1967. Its value would be approximately £112·17 million at current prices.

East European Foreign Ministers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his Polish, Hungarian and Czechoslovakian counterparts; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met his Polish and Czechoslovak counterparts at the open skies conference in Ottawa on 12 to 14 February. They discussed various issues of bilateral relations, internal developments in Poland and Czechoslovakia, and German reunification. My right hon. Friend met the Hungarian Foreign Minister, Dr. Horn, on 28 February. They discussed a number of bilateral issues including the know-how fund for Hungary, and other questions relating to the future of Europe.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong detention camps have injured themselves in protest at the British Government's screening policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Since 16 June, 12 people have injured themselves in Hong Kong detention centres.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is given generally to Vietnamese boat women in Hong Kong detention camps as to the health attributes of the contraceptive drug Depo Provera and its consequences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on this question on 14 February at column 235.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to improve trade and consular facilities in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Increased resources are being directed to United Kingdom official representation, including trade and consular facilities, in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union to enable our diplomatic missions there to meet new demands arising from the dramatic changes in these countries. Staffing has already been strengthened at several posts to deal with increased visa demand and with work connected with the know-how funds. Further reinforcement to meet these and other tasks will be made in the next few months.

Tunisia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of the monument at Tabrouna, Tunisia, has been undertaken by Her Majesty's embassy in Tunis, in order to ensure its protection and preservation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The embassy is continuing to monitor the condition of the monument at Takrouna. A member of the embassy visited the site on 21 February.

Vietnam

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Vietnam by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude).

Mr. Maude: I visited the Socialist Republic of Vietnam from 18 to 21 February for talks with the Vietnamese Government. There were wide-ranging and useful discussions. I signed an agreement to speed up the voluntary return of boat people from Hong Kong, in which connection the Vietnamese Government will, with British financial assistance, construct a new transit centre so that by 1 May 1990 around 1,000 returnees a month can return. I explained that the continued failure of the Vietnamese Government to accept their international obligations notably towards their own citizens could not avoid being an obstacle to the development of bilateral relationships. The Vietnamese assured me of their concern to settle the boat people issue. Her Majesty's ambassador in Hanoi is continuing the discussions.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his discussions with Senor Diego Cordouey, Foreign Minister of Ecuador, on rain forest problems during his recent visit to London.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have discussed this matter with the Government of Ecuador on a number of occasions. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I discussed a wide range of other issues with Dr. Cordovez during his recent visit to London.

Coto Donana National Park

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Spain about the conservation of the Coto Donana national park.

Mr. Maude: We recognise the international importance of the Coto Donana national park, and the concern shown by conservation bodies within Spain and more widely about its future. The European Commission is aware of possible breaches of the wild birds directive, and has begun infraction proceedings against Spain.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Her Majesty's Government intend to put forward at the third preparatory committee meeting in Geneva on 24 April to 4 May, for the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and whether any financial support has been made available to non-governmental organisations to attend this final preparatory meeting.

Mr. Waldegrave: The third preparatory committee will be devoted largely to administrative aspects of the review conference. As convenor of the western group of non-proliferation treaty parties in Geneva, the United Kingdom has been active in the preparations. No financial support has been made available to non-governmental organisations to attend the meeting.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a breakdown of the current ivory stocks in Hong Kong according to weight and origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 15 February 1990]: The Hong Kong Government's records do not provide a breakdown of the current ivory stocks according to weight and country of origin. However, CITES certificates show that stocks originated from the following countries:

Botswana, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Malawi, Mozambique, Namibia, Somalia, South Africa, Sudan, Tanzania, Uganda, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

The total weight of these stocks is 254 tonnes of raw ivory and 104 tonnes of worked ivory.

WALES

Housing Grants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to revise the administrative structure of the housing grant system due to be introduced in Wales in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The day-to-day administration of the new home renovation grant system will be the responsibility of local housing authorities. My hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, announced on 22 February that implementation of the major provisions of part VIII of the 1989 Act in England and Wales will be deferred to 1 July 1990. This will allow local authorities to prepare for a smooth transition to the new system and maintain the momentum on renovation activity.

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what volumes of toxic wastes and contaminated landfill rubble has been deposited in the Cwmrhydyceirw quarry in Morriston (West Glamorgan); and whether this site is licensed for receipt of polychlorinated biphenyl contaminated waste materials.

Mr. Grist: Information on deposits at licensed disposal sites is not held centrally; it is for the licensing authority to specify the types and quantities of waste which may be deposited. I understand that the Cwmrhydyceirw quarry site is not specifically licensed by Swansea city council to accept PCB contaminated waste.

Water Pollution

Mr. Allan Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what water supply tests for bacterial and other infections have been carried out in Mid Glamorgan health district buildings in the past two years.

Mr. Grist: Mid Glamorgan health authority has a policy for the regular testing of water. Sampling is undertaken every three months at every hospital with testing undertaken at the University hospital of Wales.

M4, Earlswood-Lôn Las

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has made plans relating to the first stage of construction for the M4 missing link between Earlswood and Lôn Las to ensure that additional traffic lanes can be constructed with ease if traffic flows exceed predicted forecasts.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The design of this section of the M4 would permit an additional lane to be added in each direction with minimal disruption should future traffic levels justify it.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) in July 1988.

In addition, my Department has recently introduced a holiday play scheme for the children of members of staff. The provision of nursery facilities is being considered.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Office runs three mandatory management courses which include sessions on equal opportunities for women. In addition, and as part of its equal opportunities policy, my Department provides four women-only management courses.

Only two officers at grade six and above are employed outside Cardiff; as yet, neither has attended a training course with equal opportunities content.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's child care network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Grist: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter of member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents who wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health, the Welsh Office and the ministerial group on women's issues, on which the Department is represented, has encouraged the development of a range of high quality child care options for both employers and parents.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Grist: The Department ran a holiday play scheme for school-age children of staff in Cardiff last summer and plans to do so again for the Easter and summer school holidays this year. The scheme is substantially self-financing, but it receives some financial support from the Welsh Office and the other Government Departments that make use of it.

The Welsh Office is looking into the possibility of providing nursery facilities for its Cardiff staff in conjunction with other Government Departments.

The Department does not arrange after-school care for the children of staff and has no immediate plans to do so.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department's equal opportunities officer is a senior executive officer.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

Grade	Percentage of Women
4	33
5	15
6	24
7	12

1. As at 1 January 1990
2. The grade categories shown include equivalent professional grades.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department's policy on sexual harassment is that it will not be tolerated and may lead to disciplinary proceedings. Written guidance on the complaints procedure to follow in cases of sexual harassment has been made available to all staff. Two complaints have been reported in the last five years, both of which were settled to the satisfaction of the individuals concerned without the need for disciplinary action.

Pin-ups

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Peter Walker: A new equal opportunities policy statement is planned to issue to all staff this year to encourage further good equal opportunity practice within the Department. It will remind staff that they should not display posters or pictures which might cause offence to others.

Cancer

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will provide figures for the incidence of (a) leukaemia, (b) lung cancer, (c) colon cancer and (d) stomach cancer in each district in Wales for each of the last 10 years;

(2) if he will publish up-to-date figures on the incidence of leukaemia in each district of Wales, together with the figures for each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Grist: Data for recent years are not yet available, and earlier years' figures are not readily available in the form requested. I therefore refer the hon. Gentleman to the figures given in the Welsh Office publication "Cancer Registration in Wales 1974-1984".

Llanelli General Hospital

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new junior doctors are intended to be recruited for the new Llanelli general hospital.

Mr. Grist: The staffing levels of the new Llanelli general hospital are primarily a matter for the health authority to decide within the resources available to it, subject to the normal arrangements for the appointment of junior staff within the framework of the "Achieving A Balance" agreement between the Health Departments, the professional and the NHS for the reform of the hospital medical staffing structure.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of all junior hospital doctors in the National Health Service in the whole of Wales work within the South Glamorgan health authority area.

Mr. Grist: As at 30 September 1988, a total of 30 per cent. of junior hospital doctors (whole-time equivalents) in post in the NHS in Wales were employed by South Glamorgan health authority. Junior hospital doctors includes the grades of house officer, senior house officer, registrar, senior registrar, associate specialist and senior hospital medical officer.

Bryntirion Hospital, Llanelli

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the soil sample collection procedures used in the recent tests of PCB levels carried out by the pollution inspectorate in an area adjacent to Bryntirion hospital, Llanelli, were identical to the procedures used by the university of East Anglia while carrying out the original tests in the same area, as reported in the HMSO publication ISBN 0 11 7522686.

Mr. Grist: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution took the samples on both occasions and the procedures were identical.

Old People's Homes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authority old people's homes there were in Wales in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The number of local authority old people's homes in Wales at 31 March 1979 was 200 and at 31 March 1989 it was 192.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many privately owned old people's homes there were in Wales in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The number of privately owned old people's homes in Wales at 31 March 1979 is not separately identifiable from available sources. However, the number of private and voluntary homes combined was 80. As at 31 March 1989 there were 461 private homes and 23 voluntary homes for elderly people.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to enable elderly people in Wales to meet the fees of privately owned homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: At present public support for elderly people in independent sector residential care and nursing homes is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. The proposals for the new arrangements for 1 April 1991 are set out in chapter 3 (paragraphs 3.7.6. and 3.8.2) and chapter 9 of the "Caring for People" White Paper (Cm 849).

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to encourage local authorities to open more publicly funded elderly people's homes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The "Caring for People" White Paper (Cm 849) makes it clear that local authorities will need to review the level of provision in their own homes in the light of the new community care proposals.

Tyre Dump Fire (Powys)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the environmental impact of the recent three-month long fire at a tyre dump in Powys.

Mr. Grist: The company is seeking to bring the fire under control and the position is being monitored by Radnor district council which is under a duty to supervise the waste disposal sites it licenses under the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

When Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution last visited the site there was no emission of smoke and only a slight localised odour problem. Subject to a satisfactory surface seal being maintained, the situation will be contained.

I am advised that monitoring at the public water supply intake 85 km downstream by the National Rivers Authority has shown that phenol concentrations are within drinking water standards. Although there is some pollution of streams in the immediate vicinity of the fire, action on site has prevented the spread of pollution downstream.

Litter

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the maximum fine for improperly disposing of litter in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Littering as an offence under the Litter Act 1983 attracts a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale, currently £400. There are proposals in the Environmental Protection Bill to increase this to level 4 on the standard scale, currently £1,000.

Planning Aid Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has proposals to renew funding for Planning Aid Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Planning Aid Wales has submitted an application for funding under the Department's 1990-91 special grants—Environmental—programme. This is currently being considered together with other applications for funding from the limited resources available through this programme. Planning Aid Wales has already benefited from this programme, receiving over £53,000 since 1985.

Toolsheds

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether rates are charged in Wales for toolsheds used only to store tools for growing vegetables on allotments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The decision whether any particular property is non-domestic, and therefore rateable after April 1990, is a matter for the valuation officer. In reaching decisions on rateability with respect to toolsheds, the valuation officer will have regard to section 66(1)(d) of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, which provides that property is domestic—and so not rateable—if it is private storage premises used wholly or mainly for the storage of articles of domestic use.

Imported Waste

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received with regard to the importation of contaminated rubble from West Germany via Max Recovery's transfer station in Swansea to direct landfill in Cwmrhydceirw quarry.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has received representations from an hon. Member on behalf of constituents expressing concern about the proposed importation. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has received a letter from Swansea city council seeking advice.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to publish amended versions of Department of the Environment pamphlets on community charge reductions and the uniform business rate in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Welsh Office leaflets on community charge benefit were distributed to all households in Wales late in 1989. There is no need to produce a separate publicity leaflet on community charge transitional relief, because the Welsh scheme does not require applications to be made in order that relief can be awarded. On business rates, I have made available since March 1989 a pamphlet, "The New Business Rating System in Wales". This has been regularly updated. The latest revision, dated January 1990, is in the Library. Copies have been made available through Welsh business organisations, district valuation offices and from the Welsh Office in response to enquiries.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) part-time and (b) full-time staff have been brought in to each district, borough and city council in Wales to deal specifically with the community charge or poll tax.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much extra expenditure has been incurred by each district, borough and city council in Wales on (a) the adaptation of current information systems and (b) purchasing of new technology, as a direct result of implementing the poll tax.

Mr. Peter Walker: The current and capital expenditure incurred by each district council in Wales on the implementation costs of the community charge in 1989-90 are shown in the table:

Family Practitioner Committees

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the new general managers of family practitioner committees in Wales have had previous careers in the armed forces.

Mr. Grist: Fifty per cent.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were (a) the target totals and (b) actual expenditure for each district, borough and city council in Wales for expenditure on the implementation and administration of competitive tendering exercises during 1989.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally. Quantification of these items in budgets and accounts is a matter for individual local authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has taken any steps to prevent individuals from the auditing firms criticised by his inspectors for audits of investment companies from participating in development of auditing policy in relation to investment business.

Mr. Redwood: If, by referring to audit policy, the hon. Member has in mind the work of the Auditing Practices Committee then I have taken no steps to influence which individuals are appointed to that committee by the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies.

Company Audits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to legislate to require auditors of companies actively to evaluate and seek evidence relating to the post balance sheet events occurring between the date of the audit report and the following annual general meeting.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will seek to legislate to require company auditors to alert the users of financial statements of the likelihood of financial insolvency;

(2) whether he will seek to legislate to require auditors to report on the financial soundness of companies.

Mr. Redwood: No. The auditors' duty is to report to members of the company. There is a presumption under the accounting principles set out in the Companies Act 1985 that the company is carrying on a business as going concern. Auditing standards already prescribe that where there are doubts about the company's ability to continue as a going concern auditors should qualify their report appropriately.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to amend schedule 12 to the Companies Act 1989 so as to discourage organisations seeking recognition as qualifying bodies from using objective tests to further theoretical knowledge.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to amend the Companies Act 1989 so as to require the supervisory bodies to provide tangible proof to any member of the public showing that they have taken active steps to monitor compliance with the rules on auditor independence.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to legislate to require auditors of all large companies to report on the effectiveness with which a company utilises its assets.

Mr. Redwood: No. It is the auditors' function to report on the company's annual accounts. It is for others to judge from those statements the performance of the company.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to legislate to require company auditors to report all departures from the Companies Acts.

Mr. Redwood: No. It is already a requirement of the Companies Act 1985 that the auditors' report shall state whether in the auditor's opinion the annual accounts have been properly prepared in accordance with the Act. There is professional guidance on how the auditor should report departures from statutory requirements.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a list of the organisations which have written to him either supporting or opposing the implementation of section 15 of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: A number of detailed comments were received in response to my Department's recent consultative document on a draft of the regulations to implement section 15 of the Companies Act 1989. None, however, raised the question whether or not the provision should be implemented.

GEC

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to meet the chairman of GEC-Alsthom-General Electric European Gas Turbine Company to discuss investment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Not at present. The company will, I have no doubt, keep us advised of its plans for any new investment in the United Kingdom as its predecessor did.

Global Warming

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to put forward proposals at the next Council of Industry Ministers to initiate industrial developments and changes in industrial design and practice to reduce discharges of gases presently causing global warming.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The agenda for Council of Ministers meetings is determined by the presidency, which is currently held by the Republic of Ireland. Environmental issues such as those cited by the hon.

Gentleman have important implications for business and may well be considered by the Industry Council in due course. However, there are no present plans for such discussion. In the meantime, the Department of Trade and Industry environmental programme already contains a range of measures designed to help and encourage firms to respond positively to the challenges and opportunities presented by environmental issues such as global warming.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, at the last meeting of the European Ministers Research Council, held in Brussels on 26 February, he put forward any proposals for (a) European Community collaboration on research to combat the greenhouse effect and global warming climate change and (b) intergovernmental and inter-institutional collaboration on environmental improvement research.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I attended the Research Council on 26 February. This included an exchange with a delegation of Members of the European Parliament on the overall 1990-94 EC R and D framework programme.

The 1990-94 framework programme includes a programme of environmental research (414 mecu or £298 million) which is 59 per cent. larger than the previous EC programme and includes research on the subjects raised by the hon. Member.

An agricultural research programme and a co-operation agreement with EFTA countries on the medical and health research programme were also adopted.

Investment (North-west)

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to improve investment in the north-west.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All Department of Trade and Industry policies are aimed at encouraging investment in the north-west and throughout the United Kingdom.

RECHAR

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how much money is available to the United Kingdom through the RECHAR scheme for the schemes he recently submitted for each of the years 1990 to 1994;

(2) what criteria qualified wards in Nottingham, North constituency for submission for RECHAR assistance; and which bodies were consulted before the decision was made;

(3) whether Nottinghamshire county council and Nottingham city council were consulted before he submitted the RECHAR list to the European Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department drew the attention of county, city and district authorities to the notice published by the European Commission about the RECHAR initiative and invited representations. Representations were received from Nottinghamshire county council, among others. Among other bodies consulted was the Coalfield Communities Campaign.

Wards were considered for inclusion in the list of Government's proposals for RECHAR where they were part of a coal-mining area that had suffered sufficient coal-mining job losses to meet the criteria of the Commission's notice.

It is not yet known how much money will be available to the United Kingdom from RECHAR. I hope that the Commission's decision will be reached before the end of this year.

Investors (Protection)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to introduce an order under section 203(3) of the Companies Act 1989, standard of protection for investors, specifying when the transitional period is to end.

Mr. Redwood: As soon as it becomes clear that the transitional provisions are no longer necessary.

Takeovers

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of European Economic Community takeovers of companies occurred in each member state over the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 26 February 1990]: Figures are not compiled within the Government of all takeovers of companies in each country throughout the European Economic Community. Information is compiledd for United Kingdom takeover activity and published quarterly by the Central Statistical Office in Business Bulletin "Cross Border Acquisitions and Mergers". The latest publication includes information to the third quarter of 1989 and is available in the Library.

The report on barriers to takeovers in the European Community prepared for the Department of Trade and Industry and published recently indicates that in 1988 73 per cent. of acquisitions in the European Community took place in the United Kingdom.

North-East Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) of 20 February, Official Report, column 780, he will list any changes in the proposals for the acquisition of NESL facilities by the Anglo-Greek consortium which were not made as a result of guidance from either his Department or the Tyne and Wear development corporation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Following the rejection of the shipbuilding bids for the NESL yards in July 1989 for reasons explained by my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton), the Anglo-Greek consortium made an informal proposal which simply foresaw a return to new shipbuilding at North Sands in the longer term, depending on market conditions. A formal proposal on 30 October 1989 was more specific, and explicitly made reference to the development of a modern shipbuilding facility.

The business plan dated 21 December 1989 made it apparent that the scale of investment was based on future shipbuilding requirements. An additional, parallel idea to use the Southwick site for steel work was raised in January 1990. None of these changes was made at the suggestion of my Department, which has always made it clear that any proposals would need to be assessed against any alternative plans for the sites in question, and would need formal clearance by the Commission of the European Communities.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on which dates his Department became aware that the following definitions of a permanent and irreversible closure in the European Commission sixth directive on shipbuilding of (a) a withdrawal of intervention fund by the relevant member state for a period of five years, (b) the cessation of vessel construction for a period of five years and (c) plans predicted on a resumption of vessel construction after a period of five years were not shared by the European Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Sir Leon Brittan's letter of 12 July 1989 to my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) made clear that the Commission required yards which have been closed as counterpart for aid to remain closed to the building of ships for five years, irrespective of the provision or otherwise of intervention fund grant subsidy. Sir Leon's letter to me of 15 February 1990 made it plain that he would not approve now a notification where the proposal was predicated on a return to shipbuilding after the expiry of the five-year period.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) of 20 February, Official Report, column 783, if he will list how many jobs he expects will have been created in the Southwick area of the proposed Sunderland enterprise zone by (a) 31 December 1990, (b) 30 June 1991, (c) 31 December 1991, (d) 30 June 1992, (e) 31 December 1992, (f) 30 June 1993 and (g) 31 December 1993.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: It is not practicable to give a detailed breakdown of the timing of the jobs expected to be created within the Sunderland enterprise zone. This will depend on, among other things, the timetable on progress on the clearance, reclamation, and development of the sites concerned and on the plans and decisions of individual firms setting up within the zone.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice was given by officials of his Department to directors of NESL who wished to know, in May 1988, whether his Department might be sympathetic to a management buy-out of NESL.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: As a general principle, the Government would certainly not have been averse to any proposals for a management buy-out of North-East Shipbuilders Ltd. A number of other British Shipbuilders' facilities have indeed been sold on this basis. I am, however, not aware that any formal proposals were actually made by the management of NESL for such a buy-out in respect of that company.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department held with Mr. John Parker following the receipt of information that Mr. Parker was interested in assisting North South Bridge Consortium's proposals to acquire NESL in November 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: None.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to whether the letter of advice sent by the previous chairman to the right hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) on 3 July 1989 was read and agreed by the other executive board members of British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: That is a matter for British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether all relevant and significant matters discussed between officials of his Department and officials of the European Commission concerning the future of NESL between the statement to the House by the right hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) on 7 December and the right hon. Member for Braintree's meeting with Sir Leon Brittan on 27 June 1989 were drawn to the attention of Ministers of his Department;

(2) whether all relevant and significant matters discussed between officials of his Department and officials of the European Commission prior to the December 1988 agreement to close North East Shipbuilders Ltd were drawn to the attention of ministers of his Department prior to the finalisation of that agreement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Yes.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek an assurance from Sir Leon Brittan that the interpretation which Sir Leon places on a declaration to the minutes of the Industry Council referred to in Sir Leon Brittan's letter to the hon. Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) of 15 February 1990 will be applied to any other member state of the European Community who contemplate the reopening of shipbuilding facilities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The EC's sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding is designed to ensure fair and equitable treatment throughout the Community in all aspects of shipbuilding support. I am sure, therefore, that the Commission will seek uniformity of treatment in respect of closed shipbuilding facilities within EC member states. We will certainly encourage it to do so.

Space

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the expenditure, actual and planned, on civil space related activities paid for from public funds in each of the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90; and for each of the years to give a breakdown as between expenditure on European Space Agency programmes and expenditure on domestic United Kingdom programmes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 2 March 1990]: The figures are as follows:

£ million

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
European Space Agency programmes	80·8	90·2	87·2
National programmes	42·8	48·1	51·1
Total	123·6	138·3	138·3

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

The Attorney-General: Neither the legal secretariat to the Law Officers nor the Treasury Solicitor's Department undertakes its own management training. In the Treasury Solicitor's Department, staff at grade six level and above who are working outside headquarters receive management training at the Civil Service College. In the Crown prosecution service training on equal opportunities for women is integrated into management training and is not dealt with as a separate issue. In the period from September 1988 to January 1989 a series of industrial relations courses, which included a specific session on equal opportunities, was run for grade six officers and above. In the Serious Fraud Office, departmental training courses do not include sessions on equal opportunities for women, but members of staff may attend courses at the Civil Service College, where such sessions are a feature of the course work.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

The Attorney-General: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents, who wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, has encouraged the development of a range of high quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what childcare provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees: what childcare provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

The Attorney-General: There is no provision of child care for pre-school age children of employees in any of the Departments for which I am responsible. No child care provision is provided in the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, Crown prosecution service or the Serious Fraud Office for employees' children aged five years or over, but for the Treasury Solicitor's Department there is a holiday play scheme for 32 children which is run during half-term holidays and between terms by the Cabinet Office in conjunction with the Westminster Play Association, but there is no provision for after-school care. The holiday play scheme will continue while there is space available.

There are no plans to increase provision in the next five years in the legal secretariat to the Law Officers or the Serious Fraud Office. In the Treasury Solicitor's Department it is proposed to introduce a pre-school age nursery subject to there being space available. No decision has been made on how the nursery is to be funded. The Crown prosecution service has agreed to participate in and make a financial contribution towards a study of the feasibility of establishing a number of interdepartmental nurseries in and around central London. As part of this study, the Crown prosecution service has distributed questionnaires to all staff in the London area to find the numbers of employees who would wish to use child care facilities in the future. The service will consider shared funding of child care facilities in those areas where its provision is feasible.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

The Attorney-General: The equal opportunities officer in the legal secretariat to the Law Officers is a grade four, in the Treasury Solicitor's Department a grade six, in the Crown prosecution service a grade seven and in the Serious Fraud Office a higher executive officer.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career-break due to child care.

The Attorney-General: In the legal secretariat to the Law Officers and the Treasury Solicitor's Department the recruitment of all staff above the grade of executive officer is undertaken by the Civil Service Commission. Officers appointed to recruitment boards for administrative officer and below and promotion boards are reminded of the policy of equal opportunities in the department. In the Crown prosecution service a departmental career break scheme is being developed to ensure that those members of staff who have a break in their career for domestic reasons have the opportunity to maintain their career momentum via a departmental "keeping in touch" scheme.

The Crown prosecution service has also targeted recruitment publications aimed at mature students and women returning to work following a career break. It has provided working arrangements to suit staff with domestic commitments and has introduced flexible working terms, part-time working, and enhanced arrangements for sabattical leave. All established staff compete equally for promotion opportunities in the service.

The Serious Fraud Office has recently launched an advertising campaign to attract part-time staff with family commitments. A person would not be subject to discrimination in either recruitment to the Serious Fraud Office or promotion therein on account of their age, providing they are below the normal Civil Service retiring age.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

The Attorney-General: The proportions in each of the Departments for which I am responsible are as follows:

	Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers	Treasury Solicitor's Department	Crown Prosecution Service	Serious Fraud Office
A. Grade 7	0/0	11/49	164/603	0/4
B. Grade 6	0/3	14/58	16/152	3/14
C. Grade 5	2/4	4/39	2/54	2/10
D. Grade 4	0/2	0/0	0/9	0/0
E. Grade 3	1/1	0/10	0/4	0/2
F. Grade 2	0/0	0/0	0/1	0/1
G. Grade 1	0/0	0/1	0/1	0/0

Divorce Notifications (Newspapers)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he intends to take any action to prevent divorce notifications in newspapers containing the reasons for a divorce; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There is no present intention to change the law relating to the content of divorce notifications in newspapers, but the matter has been referred to the Law Commission who are considering it along with the law of divorce on which they are expected to report later this year. Under the present divorce law, to provide protection against divorces being granted where the facts required do not exist, Parliament provided in section 9 of the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973 that any person may show cause why a decree nisi of divorce should not be made absolute. The decree nisi is therefore declared in open court and any member of the public may examine the certificate of the decree and the filed evidence for this purpose. The Judicial Proceedings (Regulation of Reports) Act 1926 aligns with this policy by allowing the press to report, amongst other things, the names and addresses of the parties to a divorce, together with the statutory facts on which the petition relies. Any further restriction would conflict with the present policy of section 9.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

The Attorney-General: The policy in each of the Departments for which I am responsible is that sexual harassment at work would not be tolerated and, if appropriate, would be dealt with as a disciplinary matter.

No specific guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to staff in the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's Department or in the Serious Fraud Office. In the Crown prosecution service, the issue of sexual harassment at work is addressed directly in the CPS equal opportunities policy statement which is held by every local office for consultation by any member of staff.

No complaints have been reported in the legal secretariat to the Law Officers or the Serious Fraud Office. In the Treasury Solicitor's Department one complaint has been made in the last five years but has subsequently been withdrawn. In the Crown prosecution service one complaint has been reported and disciplinary action is under consideration.

Crown Court Hearings

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average period between a committal and full hearing for (a) all crimes and (b) rape.

The Attorney-General: The average period between a committal and start of hearing for all defendants whose cases were completed in the Crown Court in 1989 was 12·5 weeks. This compares with 14·3 weeks in 1984 and 17·6 weeks in 1979. Information is not available for individual offences.

Pin-ups

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

The Attorney-General: Any complaint about material of this sort in any of the Departments for which I am responsible would be considered and appropriate instructions would be given.

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Attorney-General if the Government have any plans to introduce leasehold reform —commonhold—legislation.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor announced in June 1988 that the Government had arranged for draft legislation to be prepared at the Law Commission to give effect to the proposals contained in the report of the working group on commonhold (Cm 179) under the chairmanship of Mr. T. M. Aldridge. That work is still in progress. No final decision has yet been taken about the implementation of the report, nor can I give any indication of when legislation on commonhold may be introduced.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women have been strip searched in each of the last 10 years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: The strip-searching procedures for female prisoners were introduced at Armagh prison in November

1982. Yearly figures for the number of women strip searched are only available from 1985 onwards. The details for 1985 to 1989 are as follows:

	No.
1985	144
1986	162
1987	149
1988	145
1989	145

Police Accommodation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he is giving to the Northern Ireland police federation's representations concerning (a) the introduction of a provided accommodation allowance and (b) updating of the force rent allowance; and when he expects to lay regulations giving effect to any changes which may take effect from 1 April.

Mr. Cope: The Police Federation for Northern Ireland has not made representations to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland concerning the introduction of a provided accommodation allowance for the RUC. Provided accommodation will continue to be free of rent and rates. The rent allowance for the RUC, which would have been due for updating at 1 April 1990, will not now be updated due to its replacement by the new housing allowance. The RUC (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1990 which will give effect to the change from rent allowance to housing allowance, will be laid before Parliament not later than 9 March 1990.

Railways

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the loss of revenue to Northern Ireland railways as a result of terrorist activity in each of the last five calendar or financial years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Northern Ireland Railways Co. Ltd. has informed me that because of the infrequency of incidents before 1989-90 no figures are available. The loss of revenue for 1989-90 is £581,000 to date. In addition to the security implications, there is a significant environmental impact, especially as the relative advantage of the rail service is reduced and more people switch to the road.

Youth Training

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to extend youth training programme allowances to all those participating in 16 to 19 education.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 February 1990]: No.

Consultant-Patient Ratios

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) consultants, (b) National Health Service patients and (c) patients per consultant in each year since 1979 (i) nationally and (ii) for each National Health Service region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information for (a) and (b) is given in the tables.

The information requested in (c) cannot be given in the form requested, because: (i) manpower figures represent a "snapshot" of staff in post on a particular day. Patient figures are aggregates over a calendar-financial year; (ii) the patient figures do not take account of the contribution given by other medical staff who may be engaged in providing treatment to in-patients, out-patients or accident and emergency patients.

National Health Service Wales

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what, over the last five years for which figures are available, have been the proportions of United Kingdom National Health Service expenditure spent on the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Competitive Tendering

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out a table showing from 1979 to the latest available year (i) each district health authority in East Anglia regional health authority and (ii) average of all English district health authorities (a) what services have been put out to competitive tender, (b) what savings have been made thereby in real terms and (c) what estimated real cost terms per head of population column (b) represents.

Mr. Freeman: Comprehensive information on all services put out to tender is not held centrally in the form requested. Since 1983, health authorities have been required to tender domestic, catering and laundry services and apart from some catering services at East and West Suffolk, all of these services in the region have now been subjected to this process.

Information on savings arising from the tendering of these services in the financial years 1986-87 is set out in the table in the form requested. Information on the remaining years requested is not held centrally.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) private, (b) employer, (c) local authority and (d) other means-funded child care places there are in each travel-to-work area for each of the past 10 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally in the form requested. The information collected centrally about day care places in England is published in "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March" and is available in the Library.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report: "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom."

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is one of several recent reports that have informed our current thinking. We are considering the child care aspects as part of our integrated policy for the implementation of the Children Act in 1991.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Freeman: The Department runs holidy play schemes for employees' children aged between five and 11 years and plans to continue doing so. No nursery facilities or after-school care are at present provided for parents employed in the Department. However, we are undertaking a feasibility study into the provision of nursery facilities and we are contributing to a study into interdepartmental provision being co-ordinated by the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service. The holiday play schemes are financed by parental and departmental contributions, and it is likely that any other child care provision would be financed in a similar way.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Freeman: The equal opportunities officer for the Department of Health is a grade five.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Freeman: This Department is an equal opportunities employer and its equal opportunities policy forbids discrimination on the grounds of sex or ethnic origin. Members of recruitment and promotion boards have this policy brought to their attention on each occasion that they undertake these duties. Wherever possible recruitment and promotion boards have female members.

The Department has, as an aid to recruitment and retention, introduced a number of flexible working patterns. These include part-time working, job sharing, flexible working hours and career breaks together with a scheme for keeping in touch with existing employees away from the Department. More flexibilities are under active consideration.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of grades seven, six, five, four, three, two and one.

Mr. Freeman: In the Department of Health as at February 1990, 11·1 per cent. of civil servants at grade two, 16·7 per cent. at grade three, 31·5 per cent. at grade four, 29·9 per cent. at grade five, 24·1 per cent. at grade six, and 25·1 per cent. at grade seven are women. There are no female officers at grade one level.

Under-fives Provision

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total public expenditure on local authority day nurseries, local authority playgroups and grants to the voluntary sector for provision for under-fives for each year from 1975-76; and what was the total public expenditure on these services as a percentage of gross domestic product for each of these years.

Mr. Freeman: Total local authority social service departments' net current expenditure on day nurseries and playgroups plus Departmental grants to the voluntary sector for provision for the under fives for the years 1975-76 to 1987-88 are set out in cash terms. This includes expenditure on day nurseries and playgroups supported by, but not directly run by, the authorities. Final expenditure data for local authorities in 1988-89 is not yet available:

The voluntary sector expenditure quoted relates to grants made by the Department to voluntary organisations for provision for children under five. It does not include any grants made by health authorities or local authorities for which no information is available centrally. Expenditure in the period 1984-85 to 1986-87 includes grants totalling over £5·5 million paid under the Department's first under-fives initiative.

The total figures quoted represent the following percentages of the gross domestic product for each of the years in question:

General Practitioners

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the figure of 30 was chosen as the cut-off point on the Jarman index for general practitioners to receive deprivation payments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A cut-off point of 30 on the Jarman index was chosen to target the deprivation payments on those practices that serve areas of highest deprivation. A figure of 30 means that some 9 per cent. of the population in England will attract a payment for their general practitioner in some 5 per cent. of the wards.

Private Dentists

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average charge made by private dentists in England and Wales for the initial 15-minute consultation;

(2) what percentage of dentists practising in England and Wales in each year since 1980 have not treated any patients under the National Health Service;

(3) what percentage of dentists who previously provided dental care under the National Health Service have opted instead to provide private treatment only, in the last 10 years, listed by year;

(4) what percentage of those treated have received dental care from the private sector in the last 10 years, listed by year.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not keep records of the extent or cost of private treatment or of the number of dentists practising privately.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the progress of work towards the audit of energy efficiency within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: The audit of energy efficiency is being conducted jointly by the audit branch of the Department of Health and the Audit Commission. It is intended that the Audit Commission will assume full responsibility for the audit of the NHS in October 1990 as announced in the National Health Service White Paper. The energy audit is being conducted at the majority of health authorities in England and it is expected that the final report will be published towards the end of 1990. The audit has been extended to Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland and France based on the approach pioneered in England. The audit methodology is based upon research carried out by Audit Commission, the Department's audit branch, and guidance on energy efficiency promulgated in Encode.

Westminster and Chelsea Hospital Scheme

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give increased funding to the North-West Thames regional health authority to reflect the increased cost of the Westminster and Chelsea hospital scheme;

(2) what are the reasons for the increased capital costs of the Westminster and Chelsea hospital scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The total construction cost of the Chelsea and Westminster hospital is projected to be £177 million when completed. North West Thames regional health authority reviewed its capital programme in January as a result of these and other increasing costs, which are due to the high and increasing cost of building in London, and the fall in residential property values. A number of schemes have been deferred for 18 months to two years. North West Thames regional health authority, however, expect that proceeds from land sales will more than cover the cost of the Chelsea and Westminister hospital.

National Health Service Reforms

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of each of the consultancy contracts entered into by his Department in connection with the National Health Service reforms.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of his Department's contracts with outside consultants on the National Health Service hospital service reforms deals with the quality of services provided under National Health Service contracts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No contracts with outside consultants have concerned quality of services to be provided under National Health Service hospital service contracts but health authorities have developed quality specification for the specimen contracts published in "Contracts for Health Services: Operating Contracts".

Ambulance Staff

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost of the ambulance staff pay award in each of its two years for (a) the United Kingdom as a whole and (b) England only.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Estimated increases over 1988-89 costs of the revised pay offer, excluding local flexibility payments from 1 October 1990, are in the table:

Increase in employers' pay costs for ambulance staff	United Kingdom £million	England £million
1989-90	23·1	18·8
1990-91	37·2	30·3

Pregnant Women (Tests)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which district health authorities the AFP test is routinely offered to pregnant women; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. However, a departmental survey conducted last year showed that the test was offered in about 60 per cent. of districts and was increasingly becoming available.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which district health authorities the ante-natal maternal serum screening test for Down's syndrome is routinely offered to pregnant women; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The use of maternal serum screening for Down's syndrome is a procedure under research at the medical college of St. Bartholomew's Hospital. I understand that the procedure offers early identification of about half the women with a Down's syndrome foetus who can then be offered amniocentesis for definitive diagnosis test. The test is not yet provided as part of routine antenatal care outside the City and Hackney health district, but some districts are referring women known to be at risk to St. Bartholomew's and a few other centres are starting trials of the procedure.

Physiotherapy, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the district physiotherapy service in Liverpool.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The planning and development of the physiotherapy service in Liverpool is a matter for the Liverpool district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mr. J. B. Fitzpatrick.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will require the document "Application for National Health Service Trust Status" to be given by Mersey regional health authority to its employees for the purposes of consultation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: When, subject to the passage of the necessary legislation, applications for National Health Service trust status are submitted, we will look to regional health authorities to make whatever arrangements they consider necessary to ensure that those with an interest, including staff, are consulted about the proposals.

EC Intervention Butter

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether National Health Service hospitals are permitted to sell European Community intervention butter on their premises at a profit.

Mr. Freeman: No. The butter that health authorities receive via the intervention board is for the use of patients and staff only, and we have no knowledge of any such butter being sold at a profit.

In-patients

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average length of in-patient stay on (a) 30 September 1979 and (b) 30 September 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Average length of stay in days of patients treated in National Health Service hospitals in England (by sector of treatment)

	1979	1988
Acute medical	11·2	8·2
Acute surgical	8·1	7·2
Geriatrics	77·5	41·4
Maternity	6·0	4·0

This information is drawn from Department of Health statistical bulletin 2/1/90 published in January 1990. Copies of the bulletin have been placed in the Library.

Cardiac Patients, Yorkshire

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had concerning the number of beds for cardiac patients in the Leeds Western health authority area; if he will review the provision of beds for cardiac patients within the Yorkshire regional health authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of letters about cardiac services in Yorkshire RHA. The local provision of services is the responsibility of the health authority concerned; the hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority for further information. The hon. Member will know that Yorkshire regional health authority is currently reviewing its provision of cardiothoracic services.

Carers

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what illnesses and accidents have been identified as particularly associated with carers; and what plans he has to help reduce this incidence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no specific information about carer-related illness and accidents. The provision of practical support for carers is the second of the key objectives identified in the White Paper "Caring for People". The White Paper emphasises that assessments should take account of the carer's wishes, and of his or her ability to continue to provide care. Social services authorities should seek to provide practical support and respite care where necessary.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Freeman: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by Cabinet Office in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the normal complaints procedures.

The Department of Health has brought this policy, together with guidance on complaints procedures, to the attention of all staff in a departmental circular. Records are not kept of any complaints which are dealt with by immediate line management but serious complaints are referred to the Department's personnel division for appropriate action. Since Department of Health records began in April 1989, following the separation of the Department of Health and Social Security, there have been no such referrals.

Well Women Clinics

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of well women clinics in each regional health authority in England and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Child Care

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to monitor child care provision offered by local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities regularly provide the Department with statistics about the provision for pre-school children in their locality including the services they provide themselves. This is published annually in "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March" and is available in the Library.

Weil's Disease

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of cases of Weil's disease in each health authority area in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 February 1990]: Laboratory reports of leptospirosis to the communicable disease surveillance centre provided by health authorities for England and Wales are given in the following table. The figures include Weil's disease. There are a number of different serogroups of leptospira causing a range of clinical infections. Leptospira icterohaemorrhagiae is the serogroup which may give rise in this country to the clinical presentation of Weil's disease. For the period 1979-89, leptospira icterohaemorrhagiae accounted for roughly one third of the laboratory reports of leptospirosis.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will express Ealing's rates as a community charge for (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87, (c) 1987-88 and (d) 1989-90; what a community charge of (i) £450 and (ii) £494 in Ealing would be expressed as a rate poundage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: It would not be meaningful to convert rate poundages into community charges in the way requested. It is our intention when community charges are finally set to say what the increase would have been in domestic rates had that taken the place of the community charge.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to include in his orders for community charge capping a requirement for affected councils to notify all charge payers of the new rate of charge; if he will estimate the cost of this measure; and what is his policy as to whether that cost will be born by the council as part of its level of spending that central government will have approved.

Mr. Chope: If any authority were to be capped, it would be necessary for the charging authority or authorities for the area concerned to inform chargepayers of the new level of community charges which would result. As my right hon. Friend has made clear, it would not be right for him to speculate on the operation of any capping scheme which might need to be introduced for 1990-91.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the calculations showing how the London borough of Newham contributes £3·06 million to the safety net arrangements for each of the elements described in the annex to the Revenue Support Grant Transition Report HC50 of January.

Mr. Chope: The adjustment to Newham's revenue support grant entitlement for 1990-91 of −£3,057,835 set out in the revenue support grant transitional report (England) was calculated as 53·624562 per cent. of the difference between the figure arrived at under paragraph 3 of the annex to that report (the amount to be raised from the domestic sector in 1990-91: £49,014,662) and the figure arrived at under paragraph 2 of that annex (the amount raised from the domestic sector in 1989-90: £54,716,964). 53·624562 is the percentage referred to in paragraph 4 of the annex.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average community charge to be levied in each of the district council areas of Shropshire and Powys.

Mr. Chope: No returns providing information on average charges have been received by the Department or by the Welsh Office for the districts concerned.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, columns 173-74, to the hon. Member for Conventry, South-East, and his reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) of 21 February, Official Report, column 741, he will give any information he has about the level of personal community charges.

Mr. Chope: No. At the moment I have information for only a small miniority of authorities.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many exemptions have been given to disabled people eligible to pay the community charge; and if he will list the categories of people who have (a) been exempted from the community charge and (b) sought such exemptions but have been rejected.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the position of disabled people and their requirement to meet payments in connection with the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We continue to receive representation on all aspects of the community charge. Generous help is available to disabled people with low incomes who are subject to a personal community charge. The community charge benefit scheme includes a disability premium which means that disabled people may qualify for rebates at higher levels of income than other claimants. Disabled people who have not previously paid rates may be eligible for extra help under the community charge transitional relief scheme.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable in 1990-91 per adult, whether the proposed reduction of 28 per cent. in the local payers' contribution to local expenditure in Bedfordshire assumes an increase in the per adult contribution made by central Government; and whether he will publish the per adult figures for the central Government contribution in each case together with figures showing that contribution as a percentage of the local payers' contribution.

Mr. Christopher Chope [holding answer 1 March 1990]: The Government have not proposed a specific increase in local contribution to expenditure in Bedfordshire. I refer the hon. Member to the answer to him on 27 February, Official Report column 179. Equivalent figures for Bedfordshire are as follows:

External support for Bedfordshire

	External support per adult	External support as percentage of rate/ chargepayer contribution
Underlying 1990-91 assumed community charge with safety net	478	162·1
Underlying 1989-90 average rate bill per adult	412	126·9
Underlying assumed long run community charge	528	216·0

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable in 1990-91 per adult, whether the proposed reduction of 34 per cent. in the local payer's contribution to local expenditure in Berkshire assumes an increase in the per adult contribution made by central Government; and whether he will publish the per adult figures for the central Government contribution in each case together with figures showing that contribution as a percentage of the local payer's contribution.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 1 March 1990]: The Government have not proposed a specific increase in local contribution to expenditure in Berkshire. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 27 February, Official Report, column 179. Equivalent figures for Berkshire are as follows:

External support for Berkshire

	External support per adult	External support as percentage of rate/ chargepayer contribution
Underlying 1990-91 assumed community charge with safety net	448	172·5
Underlying 1989-90 average rate bill per adult	363	121·2
Underlying assumed long run community charge	502	244·2

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment up to what expenditure figure per head of population Tonbridge and Malling borough council will be able to spend in 1990-91 to enable its comunity charge payers to pay no more than £3 a week over their 1989-90 rates under the transitional relief scheme for individuals he announced in October 1989.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 2 March 1990]: There will be no increase greater than the maximum allowed by the transitional relief scheme provided the community charge set by Tonbridge and Malling is no more than £227·69. It is not possible to estimate the level of spending by Tonbridge and Malling borough council which would give rise to a change at this level since the charge depends largely on spending by Kent county council and the use both authorities make of reserves.

Local Authorities (Reserves and Balances)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the reductions in local authority reserves and balances for 1989-90 and those assumed for 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities have planned to use £625 million of rate fund revenue account balances and £162 million of housing revenue account balances in 1989-90. Information on planned use of balances in 1989-90 on other accounts is not available.

In 1990-91 it has been assumed for the purpose of calculating the community charge for standard spending that authorities do not make any use of rate fund revenue account balances. No assumptions have been made about the use of housing revenue account balances in 1990-91.

Environmental Protection

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to hold any consultation with the countryside interpretation unit, based at the Open university in Milton Keynes, following his announcement to the Countryside Commission on 13 December, of new planning arrangements for environmental protection of the countryside.

Mr. Moynihan: On 13 December my right hon. Friend announced publication of draft planning guidance on "The Countryside and the Rural Economy", on which comments were invited by 19 February. The 310 or so responses so far received do not include one from the countryside interpretation unit, but it will be possible to consider any comments the unit wishes to make if these are submitted soon.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the expected values of building contracts for (a) new build and (b) repair and maintenance, managed by Property Holdings after 1 April, for each of the next three years on the common user estate; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the previous three years under the old Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: The table lists the expenditure on, or for future years provision for, design and construction costs on new builds for the six years requested. For maintenance, the figures sought are not available for 1991-92 and 1992-93, as there is to be a further reallocation of responsibilities between Property Holdings and Departments which will take effect from 1 April 1991.

£ million

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
New build	71	53	64	89	88	85
Maintenance	73	101	99	108	n.a.	n.a.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the net income levels planned for Property Services Agency services for each of the next three years from 1 April.

Mr. Chope: The net income of PSA Services in the years 1990-91 to 1992-93 will depend on the volume of business won in competition. For planning purposes it is currently assumed that the operating surplus, after any eligible charges for depreciation and interest on capital, and before extraordinary items, will be as follows:

£ million

1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Nil	7	28

These figures are, however, subject to review in the light of the proposed privatisation of PSA Services.

Dr. Martin Holdgate

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain a transcript of the lecture by Dr. Martin Holdgate on the environment given at the Royal Society on 26 February for his Department's Library.

Mr. Trippier: A transcript of Dr. Holdgate's David Davies Memorial Institute of International Studies lecture has been obtained and lodged in the Department of the Environment library and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes dated 8 December (reference HU/PSO/40389/89).

Mr. Chope: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes dated 8 September (reference HU/PSO/30545/89).

Mr. Chope: I replied to my hon. Friend on 27 February.

Housing Associations

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new subsidised houses for rent housing associations have built in each year since 1970; and how many they plan to build in the next five years.

Mr. Chope: Numbers of housebuilding completions for rent and of renovations for rent by housing associations in England are as follows:

	Completions[1]	Renovations[2]
1970	8,200	2,700
1971	10,200	5,000
1972	6,900	4,200
1973	8,300	3,200
1974	9,300	4,000
1975	13,700	4,600
1976	14,400	13,400
1977	24,200	18,800
1978	20,600	13,100
1979	16,300	17,200
1980	19,300	14,700
1981	16,800	11,200
1982	11,100	17,400
1983	14,200	14,500
1984	13,700	18,500
1985	11,200	11,400
1986	10,000	12,700
1987	9,600	11,100
1988	9,100	11,500
1989[3]	8,700	[4]9,500

P = provisional

[1] Before 1980 completions data includes dwellings built for sale (co-ownership).

[2] Before 1978 refers to work approved, thereafter to work completed. Before 1985 includes hostel bedspaces (some 2,000 1984). From 1981 includes improvement for sale (11,800 sales up to 30 September 1989).

[3] Provisional.

[4] January to September.

The Department does not make forecasts of housebuilding completions; the Housing Corporation publishes details of its approved development programme for registered housing associations—a copy is in the Library—and these reflect the substantial increase in resources for housing associations in the current public expenditure plans.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the transfer of local government housing departments to housing associations.

Mr. Chope: Our criteria are set out in the guidelines, "Large Scale Voluntary Transfers of Local Authority Housing to Private Bodies", a copy of which is in the Library.

PCBs and Ugilec

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will conduct a study on the comparative environmental risks of polychlorinated biphenyls and ugilec.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Commission of the European Communities has recently made a proposal to the Council of Ministers for a directive to prohibit the marketing and use of ugilec 141 and ugilec 121 in the Community. I understand that neither of these substances has been used to a significant extent in this country. However, the Government will be pressing for a full assessment, at the Community level, of the risks posed by these substances compared with the risks of PCBs which they are intended to replace.

British Sport Exhibition

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to British sport to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 5 March to 9 March.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implementing of competitive tendering of refuse contracts by local authorities in East Anglia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Local authorities in England that do not qualify for exemption on de minimis grounds are required to put certain of their services, including refuse collection, out to tender in accordance with a timetable prescribed in the Local Government 1988 (Defined Activities) (Competition) (England) Regulations 1988, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Different authorities are required to have completed the tendering process for different services by varying dates between 1 August 1989 and 1 January 1992. This timetable was designed not only to phase the tendering process for authorities but also to assist contracts by ensuring that not all services were being put out to tender at the same time.

No comprehensive information is available as yet about the implementation of the legislation in relation to particular authorities or services, and it would only be possible to compile such information at disproportionate cost.

An in-depth research project is currently being carried out on behalf of the Department to assess the impact of the legislation on a representative sample of authorities drawn from the country as a whole. This will examine costs incurred and savings made. We expect the first phase to be completed early in the summer. Local authorities have also been asked to complete a questionnaire providing information on the number of contracts awarded to DSOs and private contractors and the responses to that questionnaire are now being processed.

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out a table showing from 1979 to the latest available year (i) each district council in Norfolk and (iii) each district council in Suffolk, (ii) average of all English district councils: (a) what services have been put out to competitive tender, (b) what savings have been made thereby in real terms and (c) what estimated real terms cost per head of population over 18 years column (b) represents;

(2) if he will set out a table showing from 1979 to the latest available year (i) Suffolk county council, (ii) Norfolk county council and (iii) average of all shire counties: (a) what services have been put out to competitive tender, (b) what savings have been made thereby in real terms and (c) what estimated real terms cost per head of population over 18 years column (b) represents.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave him today on the subject of competitive tendering. Information about services put out to tender on a voluntary basis before the Local Government Act 1988 came into force is not available centrally.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to bring forward further measures to oblige local authorities to put out more services to competitive tender.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are no immediate plans to extend the number of services which authorities are required to put out to tender under the terms of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which services have been put out to competitive tender by London boroughs, indicating in each case whether they have gone to in-house staff or out to private contractors.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out a table showing from 1983 to the last available year, for Chelmsford borough council and Essex county council (a) what services have been put out to competitive tender, (b) what savings have been made in cash and real terms and (c) what estimated savings per head of population aged 18 years and over have been made in (b).

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friends to the replies that I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter).

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers, at grade six level and above, working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Chris Patten: All the management training courses used by the Department have an equal opportunities content, and in the case of the Department's own courses this is currently being reviewed and strengthened. Courses specifically aimed at women in middle management are also available. Figures on the proportion of senior managers outside headquarters who have received training on equal opportunities for women are not available.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown of the number of local authority employees by sex.

Mr. Chope: In mid-1989 local authorities in the United Kingdom employed 1,165,000 male staff and 1,768,000 female staff. These and further details are published by the Central Statistical Office in an article "Employment in the public and private sectors" in the December 1989 issue of Economic Trends.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility for the European Commission's child care network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Patten: This report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up, and how parents who wish to do so can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, has encouraged the development of a range of high-quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Ms. Walley To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of the employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Patten: My Department supports an interdepartmental holiday play scheme in central London and, with the trades union side, has provided a play scheme to support residential training courses. The Property Services Agency, in co-operation with the Home Office, is arranging a play scheme in Croydon in the spring.

In central London we have undertaken a feasibility study for a nursery; studies are also in hand for a play scheme-nursery at the Building Research Establishment and we are looking at the possibility of co-operating with other employers in providing child care at our regional offices and outside London in the south-east. These studies include an analysis of the funding options.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Chris Patten: Grade 5—assistant secretary.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department has a policy of fair and open competition in recruitment. The criterion for age is that new entrants must be able to give effective service before retirement; for example the upper age limits for clerical recruitment is 60. Promotion is wholly on merit. We offer staff career breaks of up to five years, based on special leave. We encourage staff to return by running a keeping in touch scheme and we will shortly be running training for staff returning to work. We offer part-time working, job sharing and flexible working hours.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of grades seven, six, five, four, three, two and one.

Mr. Chris Patten: The number of women employed at grades 7-1 in DOE (Central) at 1 March 1990 was as follows:

Grade	Women	Per cent.
7	98	16
6	4	4
5	18	14
4	1	14
3	4	12

At present no women are employed in grades two and one.

Rehousing

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities that accept domestic violence as a criterion for rehousing.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available centrally. It is for each local authority to decide its own policy on allocating its own housing, and it is not required to inform my Department.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken;

(2) whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Chris Patten: Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter. Guidance on this policy has been issued to all staff making clear that, among other things, the display of such items as sexually explicit calendars is unacceptable. No central record of complaints was kept until mid-1986. Since then there have been five complaints wyhich have been fully investigated. It is not the Department's practice to publish the disciplinary action taken in individual cases.

Tyres

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce regulations to control the dumping and recycling of tyres and the processes connected therewith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The introduction of regulations would not be appropriate. The treatment and disposal of waste tyres is already subject to licensing controls by waste disposal authorities under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. These controls are being strengthened in the Environmental Protection Bill and proposals for a duty of care will also require producers and handlers to avoid risks of pollution or harm to human health in their treatment, keeping and disposal of all wastes, including tyres.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the moneys allocated for public relations and advertising by Leeds development corporation in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Moynihan: Leeds development corporation's budget for promotion and publicity, which includes the corporation's activities in marketing its area is £320,000 in 1989-90 and £480,000 in 1990-91.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sum Leeds development corporation has spent on advertising and display signs.

Mr. Moynihan: The amount spent by Leeds Development Corporation since designation in June 1988 on promotion and publicity is £488,000 of which £26,500 has been spent on display signs.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the compulsory purchase powers of Leeds development corporation outside the designated Leeds development corporation area; and what guidelines are issued by his Department in relation to the use of such powers.

Mr. Moynihan: An urban development corporation is empowered by section 142 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to acquire compulsorily land outside its area which is adjacent to its designated area and required for purposes connected with the regeneration of its area; or required for the provision of services, whether or not the land is adjacent to its area. The Department has drawn UDC's attention to these statutory provisions and their interpretation.

Council House Sales

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the latest available figures for the number of houses or flats sold to tenants under section 164 of the Local Government and Housing Act for every local authority.

Mr. Chope: Section 164 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 brings within the right to buy housing, other than sheltered housing, which is particularly suitable for elderly people and was first let on or after 1 January 1990. The change in the law applies only where the tenant claimed the right to buy on or after 1 March, so sales are unlikely to be completed for some time. An existing non-sheltered property, first let before 1 January, may still be excluded from the right to buy, but only if the Secretary of State determines on the application of the landlord that it is particularly suitable for elderly people and was let for occupation by a person of pensionable age. No application for a determination has yet been received.

Waste Imports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations are currently in force to control and prevent the importation of waste for direct landfill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The import of hazardous waste for any kind of disposal is controlled through the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988. Under these regulations, shipments of hazardous waste must be pre-notified to the disposal authority who have certain powers of objection. But, the import of waste for direct landfill cannot be prevented where the waste presents no danger to animal or plant health.

However, the Government have made clear their view that the transfrontier shipment of waste for direct landfill is generally not justified. We are seeking powers in the Environmental Protection Bill which would allow the prohibition of imported wastes where this is necessary either to prevent risk of pollution or harm to human health, or in order to conserve facilities or resources for dealing with waste.

Palace of Westminster Rifle Range

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 28 February, whether any work other than safety work has been carried out on the Palace of Westminster rifle range; and what is the annual cost of providing this facility for hon. Members and others.

Mr. Chope: Safety work, and the consequent making good, was carried out to allow the range to continue to be used for rifle shooting and to extend its use to pistol shooting. Apart from heating and lighting, which is not separately monitored, the only other costs borne on the parliamentary works subhead (class XX, vote 18) is for occasional minor maintenance.

Waste Management

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply made in Standing Committee H considering the Environmental Protection Bill, by the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, 22 February, Official Report, column 688, which organisations and institutions will be consulted on the regulations governing the criteria to be adopted for accrediting potential persons fit and proper to manage wastes.

Mr. Trippier: As is customary, a wide range of organisations representing local authorities, industry—including the waste management industry—and environmental interests will be consulted on both the draft regulations and on the guidance to local authorities. Together these will set the framework for the authorities to determine whether persons are fit and proper to hold waste management licences.

Homelessness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects of part VI of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 on levels of homelessness.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Part VI of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 will encourage greater efficiency in the management and utilisation of council housing, and should therefore make a positive contribution to reducing levels of homelessness.

Council House Rents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations were received on the possible effect of part VI of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 on council house rents during its passage through the House.

Mr. Chope: Various representations were received, principally that council rents should be set at levels which the tenants can afford and should not be subject to unreasonable sudden increases. Both these objectives will be met if councils follow the guidelines set for them within the new system. The level of council rents remains a matter for individual councils.

Storm Damage

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of financial assistance offered to local authorities along the north Devon coast in respect of capital costs incurred in relation to recent storm damage.

Mr. Chope: We wrote to local authorities on 6 February indicating that the Department would be prepared to consider issuing in appropriate circumstances additional capital allocations or borrowing approvals in respect of expenditure in 1989-90 and supplementary credit approvals in respect of expenditure in 1990-91 incurred as a result of the storms of 16 and 17 December or 25 January of floods in the Severn valley following 29 January. Applications should be submitted by 30 June 1990. None have yet been received from authorities in Devon.

Water Privatisation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what customer service committees covering which geographical areas in England had been brought into being under the Water Act 1989 by 31 January.

Mr. Trippier: It is for the Director General of Water Services to establish customer service committees under the Water Act 1989. He announced on 27 February the appointment of a chairman for each of the 10 committees which between them will cover the whole of England and Wales.

Water Charges

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he made appropriate adjustments as described in the final sentence of the then Minister responsible for water's reply to the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) on 14 March 1989, Official Report, column 213, before he announced his proposals for the K factor of the West Kent water company on 7 February.

Mr. Trippier: Yes.

Garden Festival Site, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been spent to date on the reclamation of land at the international garden festival site, Liverpool; what is the annual maintenance cost; and what consideration he has given to the designation of the site as a royal park.

Mr. Moynihan: The garden festival site was reclaimed as part of a wider land reclamation scheme in the Liverpool south docks area, the total cost of which was £10·6 million. The current annual maintenance cost of the festival park is £200,000. Royal parks are of special origin and significance and there is no intention to add to their number.

Local Authorities (Economic Development)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet prepared the regulations under section 33 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department has now sent copies of draft regulations to the local authority associations and others for comment. I have arranged for a copy of the draft to be placed in the library of the House.

The regulations cover those restrictions which will apply to the use of the new power for local authorities to promote economic development. They follow the proposals contained in the Government's consultation paper of August 1989, with some changes.

The requirement for non-local education authorities to agree individual education and training proposals with their education authority, is replaced by a requirement for agreement to a broad programme of activities. There will be a period during which such programmes can be agreed.

The requirement to get agreement of the authority in whose area another local authority may be planning an activity is replaced by a requirement to consult.

Instead of prohibition on "soft loans", their true cost is to be identified in a special memorandum account.

The cities of Exeter, Hereford, Worcester and York and the London borough of Ealing are to be added to the list of authorities allowed to give financial assistance above the value of £10,000 to businesses conducted with a view to a profit.

Annual average levels of unemployment have been used instead of a single month's figures as one of the qualifications for designating authorities as able to give such assistance.

Procedures for the notification of local authority aid to the European Commission will be contained in further regulations, which will not come into effect before 1 July 1990.

The draft regulations provide for the restrictions to apply from 1 April 1990 to the new power. They will extend from 1 July 1990 to activities for the promotion of economic development carried on under any other enactment.

Waste Water Treatment

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the study into the environment and financial implications of the draft directive on municipal waste water treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have now received the report commissioned from Consultants in Environmental Sciences Limited which assesses the environmental effects and the costs of treating all sewage before discharge to estuaries and coastal waters. On the environmental side the report does not identify any firm evidence that present policies have a detrimental effect on the marine environment but it nonetheless identifies environmental benefits that should accrue if sewage discharges were treated. On costs the report shows a wide range depending on the degree of treatment provided. The central option of secondary treatment for discharges to estuarial waters, and primary treatment for discharges to coastal waters has associated capital costs estimated at around £1·5 billion, and an associated increase in running costs of around £45 million per annum.

A key recommendation in the report is that a decision on future policy should be taken as soon as possible in order to maximise the return on the £1·4 billion investments already planned over the next 10 years to improve the quality of bathing waters.

The Government have considered the results of this study, and the views of other interested parties as summarised in the CES report. We have concluded that on the evidence provided a case can be made out for treating all substantial discharges of sewage. We have accordingly decided that in general municipal sewage should receive secondary treatment, but that primary treatment would be more appropriate for discharges to coastal waters, where it can be shown that this does not adversely affect the environment. The estimated cost of introducing this level of treatment is around £1·5 billion.

We intend that this new investment programme should be fully integrated with the programme to improve bathing waters and that it should be completed as soon as practicable. Discussions will be held with the National Rivers Authority, the Office of Water Services, and the sewerage undertakers to work out the detailed arrangements for implementing this policy.

Copies of the CES report are being placed in the Library.

Duchy of Lancaster

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of providing a secure car service for the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the past 12 months.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 February 1990]: The cost of providing a secure car service for the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the past 12 months was £34,404.

Waste Recycling

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to provide additional resources to assist local authorities to carry out waste paper collection and recycling.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 22 February 1990]: No, it would be wrong to subsidise the collection and recycling of waste in this way. The collection and recycling of waste paper is a part of a comprehensive approach to recycling which local authorities are being encouraged to adopt under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Bill, currently before Parliament.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department now collects information on the number of local authorities which separate their domestic waste into different categories for recycling purposes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 22 February 1990]: I announced on 20 February during Standing Committee H consideration of clause 40 of the Environmental Protection Bill that my Department is sending out to local authorities a comprehensive questionnaire on recycling which will seek, among other things, information about the number of authorities which separate their domestic waste into different categories for recycling purposes.

Empty Properties

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the annual management and maintenance costs of empty residential properties belonging to his Department by region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The costs of annual management and maintenance of empty residential properties are not separately identified and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Shire Counties (Grants)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total Government grant per head of population for each shire county for 1990-91.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 1 March 1990]: Revenue support grant will not be paid directly to shire counties in 1990-91. The table shows the average revenue support grant after transitional adjustments plus special grant for low rateable value areas, per adult, to be paid to district councils in the area of each shire county.

Each area will receive £292·51 per adult in business rate income. The Government will also pay specific grants to authorities in the area of each shire county, but I have no estimates of the amounts.

Housing Allocations (Marriage Breakdowns)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of local authority-owned flats and houses during each of the last five years have been allocated to those whose marriages have broken down.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 March 1990]: My Department has no information year by year on the proportion of new lettings by local authorities that are to people whose marriages have broken down. Survey evidence suggests that in the mid-1980s the number of new lettings by local authorities to successor households formed through divorce was about 40,000 a year in England, compared with about 240,000 new lettings a year in total.

Housing Scheme (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the bond made between the Merseyside development corporation and the developers of the housing schemes at Riverside drive, Liverpool, and the reasons for the non-completion of building work.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 2 March 1990]: No bond was made between the Merseyside development corporation and the housing developers. All the houses have been completed but I understand that certain additional works to the estate have not been finished because the developers are now in voluntary liquidation.

House of Commons (Repairs)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cash-limited amount for minor repairs at the House of Commons in 1989-90.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 March 1990]: Minor maintenance work is charged to class XX, vote 18, subhead G (Maintenance and other operating costs) for which the provision in 1989-90, following the supplementary estimate, is £6,003,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Deportation Orders

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been served with the notice of the intention to make deportation orders against them in the past 12 months; and how many of these were of Irish origin.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During 1989, 3,196 notices of intention to deport were issued, of which four were to citizens of the Republic of Ireland.

Passports

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department following the review of the telephone systems within the passport department, what percentage of responses to callers are made within two minutes of connection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are currently undertaking a survey of telephone traffic into all passport offices, in consultation with British Telecom. An analysis of the results of the survey will be made later this year.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) new passports, and (b) amendments to passports were received each month in 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information, which relates to passports issued rather than to applications received, is shown in the table.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were employed on a casual basis, that is, not on the permanent staff, at each passport office in each month of 1989; and what was the cost of such staff.

Automatic answering facilities which connect callers initially to recorded information of general interest to passport applicants have been extended to all passport offices. Staff are allocated to telephone inquiry duties according to the overall operational needs of each office, taking into account other demands, in particular that of passport issuing. No precise information is available as to the number of staff available to answer incoming calls during a particular period.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors' passports were issued in 1988 and 1989; and how many extensions to passports were issued in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 2,134,209 British visitor's passports were issued in 1988. Final figures for 1989 issues are not yet available.

During 1989, a total of 39,218 passports submitted for replacement were extended for two years free of charge, under special arrangements introduced to reduce delays.

Information for 1988 is available only in respect of the London passport office, where 18,511 such extensions were issued.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to increase the number of regional passport offices, and the size of the present regional offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Belfast passport office is being further expanded to take on additional work from other offices. The optimum size, number and location of passport offices in the United Kingdom are kept under regular review.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider a further national public compaign run over several months to encourage people to apply for new passports in the months from January to June and November and December to level out demand.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The peak period of demand for passports runs from February to August, and it would not be appropriate to encourage further applications during this period. The Passport Department's publicity, which included the distribution last autumn of 1 million leaflets through the travel trade, is directed towards encouraging applicants to apply during the months of November and December, when demand is at its lightest. We shall be considering a further publicity drive later in the year.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the date of receipt of applications for new passports being dealt with on the first day in each month in 1989 at each passport office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the available information as to the date of receipt of applications for new passports being dealt with by each regional passport office at the first weekend of each month in 1989.

[1] Information not available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs were incurred in refunding applicants who obtained visitors' passports due to the delay in obtaining a 10-year passport; and what percentage of these refunds had been paid to applicants who had acknowledgement that they would receiving same.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Refunds totalling £160,716 were authorised during 1989. An acknowledgement would normally be sent before payment.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made for the likely staff costs for the passport department in the financial years (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92; and what proportion of each of these budgets will be allocated for (i) permanent staff, (ii) casual staff and (iii) overtime;

(2) what was the total budget for salaries and overtime in passport offices in 1989-90; what is the estimated expenditure; and what is the estimated expenditure for 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The salaries and overtime element of the Passport Department's budget for running costs in 1989-90 amounted to £10·12 million. This is likely to be considerably exceeded due to the heavy demand for passport services during the year, but it is not yet possible to say precisely what the outturn expenditure will be. Budget estimates for 1990-91 and 1991-92 have yet to be finally determined.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated amount of overtime expected to be worked in each passport office in 1990; and what is the estimated cost.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The requirements for overtime working are determined by operational needs, which are in turn determined by the level and pattern of demand for passport services. Budget estimates for 1990-91 have yet to be finally determined.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated time expected to be taken between receipt by application and issue of (a) new passports, (b) renewals and (c) amendments to passports at each office in 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The passport department will be aiming in 1990 to process straightforward, non-urgent passport applications of all types within a maximum of 30 working days during the period between January and June, and within 20 working days at other times. Urgent cases will receive priority and should not normally be subject to delay.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken so far to meet projected rises in demand for passports during 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An additional 220 permanent staff have been recruited to meet the expected increase in demand for passports this year. Twenty-two of these additional staff are being employed in Belfast and it is planned that a further increase in the Belfast staff should be made when additional accommodation becomes available in April or May. Improvements have been made in the telephone systems to enable a better service to be given to customers making inquiries by telephone. Greater use is being made of arrangements to transfer applications between offices, to balance workloads and to improve average processing times. The computer systems in the Glasgow and Liverpool offices have been enhanced to cater for the increases in staff numbers and pilot schemes have been established at both offices to test alternative working methods recommended following a review by consultants. Computerisation of the offices in Belfast, London, Newport and Peterborough has been deferred pending evaluation of the results of these pilot schemes.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time taken to process applications for new passports at each office from time of receipt to date of issue as at the first day of each month in 1989; and what was the average time taken to process applications for (a) renewal and (b) amendments to passports at each office from time of receipt to date of issue on the first day of each month in 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in precisely the form requested. The processing times in working days for straightforward non-urgent applications of all types are shown in the table and relate to applications completed on the dates shown.

Rape

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many men received sentences for rape of five years and over in each of the last 15 years; how many received sentences of under five years; and how many received non-custodial sentences in the same period;

(2) how many rapes were reported in each of the last 15 years; and how many resulted in (a) a charge, (b) a prosecution and (c) a conviction;

(3) what was the average sentence for rape in each of the past 15 years.

Mr. John Patten: Data for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990. Information for 1984 to 1988 is given in the table. To produce further information for each year from 1974 would involve disproportionate cost.

[1] Includes attempts and 'other' rape offences.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken on the Women's National Commission's 1985 recommendation that the question of consent should be reconsidered with the aim of reforming the law on rape to make it clear that the alleged rapist's assumptions about the complainant's consent should be reasonable.

Mr. John Patten: Section 1(2) of the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Act 1976 provides that any jury considering a defence based on the accused's belief that the woman was consenting to intercourse should have regard to the presence of absence or reasonable grounds for such a belief. In addition, the courts have held that a man who was reckless as to whether the woman consented should also be held guilty.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what circulars he has issued on what dates, to police forces concerning the special needs of victims in relation to rape trauma syndrome.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Home Office circular 69/1986, issued on 1 October 1986, set out the special needs of rape victims, and emphasised the need for police to understand the different ways in which victims may react. This circular was issued in response to recommendations made by the National Women's Commission on rape trauma syndrome and other matters.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has issued any circulars on the under-reporting of rape and sexual assault to police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. However, guidance to the police seeks to encourage increased reporting by stress the need to provide improved facilities for the reception and examination of victims of rape and sexual assault and to deal with them in a sympathetic and understanding manner.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Waddington: All the Department's centrally run management courses include sessions on equal opportunities; detailed information on management training provided locally is not held centrally. The other information requested is not available.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report: "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom."

Mr. John Patten: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents who wish to do so can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The issue is kept under review by the ministerial group on women's issues.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what child care provision for pre-school age children is provided for employees of his Department; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office plans to provide nursery places for pre-school age children of its staff in Croydon and Bootle shortly and is considering the possibility of making similar provision in London; holiday play-scheme places have already been made available for the children of staff in Croydon, Bootle and Westminster. Management have contributed funds and staff to these initiatives, but there will also be a charge for places.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Waddington: My Department has two equal opportunities officers: one for staff in the prison service who is a grade 6, and one for all other staff who is a grade 5.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Waddington: Recruitment advertising has been amended to carry a positive equal opportunities message and a recently issued booklet promoting managerial careers in the Department specifically addresses those returning to work after a break of any kind.

Arrangements have recently been made to ensure that staff on special leave, including those who are taking a career break, as well as those on maternity leave are eligible for consideration by promotion boards. Seniority requirements for eligibility for promotion have also been reduced and opportunities for part-time working, in management grades as well as at junior levels, are being significantly increased.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Waddington: The proportion of female civil servants in the Home Office in the grades for which information is requested is as follows:

Grade	Per cent.

5	18

Domestic Violence

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police units are trained especially for domestic violence in each police force in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on such units is not collected centrally. We understand that there are 33 units in the Metropolitan police specifically dedicated to dealing with domestic violence, eight in the West Yorkshire police and one in the Northumbria police. Officers in these units have received basic training, which provides some guidance on dealing with domestic violence, and there are also opportunities for officers to attend specialist courses or seminars.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reports were made to police in each force area of England and Wales of domestic violence in each of the past 15 years; and how many resulted in (a) a charge, (b) a prosecution and (c) a conviction.

Mr. John Patten: Information on notifiable offences of violence against the person is published annually in table 2.8 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". Regular information on domestic violence is not reported separately to this Department by police forces in England and Wales. However, detailed information on homicide is presented in chapter 4 of the above publication. Some incomplete information was published in "Criminal Statistics" in 1979 and 1980. In addition, results obtained from a special survey of violent crime recorded by the police and from the 1988 British crime survey were published in Home Office research bulletin No. 27. There is also some information in chapter 7 of "Domestic Violence" Home Office research study 107. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library. Information on prosecutions and convictions is not collected in sufficient detail to distinguish domestic violence.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what improvements have been made since 1985 in data collection on domestic violence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Data on domestic violence are not collated centrally. We are considering recommending to chief officers that where they do not already collect data on the incidence of domestic violence in their area, they should do so.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken in the last 12 months, following the Women's National Commission's 1985 recommendation that a circular be issued by his Department to give guidance and encouragement to chief constables to review training and procedures on the handling of cases of domestic violence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A circular was issued in October 1986 in response to the Women's National Commission's recommendations. During the past 12 months we have reviewed police procedures in relation to domestic violence, and we expect to issue a revised circular within the next few months.

Attacks on Women

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reports of physical attacks on women there have been in each of the last 25 years in England and Wales; and how many resulted in (a) a charge, (b) a prosecution and (c) a conviction.

Mr. John Patten: Information on notifiable offences of violence against the person is published annually in table 2.8 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". Regular information on the sex of victims of such offences is not reported separately to this Department by police forces in England and Wales. However, detailed information on homicide is presented in chapter 4 of that publication. In addition, results obtained from a special survey of violent crime recorded by the police and from the 1988 British crime survey were published in Home Office research bulletin No. 27. Information on prosecutions and convictions is not collected in sufficient detail to identify the sex of victims.

Women in Custody

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women are in custody for conviction of (a) non-violent crime and (b) violent crime; and what was the comparable figure in each of the past five years.

Mr. Meller: The readily available information relates to sentenced prisoners and is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales", table 1.8 of the latest volume for 1988, Cm. 825, a copy of which is in the Library. Provisional information for 1989 is given in the table.

Population[1] in prison service establishments of females under sentence on 30 June 1989: by offence group

Offence group	Number[2]
Violence against the person	220
Sexual offences[3]	20
Robbery	80
Other offences[4]	860
Not recorded	80
Fine defaulters	20
All offences	1,280

[1] Provisional figures.
[2] Rounded estimates.
[3] Including rape.
[4] Burglary, theft, handling, fraud, forgery, drugs and other offences.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women, by nationality, are in custody awaiting deportation; and what was the comparable information in each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 January 1990 nine women were detained under the Immigration Act 1971 pending removal under the deportation powers. On these, four were Nigerian, one Ghanaian, one Jamaican, one Moroccan, one Colombian and one French. Details for the corresponding date in the previous five years are:

1989—6 (one Filipino, four Nigerians and one Indian)
1988—5 (two Ghanaians, one Ugandan, one Nigerian, one citizen of Sierra Leone)
1987—3 (one Jamaican, one Ghanaian, one nationality doubtful)
1986—1 (Ghanaian)
1985—0.

These figures do not include women serving custodial sentences who are also the subject of deportation proceedings.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Waddington: Sexual harassment is under all circumstances unacceptable to the Department. All staff have been advised of the appropriate avenues for complaints of such behaviour and where complaints are substantiated disciplinary procedures apply. Eleven complaints have been reported to personnel management divisions in the last five years. The action taken has included warnings and reprimands and, in one case, a ban on promotion for one year. There is no central record of complaints dealt with locally.

Sentencing Guidelines

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sentencing guidelines exist for women with dependent children; and when these were last revised.

Mr. John Patten: Sentencing is a matter for the courts. The Court of Appeal has made it clear that custody should be used only when a court considers it absolutely necessary. We are revising the handbook "The Sentence of the Court" and the new edition will refer specifically to women offenders with family responsibilities. The national standards for community service orders, which came into effect on 1 April 1989, asked probation areas to ensure that community service placements are available for women offenders, including those who are pregnant, and offenders with young children.

Women Police Officers

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has issued any circular to police forces in England and Wales on the role of women police officers in relation to crime involving women and children.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No circular has been issued relating specifically to that subject. However, circular 69/1986, issued in October 1986, sets out the response agreed between the Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Officers to the recommendation made by the Women's National Commission on the role of women police officers.

Pin-ups

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all photographs of females in various stages of undress from all his departmental premises.

Mr. Waddington: All managers have been advised, and are reminded from time to time, to ensure that no material which is likely to be found sexually offensive is displayed in the workplace; and to deal promptly with any complaints.

Prisons

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons have specialist mother and baby units.

Mr. Mellor: Three prison establishments—Her Majesty's prison Holloway, Her Majesty's prison Askham Grange, and Her Majesty's prison and young offender institution, Styal—have mother and baby units. It is planned to build a further unit at Her Majesty's prison and young offender institution, New Hall in 1991-92.

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 40 sites considered in the north-west for prison sites are (a) adjacent to a hospital, (b) within two to three miles of an existing prison, (c) built-up areas, (d) opposed by the local authorities and (e) acceptable to the local authorities; and if he will list them.

Mr. Mellor: Most of the information is not readily available on an accurate basis as preliminary consideration indicated that the site was not suitable for our purpose and a detailed investigation was not made. Planning consents were refused by the local authority in respect of sites at Kirkham, Orrell Lane (Bootle) and Rochdale.

Child Abuse

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents in each of the past 10 years have been reported of physical or sexual abuse of a child by the child's blood father out of the total number of such incidents.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not collected centrally. Estimates of the numbers of children who were victims of certain violent or sexual offences in 1984 were published in table 2 of the Home Office statistical bulletin 29/86. Some results from an ad hoc survey of violent crime recorded by the police in 1985-87 and from the 1988 British crime survey were published in Home Office research bulletin No. 27. Information on criminal proceedings for offences involving violence against children in May 1988 was published in Home Office statistical bulletin 42/89. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Prostitution

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek to abolish the term common prostitute; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. We believe that the present arrangements—that the police make a record when they caution a woman for soliciting, and that convictions under the Street Offences Act 1959 depend upon the woman having been cautioned on an earlier occasion—are satisfactory.

Litter

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the number and amount of each fine levied for offences involving litter in Wales since 1 January 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table. Data for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990.

Number of persons fined in Wales under section 1(3) of the Litter Act 1983

Amount of fine	1985	1986	1987	1988
Under £20 including	42	63	56	23
£20 and under £50	63	89	93	93
£50 and under £100	18	19	19	21
Over £100[1]	6	1	5	3
Total	129	172	173	140

[1] Maximum fine was £150 (in 1985 and 1987).

Direct Broadcasting by Satellite

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will issue guidelines on the portrayal of women in respect of direct broadcasting by satellite.

Mr. Waddington: The regulation of television services, including satellite services, is a matter for the regulatory bodies established for this purpose by Parliament, not for the Government.

The service to be provided by British Satellite Broadcasting will be regulated by the IBA under the Broadcasting Act 1981. Other satellite services currently available direct to home are regulated by the Cable Authority under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984, by virtue of the fact that they are also relayed by cable. Under clauses 38 to 40 of the Broadcasting Bill all satellite services originating in the United Kingdom will be licensed by the new Independent Television Commission.

Police Custody (Deaths)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of deaths in police custody in London for each year since 1980, the coroners' verdict on the cause of death and the result, if any, of police investigations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of deaths which occurred in police custody, or otherwise with the police, in London, and the associated inquest verdicts, are contained in the annual reports of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. An investigation is carried out by the Metropolitan police into all such deaths. However, I am advised that the results of those investigations are not recorded centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

British Coal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the British Coal pits that have had their output target figures adjusted; and if he will show in each case (a) the original tonnage figure and (b) the revised figure.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Compact Fluorescent Bulbs

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the potential for energy saving from the use of compact fluorescent bulbs.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Compared to normal tungsten bulbs compact flourescent lamps use only 20 to 25 per cent. as much electricity.

Gas Levy Act

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the working of the Gas Levy Act.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Gas Levy Act 1981 was amended in 1986 when British Gas plc succeeded the British Gas Corporation. It has recently come to light that these amendments, contained in the Gas Act 1986, did not achieve the precise results intended at the time the legislation was taken. The intention was to ensure that British Gas were treated for gas levy purposes as if they were the same person as the gas corporation. However, the detailed amendments in schedule 6 to the 1986 Act brought into account a number of categories of gas which were not previously subject to the levy because they had never been included in the gas corporation's contracts. The Government will take the opportunity of the 1990 Finance Bill to rectify the situation. In the meantime my Department will continue to collect the levy in line with the intentions of the 1986 amendments.

Offshore Installations (Women Employed)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement on the employment of women on offshore oil and gas installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Skills shortages are being experienced in the offshore oil and gas sector, and, although women are employed on offshore oil and gas installations, I believe that there is scope for employing more. In consultation with the industry, I already have plans to build on their existing initiatives to promote this objective.

The Sex Discrimination and Equal Pay (Offshore Employment) Order 1987 applies the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report: "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Wakeham: My Department is aware of the recommendations made in the child care network report prepared for the Commission of the European Communities. It is participating in interdepartmental studies into the feasibility of providing child care facilities in London and the surrounding areas.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Wakeham: All the Department's staff management courses include training on equal opportunities for women. A total of 33 per cent. of staff at grade six level or above outside headquarters have received equal opportunities training.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department does not provide child care facilities, and has no current plans to do so.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Wakeham: Grade five.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department's selection criteria for recruitment and promotion are designed not to discriminate against mature students or women returning to work. Advertisements do not contain upper age limits, and do mention returning to work and the Department's flexible approach to working hours, part-time working and special leave for career break purposes. Promotion board procedures include monitoring decisions at each stage for compliance with equal opportunities policies.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Wakeham: There are no women in grades one to four; at grade five, 14 per cent. are women, at grade six, 4 per cent. and at grade seven, 11 per cent.

Disconnections

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any information on how many one-parent families have had their electricity or gas supplies cut off for not paying their bills.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no information on the numbers of one-parent families that have had their gas or electricity supplies disconnected. However, the numbers of gas and electricity disconnections are now at the lowest levels since records were first kept.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken;

(2) whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department's policy is that sexual harassment at work is unacceptable, and is a disciplinary matter. The definition of sexual harassment includes the display of sexually offensive material in the office. Reminders about the Department's policy are circulated from time to time, and explain the procedure for complaints. There has been one formal complaint in the last five years, which resulted in a formal warning as to future conduct.

Domestic Appliances

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement on his Department's policy on energy ratings on domestic appliances.

Mr. Peter Morrison: With encouragement from my Energy Efficiency Office, all major appliance manufacturers provide, on a voluntary basis, energy consumption data for major energy using appliances in their sales literature.

Women Mineworkers

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many women have applied to work underground in a mine under the provisions of the Employment Act 1989; and how many have been accepted.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Montrose Platform

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what electrical works were carried out in module 9 and its associated switch room prior to the resumption of production on the Montrose platform on 14 February; whether that work was complete prior to production commencing; whether transit blanks were fitted in the tracks of the electrical cables; and whether the cable tracks in module 9 had been closed;

(2) what work permits were issued on 14 February in respect of electrical work in module 9 and switchroom of the Montrose platform; and what procedures were in force for co-ordinating all work permits;

(3) whether the differential pressure switch was commissioned in the module 9 switchroom at the time of a reported gas leak on the Montrose production platform, on 14 February;

(4) whether the differential pressure switch was overridden at any time on 14 February in the switchroom associated with module 9 on the Montrose production platform.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Module 9 was surveyed by the certifying authority some three weeks before 14 February. Following this survey power supplies to the heater were changed, work was undertaken on the heating, ventilation and air conditioning system, and instrument cables were installed. This work was completed prior to 14 February. Transit blocks were fitted in the tracks of the electrical cables and were closed at the time of the survey. The certifying authority's survey found that the differential pressure switch required to be replaced. This had not been done by 14 February. The pressurised system for module 9 had however been commissioned. The differential pressure switch was not overridden at any time on 14 February.

No work permits were issued on Montrose on 14 February. All existing construction and hot work permits were withdrawn at 3.20 am on 14 February.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what requirements his Department or the appropriate certifying authority has made in respect of differential pressures in the switching rooms associated with the Montrose production platform.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The fourth edition of my Department's guidance notes on the design, construction and certification of offshore installations, to be published shortly, states that a minimum positive pressure differential of 50 pascals should be maintained in safe working areas adjacent to hazardous areas on offshore installations. The certifying authority for the Montrose platform has confirmed that the pressure differential in switching rooms adjacent to hazardous areas on the platform meets this requirement.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what standards of fireproofing apply in the case of the accommodation module on the Montrose production platform; and how these differ from his most recently issued guidance notes and existing regulations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Offshore Installations (Construction and Survey) Regulations 1974 require that every part of an installation shall be composed of materials which, so far as is consistent with its function, shall be incombustible. The accommodation module on the Montrose Alpha installation includes materials which are not incombustible and the external boundaries of the module will not meet the hydrocarbon class of fire resistance recommended in the fourth edition of my Department's guidance notes on the design, construction and certification of offshore installations, to be published shortly. Arrangements are in hand for the accommodation module to be replaced by a new module which will meet these requirements. Pending completion of this work, my Department has required that additional safety measures are put in place.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he will take to ensure that working and operational practices on the Montrose platform are safe before he allows oil and gas production to be recommenced on the Montrose field and to start up on the Arbroath field.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My safety directorate will take whatever steps are necessary to satisfy itself that the required safety standards are achieved. In particular my inspectors have required the operator to institute an immediate programme of instructing all platform personnel on work permit procedures. As soon as this has been completed, an audit will be carried out to confirm that the procedures are being adhered to.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to launch a nationwide campaign encouraging energy conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. My Department is running a two-week campaign, starting on 12 March, targeted at decision takers in industry, commerce and the public sector. It will be comprised of a series of advertisements in national newspapers on the important role of energy efficiency and how it can save money as well as help to reduce the risk of climate change.

Coal Imports

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of all imports of coal by British Coal or any of its subsidiaries in the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Contract Management Arrangements

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many contract energy management arrangements in the public sector known to the Energy Efficiency Office commenced (a) before and (b) after the 1987 relaxation of the Treasury ruling on such arrangements.

Mr. Wakeham: The report of the National Audit Office on energy efficiency published last summer (House of Commons paper No. 547) noted that three of the 10 contract energy management arrangements in the public sector known to the EEO commenced after the issue of new guidelines in 1987. The EEO is currently engaged in an exercise to review progress.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action has been taken in response to the energy technology support unit's assessment in January 1987 that research and development spending of £6·65 million over 10 years on new technology could ultimately produce energy savings of £350 million.

Mr. Wakeham: Expenditure on research and development forms only a small part of the total expenditure needed to produce energy savings from new technology. In April 1989 my Energy Efficiency Office replaced its research and development and demonstration programmes by the best practice programme of research, development, demonstration and dissemination. This aims to stimulate energy savings worth £500 million per year by the year 2000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements have been established for the central reporting and monitoring of energy efficiency improvements for the public sector as a whole.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 20 July 1989 at column 249.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the annual value of energy savings, in absolute and percentage terms, achieved over the last five years by (a) the National Health Service, (b) local authorities and (c) each Government Department.

Mr. Wakeham: This information is not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated 1989-90 spending by the Energy Efficiency Office on research and development projects under the best practice programme; and what is the estimated number of projects which will have been assisted by the year end.

Mr. Wakeham: The estimated total spend in 1989-90 by my Energy Efficiency Office on research, development, demonstration and dissemination, including the new best practice programme, is some £9·5 million. The R and D element of the best practice programme is only just commencing; eight projects have been recommended for support so far. The bulk of the expenditure has been on technology transfer.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made by the Energy Efficiency Office in 1989-90 towards promoting energy efficiency in (a) Government estate, (b) the National Health Service and (c) the rest of the public sector.

Mr. Wakeham: Details of a campaign to promote energy efficiency within Government Departments were announced on 20 July 1989, and Ministers with special responsibility for departmental energy use have since met twice to take forward work towards the Government's aim of achieving savings rising to £45 million per annum (15 per cent. of the current total bill) over five years. My Energy Efficiency Office co-operates with the Audit Commission and Department of Health on work to promote energy efficiency in the NHS and local authority sectors.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest figures he has on the number of major energy-consuming sites and the percentage of total energy consumption by manufacturing industry for which these sites are responsible.

Mr. Wakeham: The information comes from the five-yearly purchase inquiries conducted with a sample of 10,000 United Kingdom manufacturing sites and establishments by the Business Statistics Office. Latest figures are from the 1984 survey. Data from the 1989 survey is not yet available. The 1984 sample was based on 7 per cent. of the total 136,000 estimated manufacturing establishments, but accounts for an estimated 81 per cent. of the total energy consumed in manufacturing industry. The survey indicated that there were 328 establishments with energy consumption in excess of 5 million therms per annum, representing 51 per cent. of the total energy purchased by manufacturing industry.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the Energy Efficiency Office's current target number of major energy-consuming sites with monitoring and targeting systems.

Mr. Wakeham: The EEO's target is for monitoring and targeting systems to be implemented at 1,000 major energy-consumer sites by the end of the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest figure for the number of major energy-consuming sites implementing monitoring and targeting systems under the Energy Efficiency Office's monitoring and targeting scheme.

Mr. Wakeham: The latest estimate is that 800 major energy-consuming sites are implementing monitoring and targeting systems.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will instruct the Energy Efficiency Office to develop a fully comprehensive and detailed database on major energy users in the industry and commerce sector.

Mr. Wakeham: My Energy Efficiency Office is at the moment considering establishing a comprehensive database of major energy users in industry, commerce and local government. Our regional energy efficiency officers already have a considerable amount of such data, as has our energy technology support unit.

Energy Managers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the total energy spend for each energy manager appointed in each Government Department.

Mr. Wakeham: The precise information is at present being collected as part of the Government's initiative to improve energy efficiency in the Government estate.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which Government Departments have appointed full-time energy managers.

Mr. Wakeham: All major Departments have now appointed departmental energy managers.

National Grid Interconnector

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated cost of uprating the national grid interconnector with Scotland.

Mr. Wakeham: This is a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the name of the company which did not take up the invitation to tender for the job of his special public relations and marketing adviser on electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: Valin Pollen International was invited to tender for the position of special marketing and public relations adviser to my Department, but declined to participate.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the name of the company which did not take up the invitation to tender for the job of public relations and marketing adviser on electricity privatisation to his Department and the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Wakenham: Valin Pollen International was invited to tender for the position of joint marketing and public relations adviser to my Department and the elecricity supply industry, but declined to participate.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the conventions set out in the Central Office of Information publication of 1981 on the role of Government information officers will apply to Lowe Bell and Dewe Rogerson in their respective roles as special public relations and marketing advisers to him and public relations and marketing advisers on electricity privatisation to his Department and the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Wakeham: Government Departments commissioning public relations and marketing advisers comply with the conventions set out in the Cabinet paper entitled "Central Government Conventions on Publicity and Advertising" which is in the Libraries of both Houses.

Hinkley Point C Inquiry

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has yet received the report of the inspector of the Hinkley Point C inquiry; and when he intends to publish it.

Mr. Wakeham: I have yet to receive the inspector's report, the timing of which is a matter for him. I will wish to see and consider the report before deciding when to publish it.

Sizewell

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the sea defence provision protecting Sizewell power stations in Suffolk.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for Nuclear Electric.

CIVIL SERVICE

First Division Association

100. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he last met the representatives of the First Division Association to discuss obligations to the Crown in Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: This was one of the subjects discussed when the head of the Home Civil Service met the Civil Service unions on 7 February.

Equal Opportunities

101. Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what representations he has received concerning the progress of the Civil Service's equal opportunities employment programme.

Mr. Luce: I have received some representations. The Civil Service has a range of policies to encourage equal opportunities in all areas.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what grade his office recommends as being appropriate for departmental equal opportunities officers.

Mr. Luce: Guidance on the appointment of departmental equal opportunity officers is set out in the programme of action to achieve equality of opportunity for women in the Civil Service, which was published by my Department in 1984. This guidance recommends that in larger Departments, the equal opportunity officer should be appointed at grade 5 or grade 6 level. In smaller Departments, the guidance recommends that the officer should not usually be more than two grades below that of the principal establishment officer and should not, normally, be below grade 7 level.

Trade Unions

104. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he last met representatives of the Civil Service unions; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Luce: I met members of the National Union of Civil and Public Servants on 29 January to discuss physical security of Government establishments.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship

80. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much business sponsorship is attracted outside London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Under the business sponsorship incentive scheme, 70 per cent. of awards have gone to arts groups based outside London.

87. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what business sponsorship has been attracted for innovative works in the last 12 months.

Mr. Luce: Under my business sponsorship incentive scheme awards have gone to a very wide range of art forms. Examples include Allied Lyons' sponsorship of the Grand Union Music Theatre for its series of educational and community workshops involving commissions from Third world black writers and CNC Systems' support of the Mikron Theatre Company's south Pennine tour of areas not within easy reach of theatre centres, including performances in clubs, pubs and museums.

88. Mr. Cormack: To ask the Minister for the Arts to what extent business sponsorship funds have been used to provide for the refurbishment of national museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: National museums and galleries which I sponsor have benefited substantially from the generosity of business and private sponsors. In an increasing number of cases this has been linked to incentive funding from the Government. Recent examples of sponsored refurbishment include the gallery of Chinese art sponsored by Mr. Tsui at the Victoria and Albert museum, the "Food for Thought" gallery sponsored by the Sainsbury Family Trust and other generous donors at the science museum and the rehang at the Tate gallery to which BP plc made a very substantial donation.

National Arts Companies

81. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the accumulated deficits of the national companies.

Mr. Luce: I am advised that the four national companies are projecting a combined deficit of around £8 million by the end of March. Next year they are each to receive an increase of 11 per cent. in their grant from the Arts Council.

Overseas Earnings

82. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what estimate he has made of the overseas earnings of the arts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: Although figures for such earnings are not held centrally, the PSI has attempted to quantify the overseas earnings of the arts, broadly defined, at £4 billion in 1984.

Arts (North-west)

83. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on participation in the arts in the north-west.

Mr. Luce: I understand that in 1988-89 audience figures in the north-west Arts region (population 4·8 million) at arts venues—including theatres, galleries, concert halls, and small touring and community venues—were in the region of 4 million.

Touring

84. Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he intends to encourage further touring both inside and outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: Many performing companies already tour extensively throughout Britain, quite apart from the touring provided for by the Arts Council's annual touring budget, which will be £8·2 million in 1990-91. In addition to this, I have given the Arts Council an extra £5·5 million over the three-year period from 1988-89 to 1990-91 to provide approximately 60 weeks extra touring in each year. Overseas touring is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, through the British Council.

Public Libraries

85. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the total of expenditure per capita on public libraries in England and Wales.

Mr. Luce: Expenditure per capita on public libraries in England, for which I am responsible, was £9·87 in 1988-89. Libraries in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

West Midlands Arts

86. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to meet the chairman of West Midlands Arts to discuss the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I discussed Mr. Wilding's report with the chairman of West Midlands Arts on 19 December 1989.

Wilding Report

89. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to respond to the Wilding report.

95. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister for the Arts when it is his intention to respond to the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Arts Council and Crafts Council

90. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last discussed with the chairman of the Arts Council and the Crafts Council the question of the merger of those two organisations.

Mr. Luce: I regularly meet the chairmen of the Arts Council and Crafts Council to discuss current issues.

East Midlands Arts

91. Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to meet the chairman of East Midlands Arts to discuss the level of financial support for photography in the east midlands.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so. East Midlands Arts' direct support for photography this year was £53,000. In 1990-91 this will rise to £74,000.

Arts Council

92. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council; and what was discussed.

Mr. Luce: I last met the chairman on 19 February 1990. A variety of matters of mutual interest were discussed.

Northern Arts

93. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of Northern Arts to discuss the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I have already discussed Mr. Wilding's report with the chairman of Northern Arts on 19 December 1989.

Opera

94. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning the funding of opera in England.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of such representations. It is however a matter for the Arts Council to determine how much of its grant is spent on opera. In 1990-91 I am advised that this will be over £22 million, including touring.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Luce: Specific training sessions about equality of opportunity for women, ethnic minorities and the disabled are included in all the internal residential management training courses undertaken by managers in my Department. Emphasis is also given to equality of opportunity when training managers to carry out staff appraisal, selection and promotion interviewing. The one female member of staff at grade 6 outside headquarters has not yet attended a course as specified.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Luce: My Department does not yet provide nursery facilities for the use of its staff, but they have access to a local holiday play scheme financed by parental and departmental contributions.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Luce: My Department is served by the Cabinet Office equal opportunities officer who is a grade seven.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career-break due to child care.

Mr. Luce: In my Department there are no age limits on recruitment although we expect recruits to give a reasonable period of service before retirement. Candidates without the usual academic qualifications may take a short answer test. Promotion is solely on the basis of merit. We have lowered our seniority requirements to bring them into line with the national standard and previous service counts for seniority purposes after a career break.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of grades seven, six, five, four, three, two and one, respectively.

Mr. Luce: In my Department the proportion of civil servants in each grade who are women, is as follows:

Grade 1—Not applicable
2—Nil
3—Not applicable
4—Not applicable
5—25 per cent.
6—100 per cent.
7—27 per cent.

Pin-ups

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups on all his departmental premises.

Mr. Luce: My Department has no plans to issue specific guidance on this subject. However, it has issued a policy statement about sexual harassment; offensive pin-ups would be dealt with in this context.

Merseyside Arts

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of Merseyside Arts to discuss the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 February at column 52.

Access for the Disabled

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on progress made in achieving easier access for the disabled in arts venues and libraries.

Mr. Luce: In December 1988 I gave £150,000 to the ADAPT fund, set up by the Carnegie Trust to improve the accessibility of arts venues, including libraries, for disabled people. I am pleased to say that the fund has to date made 23 awards provisionally worth £167,250.

SCOTLAND

BR Sleeper Services

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to BR about the London-Stanraer overnight sleeper service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend was informed by British Rail of its plans to withdraw the Stranraer-London sleeper service from 14 May and to provide a connecting service between Stranraer and the Glasgow-London sleeper trains. While it is regrettable that British Rail has found it necessary to follow this course, the decision is a commercial matter for British Rail.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Rifkind: Four management training courses and eight non-management courses run by my Department's training unit include sessions on equal opportunities. Staff also attend management courses run by the Civil Service College which have equal opportunities input. Training opportunities are available to all my Department's staff irrespective of location. Detailed figures are not available for the limited number of staff at grade six level and above who do not work in headquarters offices.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not directly make child care provision. Staff of my Department do, however, make use during school holidays of the facilities provided for school age children of civil servants by the central Edinburgh holiday play scheme. The possibility of providing child care facilities in the Scottish Office in future is currently the subject of a cost-benefit study. The study will cover how any such facilities, if justified, might be funded.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Rifkind: Grade 5.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one, respectively.

Mr. Rifkind: The percentage of women officers in grades one to seven in the Scottish Office and associated departments is shown in the table.

Grade	Number
One	0
Two	0
Three	4·3
Four	0
Five	7·1
Six	15·3
Seven	12·3

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department's policy statement makes it clear that sexual harassment constitutes unacceptable behaviour which will not be tolerated. The policy statement, and guidance on reporting complaints, was brought to the attention of all staff by an office notice and is separately covered in the staff handbook. A leaflet to be issued to all new entrants is in course of preparation. Four formal complaints about sexual harassment have been made during the last five years. Disciplinary action was taken in three cases.

Well Women Clinics

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of well women clinics in each health board area in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not collected centrally.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he takes account of the Forestry Commission's duty under section 11 of the Countryside Act to have regard to the desirability of conserving the natural beauty and amenity of the countryside in considering the degree of expertise in nature conservation possessed by potential appointees to the Commission.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: When selecting staff for employment, the Forestry Commission takes into account all qualifications and experience which are relevant to the job concerned. A degree of expertise in nature conservation would be relevant in employing field officers, many of whom have qualifications and experience in this area. In addition, the commission employs specialist staff on environmental duties, and retains consultants on nature conservation, landscape architecture and archaeology.

Rates Arrears

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the percentage of ratepayers in arrears, for each quarter of each of the last five years, to the end of March 1989, for each regional council area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Ravenscraig

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan of 28 February, Official Report, column 271, whether he discussed with the chairman of British Steel on 26 October 1989 the decision to impose a production pause on Ravenscraig over the Christmas and new year holiday period.

Mr. Lang: The detailed matters discussed at my right hon. and learned Friend's meeting with the chairman of British Steel on 26 October 1989 are commercially confidential.

Schools (Opting Out)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on funding from his Department's funds for organisations which seek to persuade schools to opt out of the local authority education system.

Mr. Lang: No public funds will be available to an organisation to persuade schools to seek self-governing status.

Training Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why all men and women, whether married or unmarried, are required to be entered as married on Training Agency forms ET4, ET6, ET69 and ET67.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 March 1990]: Applicants for Employment Training are no longer required to provide the Training Agency with information about marital status. However, forms ET4, ET6, ET67 and ET69 are used to enter information on the Training Agency's computer which will accept the input only if all entries on the forms, including the redundant "marital status" entry, have been completed. To overcome this, a blanket entry of "married" on all these forms was agreed to be preferable to a costly interim software amendment to the computer system. The computer system is to be revised in April 1990 and charges will be introduced at that time to resolve this problem.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given to the loss of bed spaces or the closure of wards or hospitals as a consequence of the deficit currently incurred by Lothian health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 February 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend made clear that there will be no crisis closures. We are awaiting Lothian health board's proposals for considered adjustments to achieve more efficient arrangements for service delivery. Any adjustments will be within the framework of the board's strategic plans and made in the normal way so that the interests of patients remain paramount.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Ryder: All management training courses run by my Department include sessions on equal opportunities and it is Treasury policy that staff with management responsibilities, including those outside headquarters, receive appropriate training.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Ryder: Children of staff in Her Majesty's Treasury between the ages of five and 12 have access to a holiday play scheme that is organised by the Westminster Play Association. The scheme is run in the Treasury building and is available to a number of Whitehall Departments.

Consideration is being given to other child care schemes for which funding arrangements would need to be contained within overall running cost provision.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Ryder: Grade seven.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career-break due to child care.

Mr. Ryder: As an equal opportunities employer, mature students and women who return to work are treated in exactly the same way as anyone else within the Treasury's recruitment and promotion policy.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Ryder: For Her Majesty's Treasury the information is as follows:

(a) 17·4 per cent.;
(b) 5·9 per cent.;
(c) 12·8 per cent.;
(d) none;
(e) 18·5 per cent.;
(f) none;
(g) none.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Ryder: The report was prepared for the European Commission, which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents, who wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, have encouraged the development of a range of high quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Ryder: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme for action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service, which was published by the Cabinet Office (management and personnel office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with, if appropriate, as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedure. Specific guidance on reporting alleged sexual harassment is included in "Women in the Treasury: a Guide to Personnel Management policies", which has been issued to all Treasury staff. Existing guidance in Her Majesty' Treasury on sexual harassment is being reviewed with a view to incorporating it in a new booklet on equal opportunity policies. There have been five complaints reported in the past five to six years; in the three proven cases, formal written warnings were issued.

Taxation

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of women he expects the proposed married person's tax allowance will be given to.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that in 1990-91 approximately 400,000 married women, just under 10 per cent. of all married women with income greater than the personal allowance, will receive part or all of the married couple's allowance. The estimate is based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and is provisional.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the financial position of farmers' wives in relation to taxation, social security benefits and pensions.

Mr. Lilley: I am not aware of any particular points affecting the financial position of farmers' wives. Many of them will be among the 2¾ million wives who will gain when the new system of independent taxation comes into effect on 5 April this year.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will seek to zero-rate sanitary products for value added tax purposes; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I cannot anticipate my right hon Friend's Budget statement.

Pin-ups

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Ryder: Sexual harassment at work, of which the display of sexually offensive material is a form, is not tolerated and is dealt with, if appropriate, as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures. Existing guidance in Her Majesty's Treasury on sexual harassment is being reviewed with a view to incorporating it in a new booklet on equal opportunities.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether payments other than those paid to persons who have been randomly selected by the electronic random number indicator equipment situated at Lytham St. Annes have been made by ERNIE in any year since 1979.

Mr. Ryder: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement about the dumping of sewage sludge at sea.

Mr. Gummer: The arrangements reached at the 1987 North sea ministerial conference included an undertaking in principle not to dump materials in the North sea unless there are no practical disposal alternatives on land. In the case of sewage sludge more than 70 per cent. of the United Kingdom's production of this material is now disposed of on land. The Government have continued to encourage sewerage undertakers to develop the use of practical land-based disposal methods for the remainder. In particular, we have identified significant advances in incineration techniques both as regard their efficiency and environmental impact.

In view of this encouraging progress in the development of alternative methods, we have now decided to terminate the sea disposal of sewage sludge. This will mean a substantial programme of work to be undertaken in order to implement alternative disposal methods. A major capital investment will be required. Planning permission where necessary must also be obtained. We shall proceed as rapidly as possible. But some dumping will need to continue until new facilities are ready. We intend to have finished all dumping by the end of 1998.

Chemical Wastes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the incineration of chemical wastes at sea.

Mr. Gummer: At the 1987 North sea ministerial conference it was agreed that marine incineration should be phased out by 31 December 1994 as alternative means of dealing with the wastes concerned were becoming available. Land-based incineration facilities capable of dealing with the United Kingdom wastes which are currently burnt at sea are now being developed. I have therefore decided that no more United Kingdom waste will be licensed for marine incineration after the end of this year.

Industrial Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to reduce to zero by the year 2000 inputs of toxic discharges into the North sea.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

It is the Government's policy to prevent or (where prevention is not possible) minimise releases of toxic substances to the aquatic environment. Our current target reductions are of the order of 50 per cent. by 1995. They were agreed at the London North sea conference in 1987. The United Kingdom national action plan published on 5 March shows the good progress we have made to date. The progress made by each North sea state will be reviewed at the Hague North sea conference this week.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of Agricultural Development Advisory Service staff are women.

Mr. Curry: The proportion of women in the Ministry's Agricultural Development Advisory Service is currently 31 per cent.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to encourage women to use his Department's sponsored training courses.

Mr. Curry: All courses provided by my Department are fully publicised to women staff; we also run specific courses for women managers to help them develop their personal effectiveness. Additionally, to encourage women with young families, any extra child care expenses incurred as a result of attending a training course, may be reclaimed.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Curry: All initial and middle management training courses run by my Department include sessions on equal opportunities for women. Training for staff at grade six level and above is more individually structured and staff are encouraged to undertake training in a range of competencies, including equal opportunities for women, but separate statistics are not available.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what childcare provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 31 January (Official Report, column 236). Once the results of the studies mentioned are available, consideration will be given to the matter of funding. School holiday play schemes for children aged over five years have been operating at Guildford since 1988 and at Leeds since last year, the latter scheme being run in partnership with the DSS and PSA. A further scheme will be introduced at the central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge, this summer. Discussions are currently in progress on the possibility of introducing a play scheme at Tolworth, in co-operation with other Government Departments in the area. Pump-priming funds have been available and continue to be available for such schemes.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Curry: Grade five.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Curry: The percentage of women in the following grades and grade equivalents as at 28 February 1990 is as follows:

Women as percentage of total staff in grade

Grade	Per cent.
7	12

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Curry: The report was prepared for the European Commission, which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents, who wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, have encouraged the development of a range of high quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career-break due to child care.

Mr. Curry: The Department is directly responsible for the recruitment of staff up to and including administrative officer and equivalent grades and the departmental grade of fishery officer. Selection panels are instructed on the need to guard against any form of discrimination. Selection criteria based, for example, on sex, are strictly forbidden as are criteria which might discriminate on age grounds against mature students or women returning to work after a career break. Age limits and qualification requirements for departmental grades which are recruited by the Civil Service Commission on our behalf are currently under review with the aim of ensuring that no unnecessary restrictions are placed on eligibility to apply to work in the Department.

A domestic absence reinstatement scheme, designed to give staff who resign for domestic reasons preferential consideration for reinstatement and encouragement to rejoin my Department when they are ready to return to work, was introduced in October 1988. Formal arrangements governing part-time working and job sharing were introduced in December 1989. These are intended to promote and expand the opportunities available in the Department for those who wish to work reduced hours.

Those responsible for assessing staff for promotion are regularly reminded of the need to assess staff who work reduced hours on exactly the same basis as all other staff, without regard to their status as part-timers or job-sharers. Officers recommended for promotion, who take maternity leave before they are posted to a higher grade, may have the validity of their promotion recommendations extended, normally for up to one year, to cover their period of absence.

Proposed new arrangements for promotion are currently under discussion with the Department's trade union side. These will remove seniority, which may indirectly discriminate against those who take career breaks, from promotion procedures. They will also ensure that staff approaching retiring age remain eligible for consideration for promotion until they reach the normal retiring age of the higher grade. I hope these new arrangements will be in place by 1 January 1991.

The Department also monitors recruitment competitions, promotions and allocations to duties with the aim of ensuring that there is no discrimination against women.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy of sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Curry: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service, which was published by the Cabinet Office (management and personnel office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures. In my Department a network of sexual harassment contact officers has been set up and guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff.

Three formal complaints have been reported centrally to personnel division in the past five years; all were investigated and disciplinary action was taken as appropriate.

Pin-ups

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Curry: Guidance has already been issued in my Department which makes it clear that sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and in particular requires managers to ensure that potentially offensive material is not displayed in the workplace.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the new way in which grant aid for coastal protection will be calculated, and indicate the rate at which such grants will be paid.

Mr. Curry: It is our intention that the revised method of calculating grant rates for coast protection schemes will parallel the existing one as far as possible. The rates at which grant may be paid will be the same as those that obtain at present (that is, up to a maximum of 70 per cent.). Details of the new method of calculation will be circulated to the coast protection authorities as quickly as possible.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the light of rising sea levels, he will review the provisions and working of the Coast Protection Act 1949; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Coast Protection Act 1949 allows maritime district councils to carry out such work as is necessary. The requirement for work will vary from location to location and will depend on local as well as global factors. A rise in mean sea level will have no direct implication for the workings of the Act. Nevertheless, the latest developments on climate change are closely monitored and careful consideration is given to the likely consequences for both coast protection and sea defence.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research projects on coastal protection and sea defences are being funded by his Ministry; and at what percentage rate.

Mr. Curry: the Department is spending £1·4 million in 1989-90 on a national programme of research on coastal protection and sea defence and a list of the projects being funded is given in the table. The Department discusses its national research programme with the National Rivers Authority and other relevant bodies.

Veal Crates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to seek to persuade the Council of Ministers to ban the use of veal crates in the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: This is already the policy which we are pursuing in discussions on Commission proposals for minimum standards for the welfare of intensively kept calves.

Global Warming

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to put forward proposals at the next European Council of Agriculture Ministers, on 5 and 6 March in Brussels, on initiatives that may be taken in the agriculture sector to mitigate the global warming greenhouse effect.

Mr. Gummer: The Agriculture Council on 5-6 March will concentrate on the Commission's farm price proposals. I shall ensure that the issue of global warming is taken into account in the United Kingdom's position in so far as it relates to matters on the Council agenda.

Live Animal Stock (Exports)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what investigations are carried out by his Department to ensure that live animal stock exported from the United Kingdom receive the correct exercise and food while in transit in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Mr. Maclean: The Department administers arrangements for resting, feeding and watering and inspecting farm animals prior to export from Great Britain for fattening or immediate slaughter. We seek assurances about the onward journey from exporters and their importers although other member states are responsible for applying EC measures on their territories. Enforcement of statutory controls covering welfare during journeys in this country is a matter for local authorities.

In addition, we have launched an initiative in the EC on animal welfare in which we have underlined the need for proper standards during transport.

Flood Damage

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help he will give to restore the damaged sea wall and to prevent further flood damage (a) along the north Devon coast and (b) to the towns of Ilfracombe and Lynmouth.

Mr. Curry: Apart from Ilfracombe and Lynmouth, we are aware of only minor damage to sea defence along the north Devon coast.

At Lynmouth the county council, as highway authority, is taking responsibility for the damage to the works protecting the coastal road. At Ilfracombe temporary works to repair the damage to a section of the sea wall are already in place, and the National Rivers Authority south-west region is designing a scheme to provide a permanent defence. We understand that the North Devon district council is currently dealing with another flooding problem in the town. Grant is available (at rates up to 70 per cent.) on works which are economically, technically and environmentally acceptable.

National Rivers Authority and local authority programmes of flood defence works may change as a result of recent storm events, so we have asked authorities for an early indication of these changes in order to assess the future work and funding implications. It is our intention to ensure that Government funding is sufficient to support a programme which takes full account of these needs.

Aphids

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposals put to his Department by the Agriculture and Food Research Council Institute at Rorthamsted on aphid research and aphid surveys.

Mr. Curry: A number of proposals have been put to my Department on aphid research and surveys. The importance of aphids as crop pests is fully appreciated but all research proposals have to be judged not only on their individual merits but according to the priority of Ministry requirements. The chief scientist has now given approval in principle for the funding of one proposal on aphid surveys linked to studies of climate change.

Cricket Bat Willows

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance his Department issues on pollarding or copsing cricket bat willows.

Mr. Curry: Guidance on growing cricket bat willows is given in Forestry Commission bulletin 17, "The Cultivation of the Cricket Bat Willow". This bulletin is out of print, but I am arranging for a photocopy to be placed in the Library of the House. Photocopies can also be bought from the Forestry Commission's library at Alice Holt Lodge, Farnham, Surrey, GU10 4LH.

Inshore Fishing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the question of the United Kingdom inshore fishing fleet.

Mr. Curry: The Minister and I are in regular contact with fisheries organisations about a wide range of issues affecting the inshore fleet.

EC Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent meetings he has had with other European Economic Community Agriculture Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Minister and I meet other European Community Agriculture Ministers frequently, both at meetings of the Council of Ministers and elsewhere.

EC Food Exports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the amount of food exported by the European Economic Community to the Soviet Union and eastern Europe; and what was the cost of the export rebates involved over the past 12 months.

Mr. Curry: For the main agricultural commodities, the table shows the most recent data available on the volume of exports. The cost of the export refunds involved could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Poultry

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the percentage value of the poultry siezed for slaughter under the Zoonoses Order 1989, paid as compensation to the poultry's owner.

Mr. Maclean: When a poultry flock in which the presence of salmonella has been confirmed is compulsorily slaughtered, compensation is paid in accordance with the requirements of the Animal Health Act 1981. The amount paid is based on the scale of values depending on the age of the birds and represents 60 per cent. of the value of a healthy flock.

Fisheries Research

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show (a) vessels based in Great Britain which are engaged in fisheries research, (b) the draught and tonnage of the vessels, (c) the type of fish covered by the research, (d) the number of full-time crew employed on each vessel, (e) the number of scientists employed in each vessel, (f) the number of other staff employed on the vessel, (g) the number of staff employed at the shore establishment and which directly support each vessel, (h) the port at which the vessel is based, (i) the sea area which is normally covered by each vessel and its extent in square miles, (j) the number of days spent at sea in each of the last three years and (k) the costs attributed to the work of each vessel in those three years or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 27 February 1990]: Two vessels, RV Cirolana and RV Corystes, are operated by my Department for fisheries research. RV Corystes entered service in April 1988.

The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the Natural Environment Research Council also operate fisheries reseach vessels.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will now increase the jurisdiction of industrial tribunals, so as to enable them to deal with claims for breaches of contracts of employment following dismissal.

Mr. Nicholls: We consulted widely on this issue last year. This showed overwhelming support for implementation. I have therefore decided that the necessary statutory instrument should be made as soon as practicable. This will mean that an employee making a complaint of unfair dismissal to an industrial tribunal will also be able to ask the tribunal to recover, for example, arrears of pay lost because he was dismissed without notice. At present separate proceedings have to be initiated in the civil courts to recover such damages.

I have also decided that both the conditions set out in section 131(3) of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 should be required to be satisfied before an industrial tribunal can consider a claim. I am sure that the fact that it will be possible to settle simultaneously those contractual disputes between an employer and employee arising from dismissal will be welcomed by both sides.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will bring forward legislation to extend the jurisdiction of industrial tribunals to enable them to determine claims for breach of contract arising from dismissals from employment.

Disabled People

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what account he is taking in his plans for training and enterprise councils of arrangements for training at residential and other specialist colleges for people with disabilities which are currently centrally funded by the Training Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The TECs will need to take full account of the need for residential and other specialist training provision for people with disabilities. It is important that TECs should have the responsibility for planning, delivering and accounting for all training for people under Training Agency programmes, including people with disabilities, through the full range of help available. They should be developing ways of delivering those pro grammes so that even people with quite severe disabilities can be trained for local jobs in an integrated setting. The TECs should be taking decisions on the funding and delivery of training with a clear appreciation of, and responsibility for, the cost effectiveness of different means at their disposal.

During 1990-91 and 1991-92 my Department will continue to fund centrally residential training for people with disabilities. Officials will work closely with the providers of training and TECs during that time to pilot possible ways in which TECs might become directly involved in decisions about the referral of suitable trainees and the funding of residential places. A decision on whether to devolve responsibility for referral and funding arrangements wholly to TECs would have to take full account of the need for continuity of provision in this important area, and of the particular circumstances of the providers and their client groups. No such decision will be taken until the pilot arrangements have been thoroughly evaluated.

Skill Centres

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, following the recent announcement on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency, he will make a statement on the future of those employment rehabilitation centres that are located on the same sites as skill centres.

Mr. Eggar: Arrangements will be made to ensure the continuation of employment rehabilitation services in localities currently served by employment rehabilitation centres. In most cases they will remain on existing sites for up to three years but in some areas it may be necessary to find alternative premises. The future role of the employment rehabilitation service is being considered in the context of the review of the Department's services for people with disabilities.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he plans to continue monitoring the number of trainees with disabilities receiving training at skill centres, following the Skills Training Agency's privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: I do not anticipate that the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency will have any immediate effect on the existing monitoring arrangements.

Industrial Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many employees there are in each industry or industrial sector which is represented by a non-statutory industrial training organisation:

(2) if he will list the number of people employed by each of the non-statutory industrial training organisations for which he has figures available;

(3) if he will publish a list of the existing non-statutory industrial training organisations;

(4) what information he has on (a) the number of training professionals employed by each non-statutory industrial training organisation as a ratio of the total number of employees in the industry or industrial sector which it covers and (b) how many full-time and part-time training professionals are employed by the Meat Industries Training Organisation;

(5) what information he has on how many non-statutory industrial training organisations represent (a) more than 50 per cent. of firms in their sector and (b) more than 50 per cent. of the employees in their sector; and which are the organisations concerned;

(6) what information he has on how many non-statutory industrial training organisations represent (a) more than 75 per cent. of firms in their sector and (b) more than 75 per cent. of the employees in their sector; and which are the organisations concerned.

Mr. Nicholls: The table lists all the organisations regarded as independent industry training organisations, together with the latest information available which is from the Institute of Manpower Studies report, "The Full Fact Finding Study of the NSTO System", produced in December 1987 for the former Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of people employed by each of the statutory industry training boards.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Industry training board	Number of employers
Clothing and allied products	126
Construction	1,311
Engineering	602
Hotel and catering	446
Offshore petroleum	65
Plastics processing	75
Road transport	470

The source of the information is the 1988-89 annual reports of the industry training boards except for the offshore petroleum figure which relates to the annual report for the year ending 31 December 1988.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will happen to the premises and other assets currently held on behalf of their industries by statutory industry training boards when non-statutory bodies assume responsibility for training in the sectors concerned.

Mr. Nicholls: Provisions in the Employment Act 1989 enable a statutory industry training board to transfer all or any of its assets to a successor organisation on trust to be used for charitable purposes which are related to training for employment.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which sectors of industry, previously covered by a statutory industrial training board, are no longer represented by non-statutory industrial training organisations.

Mr. Nicholls: All significant sectors formerly in scope to industry training boards have either their own independent industry training organisation or access to such an organisation.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances the DE Training Agency will take steps to recover payments of ET training allowances paid to people no longer entitled to them; in how many cases the DETA has taken such steps; how much has been recovered; whether there have been any prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is the normal practice to seek recovery in all cases where it is clear that a person has received a training allowance to which they are not entitled. Prosecution would be considered only where there was evidence of fraudulent intent and no prosecutions have taken place in cases of the kind referred to in the question. Information on numbers of cases in which recovery has been sought and the amounts involved is not held centrally.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) women and (b) men on employment training are married parents; and how many of these have (i) claimed and (ii) been granted child care payments.

Mr. Nicholls: Financial help with child care is available only to lone parents on employment training. At the end of December 1989 about 3 per cent. of all those on the programme were receiving child care payments. It is not known how many claims for child care allowances were made or met or how many trainees making these claims were either men or women or whether or not they were married.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) women and (b) men on employment training are single parents; and how many of these have (i) claimed and (ii) been granted child care payments.

Mr. Nicholls: At the end of December 1989 about 3 per cent. of all those on employment training were receiving child care payments. It is not known how many claims for child care allowances were made or met or how many trainees making these claims were either men or women. All trainees receiving child care payments are single parents.

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he proposes to improve employment training in the light of the establishment of training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will have the flexibility to make Employment Training even more responsive to the training needs of both individuals and employers within local labour markets. I am arranging for the TECs to enjoy:

- the freedom to decide arrangements for assessment and guidance leading to an agreed individual training programme for all entrants to ET;
- the freedom to decide how training should be designed;
- the freedom to determine how training providers are funded;
- the freedom to determine many of the terms and conditions for trainees;
- more freedom in the provision of ET to people unemployed for less than 6 months;
- the freedom to enable individuals to train for longer than the existing limit of 12 months (within an agreed budget).

The funding for TECs will reflect success in helping people into jobs, self-employment, further education or other full-time training. At least 10 per cent. of ET funding will be for such positive outcomes achieved by their trainees.

The arrangements for payment of training allowances will remain unchanged. These new flexibilities will enable TECs to be creative in designing attractive and effective training options, while building on the excellent experience of employment training to date.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the total numbers of special group entrants to employment training without being unemployed for six months for the categories (a) people with disabilities, (b) ex-offenders, (c) those seeking high technology shortage skills, (d) on enterprise training, (e) women returners, (f) ex-regulars, (g) inner-city residents in certain pilot areas and (h) lone parents between September 1988 and December 1989 for Great Britain.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 February 1990]: Information on ex-offenders, high technology shortage skills entrants and inner city residents in pilot areas in the special eligibility category could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Information for the other groups is given in the table.

Employment training special eligibility group entrants as a proportion of all entrants September 1988 to December 1989 (Estimated)

Group	Estimated proportion of all entrants Per cent.
Enterprise trainees	4·0
People with disabilities	3·0
Ex-regulars	[1]0·5
Women returners	3·0
Lone parents	2·0

Health and Safety Executive

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the effectiveness of the Health and Safety Executive's work.

Mr. Nicholls: The main responsibility for ensuring effectiveness lies with the Health and Safety Commission. In approving the commission's annual plan of work ministers have regard to effectiveness both of programmes and management systems.

Recent and current initiatives to improve effectiveness include:

(a) since 1982, all new regulations have been subject to cost-benefit analysis;

(b) a 1985 Report "Measuring the Effectiveness of HSE's Field Activities" brought together findings on various regulatory and enforcement activities. Since then a number of further studies have been conducted, and action to improve effectiveness taken.

(c) improving effectiveness is a primary objective of HSE's reorganisation, on a more integrated basis, of its field divisions from this April.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ensure that copies of the operating and business plans for training and enterprise councils are placed in the Library as soon as they are published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils will be required to publish a summary of their corporate and business plans. I shall arrange for these summaries to be placed in the Library as they become available.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the public funding in cash terms and real terms available for each training and enterprise council operative as from 1 April for the terminal year 1990-91, together with the public funding currently available to the Training Agency for 1989-90 for the area covered by each training and enterprise council.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's plans for expenditure on training and enterprise are set out in chapter 6 of the public expenditure White Paper (CM 1006). Budgets for individual TECs will be determined after the TEC's corporate and business plan has been approved and a contract signed. The great majority of TECs (and local enterprise companies in Scotland) are not planning to start operations until later in the financial year.

It is not generally possible to compare directly TEC budgets with those of Training Agency Offices. Over 100 TECs are being established, which compares with 57 area offices.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Nicholls: All general management courses provided by the Employment Department group include sessions on equal opportunities for women and people from ethnic minority groups and with disabilities. While no detailed figures are available I understand therefore that the great majority of senior regional and operational managers will have received training on equal opportunities issues.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Department group operates two care-parent schemes for pre-school age children at Bootle and Sheffield. We run holiday play schemes for children aged five years and over at Runcorn, Sheffield, London (two) and Coventry; with other Government Departments we run play schemes at Bootle, Edinburgh and London and we have places in other Government Department schemes at Glasgow and Liverpool. We hope to open four day nurseries this year at Bootle, Runcorn, Sheffield and Swindon. All parts of the group are actively pursuing initiatives to increase child care provision. The group provides support for this where it can be justified in value for money terms. Staff who wish to take advantage of play schemes and nurseries are required to contribute towards the running costs.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department's equal opportunities officer is a grade 6.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotiion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Department group is committed to a policy of equal opportunity in recruitment and promotion. A statement to this effect is included in all recruitment advertising and in all circulars notifying staff of promotion panels and inviting applications.

There are clear guidelines on the advertising of recruitment opportunities to ensure that they can be seen by all eligible job seekers from all parts of the community and to ensure that the advertisements do not impose potentially discriminatory criteria such as unnecessary age restrictions. In order to meet the needs of women returners, recruitment opportunities are, whenever practicable, advertised as suitable for part time workers. Staff involved in recruitment are trained in selection procedures to avoid unfair discrimination.

For promotion, all staff are considered on their merits as individuals regardless of sex, racial origin, disability and age. Where a minimum period of service is required this applies to all staff. For staff who have returned to work after a period of absence, service before and after the break may be aggregated.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Eggar: In the Employment Department group at 1 January 1990 women comprised 12 per cent. of staff at both grade seven and grade six level, 14 per cent. at grade five and 11 per cent. at grade three. There were no women at grades one, two and four.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report: "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom."

Mr. Nicholls: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents, where they wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, have encouraged the development of a range of high-quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women and men of the employed labour force have a length of service in employment of (a) less than two years and (b) less than five years; and what number and proportion of those employed for less than five years are part-time workers working (i) less than eight hours, (ii) less than 12 hours, (iii) less than 16 hours and (iv) less than 20 hours a week, giving the most recently available figures.

Mr. Nicholls: Estimates from the 1988 labour force survey, as requested, are shown in the table.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the rate of unemployment in each member state of the European Community at the latest available date.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 March 1990]: The information requested is available from the Library in the following publications: "Main Economic Indicators", published by OECD; and "Unemployment in the Community", published by Eurostat.

Equal Pay

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to amend the equal pay for work of equal value legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to amend the equal pay legislation. The Equal Opportunities Commission, which has a statutory duty to review the legislation, is currently doing so and any proposals for change which may emerge from the commission's review will be carefully considered, as will proposals put forward by any other interested bodies including those already made by the Confederation of British Industry.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list for each of the past 25 years the average pay for a woman as a proportion of that for a man.

Domestic Servants

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many domestic servants are (a) men and (b) women.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated from the 1988 labour force survey that in spring 1988 there were 20,000 men and 171,000 women in employment in domestic services in Great Britain.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department's policy is that sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is treated as a disciplinary offence. Guidance on our policy and on the reporting and handling of complaints is included in our personnel handbook which is available to all staff.

We have monitored this policy since 1 July 1985 and in the period from then to 31 December 1989 (the last date for which figures are available) 88 cases have been reported.

Appropriate action has been taken in all cases. Disciplinary penalties imposed have ranged from warnings to being employed in a lower grade.

Pin-ups

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department's policy is that sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is treated as a disciplinary offence. The guidance issued to staff gives examples of what might constitute sexual harassment. These include "displays or circulation of sexually offensive material, for example pin-ups".

My right hon. and learned Friend does not therefore consider that any further instructions are needed.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the expenditure on action for jobs television advertising in 1988-89 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Eggar: All of the expenditure on action for jobs television advertising in 1988-89 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

Radiation (Code of Practice)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many copies have been published of the draft approved code of practice , "Part 4 Dose Limitation —Restriction of Exposure: Additional Guidance on Regulation 6 of the Ionising Radiation Regulations," produced by the Health and Safety Commission; to whom this document has been distributed; by what date any comments should be sent to the Health and Safety Commission; and what response his Department is planning to make to the consultative document.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 7,000 copies were printed of the consultative document, published on 5 February 1990, containing the draft approved code of practice on restriction of exposure to ionising radiations. Copies were distributed to international organisations, professional bodies, government departments, employers' associations, representatives of workers, and local authorities. Copies were also placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Comments should be sent to the Health and Safety Commission by 30 April 1990.

My right hon. and learned Friend will await the advice of the Health and Safety Commission in the light of comments received on the consultative document.

Training

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to set up by no later than 31 December 1992 a comprehensive and effective framework of sector training organisations.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government welcome the continuing support by employers throughout most of industry and commerce for employer-led industry training organisations (ITOs). These bodies have the lead role in establishing occupational standards and monitoring key skill requirements in their sectors. There are currently some 117 industry training organisations, estimated to cover over 80 per cent. of the civilian working population. Employers in a number of other sectors are in the process of establishing their own arrangements. In recent years most ITOs have received financial support to help them develop their effectiveness, particularly in the areas of standard setting and future skill requirements.

The Government have welcomed the establishment of the voluntary National Council of Industry Training Organisations (NCITO) which includes in its aims the bringing of all such organisations up to the standard set by the best. The Training Agency continues to provide initial financial assistance to NCITO to develop a code of practice for ITOs and to draw up a database about their activities and services.

Homeworkers

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the statutory provisions that apply to the employment of homeworkers; and whether he has any plans to amend existing legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: The following legislation applies to homeworkers who are employees, in the same way as it does to other employees. There are no plans to amend it.

Equal Pay Act 1970
Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974
Sex Discrimination Act 1975
Employment Protection Act 1975
Race Relations Act 1976
Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978
Employment Acts 1980, 1982 and 1988
Trade Union Act 1984
Wages Act 1986[1]
All Health and Safety legislation[1]

[1] Part II of the Wages Act 1986 and all Health and Safety legislation applies to homeworkers, irrespective of their employment status.

Working Mothers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage women to work after they have given birth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Except where health and safety provisions set minimum time limits it must be a matter of personal choice for the woman concerned when and whether she goes to work or stays at home to look after her children.

TRANSPORT

Road Lighting

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he has undertaken any studies in the United Kingdom on the implementation of transitional lighting and the effect of it on accident rates at night;

(2) what research he is undertaking to assess the safety implications for a transitional lighting system to allow drivers to adjust from lit motorways to darkness.

Mr. Atkins: Studies in many countries, including the United Kingdom, have shown that the transition from bright sunlight conditions to those lighting conditions in a road tunnel is a problem because of the reduction in road surface luminance of about 50,000 candelas per square metre. On average, this transition lasts several seconds. Transitional lighting is therefore justified and provided.

The equivalent transition from lit to unlit motorway at night represents a reduction in luminance of just 2 candelas per square metre and is completed in about one second. The potential in these circumstances for any effect on accident rates is negligible. No research is therefore being undertaken into this aspect.

If my hon. Friend has specific evidence that he feels merits looking into, I will consider it.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the standard intensity of lighting on lit motorways, rural and urban roads.

Mr. Atkins: The standard average luminance of lighting on lit trunk roads in England is as follows:

	Candelas per square metre
Motorways	2·0
Dual carriageways and high speed roads	1·5
Other trunk roads	1·0

These standards are in accordance with the recommendations of the appropriate national and international standards bodies.

The standard of lighting installed on other roads is a matter for the highway authority concerned.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what technology is available to light sections of roads and motorways at different levels to allow people to adjust to lighting changes.

Mr. Atkins: Lighting technology is available, or can be readily adapted, to provide a range of road lighting levels. This can be achieved by altering the type of lamp, the electrical control system, the column height and the column spacing, or by a combination of these means.

Road Humps

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many local authorities are known to have installed speed restricting measures, such as road humps, in residential areas; and when his Department will have completed the revision of regulations aimed at the wider installation of road humps.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will lay before Parliament the revised road hump regulations.

Mr. Atkins: Road humps and other speed restricting measures are installed by local authorities at their own discretion. Consequently, no central records are kept. The appropriate use of road humps should make a significant contribution to the safety of local roads and we aim to bring the new regulations into force before Easter.

London Transport

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many (a) men and (b) women, have retrained as bus drivers since London Regional Transport has adopted its one-person operated buses policy;

(2) how many London Underground station staff have been employed by London Transport or London Regional Transport for each of the last 25 years;

(3) if he will list the number of guards employed by London Transport or London Regional Transport for each of the last 25 years;

(4) if he will list the numbers of (a) men and (b) women employed by London Transport/London Regional Transport as bus drivers for each of the last 25 years;

(5) if he will list the numbers of conductors employed by London Transport or London Regional Transport on buses for each of the last 25 years; and how many of these were women.

Mr. Portillo: These are matters which fall within the day-to-day management responsibility of London Regional Tranport and its operating subsidiaries, London Underground Limited and London Buses Limited.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Atkins: The department is currently conducting a comprehensive survey of child care needs in London. The possibilities for providing child care facilities outside London are also being investigated. Pre-school child care facilities are planned for the driver and vehicle licensing centre in Swansea. Holiday playschools are also made available to the Department's staff in both Swansea and London. The Department provides accommodation for all these schemes. Future plans will be considered in the light of current surveys.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom."

Mr. Atkins: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues has encouraged the development of a range of high-quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Atkins: Most general management courses include coverage of issues involving equal opportunities for women as part of general sessions on equal opportunities and one course, "Women in Management", includes a specific session on equal opportunites for women. There is no record of the number of grade 6, and above, officers who have recieved training on equal opportunities for women.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Atkins: Grade five.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career-break due to child care.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has a policy of fair and open competition in recruitment and promotion. Women are encouraged to return to work by arrangements for reinstatement and by the availability of part-time working and job sharing. There are few upper age limits for recruitment. The criterion is that new entrants must be able to give effective service before retirement.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Atkins: The proportions are as follows:

	Per cent.
Grade 7	6
Grade 6	2
Grade 5	9
Grade 4	None
Grade 3	5
Grades 1 and 2	None

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Atkins: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office management and personnel office in 1984. The Department has made it clear to all staff that sexual harassment at work will not be tolerated and will be dealt with as a disciplinary measure through the Department's complaints procedures. Guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff. Complaints have been recorded since mid-1986. Since then there have been seven formal complaints. It is not the Department's practice to publish disciplinary action taken in individual cases.

Pin-ups

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all of his Departmental premises.

Mr. Atkins: Instructions have been issued not to display such material if it offends.

A4, West London

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the best estimates of current westbound peak pm flows on the A4 before and after the Hogarth roundabout at Chiswick; and what projections have been taken into account in the appraisal of option 12 of the west London assessment study.

Mr. Atkins: A count of westbound traffic on the A4 east and west of Hogarth roundabout was taken by consultants in May 1989. This revealed flows of approximately 5,000 and 4,500 respectively in the afternoon peak hour.

Option 12 of the west London assessment study has been assessed using data from the London transportation studies model which only provides information for the morning peak. Traffic is expected to increase as a result of economic growth, population changes, etc. The combined effect of these changes and option 12 is forecast to be a reduction of 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. respectively.

M4/A4 Corridor

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the M4/A4 corridor study was initiated; what are the terms of reference; which consultants are involved; when the report is expected; and if it will be published.

Mr. Atkins: The study was initiated in June 1988. It is being carried out on the Department's behalf by Howarth Humphreys and Partners Ltd. They have been asked to develop a consistent strategy for management of the motorway and trunk road network with the objective of improving the reliability of journey times between central London and Heathrow. The consultants have made some initial proposals which are being considered by the Department. Local highway authorities and the BAA are being consulted. The final report is expected later this year and will be published.

Buses (Access)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the new buses which meet the specifications of floor level and related matters for people with disabilities and elderly people; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: A comprehensive list is not available.

The majority of new buses now produced in the United Kingdom are fitted, at the request of operators or local authorities, with some or all of the features recommended by the Disabled Persons Transort Advisory Committee (DPTAC) in their "Recommended Specification for Vehicles Used To Operate Local Services".

Work is now in hand to develop European standards for low floor buses which will be accessible to wheelchair users.

Coal Imports

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of coal imported through the port of Sunderland for each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: HM Customs and Excise figures for imports of coal, coke and briquettes at Sunderland, which include imports at Seaham, are given in the table.

Anti-lock Braking

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for the introduction of regulations governing the fitting of anti-lock braking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Draft regulations published today introduce the anti-lock braking requirements set by European Community directive 88/194 for certain types of heavy goods vehicles, including trailers, and motorway and inter-urban coaches. The Community proposals are for mandatory anti-lock on new vehicles in the following categories:

(a) towing vehicles over 16 tonnes and trailers over 10 tonnes gross weight; and

(b) touring coaches and intercity buses over 12 tonnes gross weight.

The draft regulations apply to new trailers manufactured on or after 1 October 1991 and new motor vehicles first used on or after 1 April 1992.

Anti-lock increases braking stability and reduces jack-knifing in slippery road conditions.

A590

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the A590 trunk road between Levens Bridge and Lindale has recently been coned off for a length of about four miles, preventing any overtaking.

Mr. Atkins: For safety reasons. Although the first phase of resurfacing is limited to the dual carriageway sections, we need to prevent overtaking and excessive speeds on the intervening single carriageway. This reduces the risk of accidents at and approaching the working areas. The resurfacing will shortly transfer to the single carriageway. We shall then start central reserve safety fencing installation on the dual carriageways.

Milford Haven

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received the report of the inspector appointed to examine the application by Cmaine and other fishing vessel companies operating from Milford Haven for registration; and when he expects to reach a decision on their applications.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have not yet received the inspector's report. I shall reach a decision on the applications for registration as soon as possible after I have received the report.

Rail Subsidies (West Germany)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Christchurch of 12 February, Official Report, column 9, if he will place in the Library any documentation he has relating to the West German Government's belief that their subsidies to their railway system are outrageous.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 28 February 1990]: I have nothing to add to my right hon. Friend's previous answer.

Commuter Trains

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last travelled officially on a rush hour commuter train; and what assessment he made of the level of service offered and the conditions provided for commuters.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 28 February 1990]: The last such journey undertaken by my right hon. Friend was on the Central line on 18 January. The service was quick and on time, but the train was very crowded. London Underground's £720 million programme of investment will increase the peak capacity of this line by 16 per cent., to the considerable benefit of those who use it regularly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Benefits

5. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people depend entirely on state benefits for their income.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on the number of people depending entirely on state benefits is not available. In 1987, the latest year for which an estimate is available, social security contributed either in whole or in part to the incomes or family incomes of around 38 million people.

Child Benefit

8. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review his decision not to uprate child benefit by the change in the retail prices index in April 1990.

29. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review his decision not to uprate child benefit by the retail prices index change in April.

30. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review his decision not to uprate child benefit by the change in the retail prices index in April.

Mr. Newton: No.

12. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to means-test child benefit.

52. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to means-test child benefit.

64. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to means-test child benefit.

Mr. Newton: No.

22. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in the current financial year of increasing child benefit to the same level in real terms as prevailed in 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: About £540 million net.

31. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future uprating of child benefit.

32. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future uprating of child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As the law requires, the rate of child benefit will continue to be reviewed each year as part of the annual review of social security benefit rates, and decisions will be made in the light of circumstances at the time.

42. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up rate for child benefit.

68. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up rate for child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Around 98 per cent.

45. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of uprating child benefit to bring it to the same level in real terms as it stood at in 1984.

59. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of uprating child benefit to bring it to the same level in real terms as it stood at in 1984.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) earlier today.

73. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the present arrangements for paying child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Child benefit is normally paid to mothers every four weeks through their bank or building society account or four-weekly or weekly by order book.

Benefit Deductions

10. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of claimants have deductions from their benefit at source.

57. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of claimants have deductions from their benefit at source.

72. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of claimants have deductions from their benefit at source.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Just under 10 per cent. of income support recipients have one or more deductions from their benefit. Information on deductions from other social security benefits is not held centrally.

Pension Schemes

16. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to extend self-administration of pension schemes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I presume my hon. Friend is referring to our announcement of the exemption of certain small self-administered schemes from our proposals to restrict pension schemes from engaging in employer-related investments. I announced during the Committee stage of the Social Security Bill last week that, in view of recent evidence of an increase in the practice, the Government have decided to commission a report before deciding what precise restrictions shall be introduced in regulations.

Community Charge Rebates

19. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the rebate system for the community charge; and how many people he expects to take advantage of it.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The community charge benefit scheme to be introduced in April this year is significantly more generous than the old rate rebates system. We estimate that 9·75 million chargepayers will be helped in 1990-91, at a cost of £1·75 billion.

71. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the cost of advertising and explaining the community charge rebate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Community charge benefit is being advertised by the Department of Social Security, the Department of the Environment, the Welsh Office and Scottish Office and by local authorities. The Department of Social Security will shortly publish an information leaflet and the Department of the Environment has also published a series of leaflets on rebates and reductions. The total cost of these leaflets will be over £300,000. The Department of the Environment's advertising campaign covering newspapers, magazines, television and radio ran from January to February at a cost of £4 million. Local authorities are responsible for the day-to-day administration of community charge benefit, and may advertise community charge benefit in ways that they consider to be suitable. It is not possible to estimate their costs.

Low-income Families

20. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much will be spent on benefits for children in low-income families, excluding child benefit, in the next financial year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Our planned expenditure on provision for families in 1990-91, excluding child benefit, is nearly £5·4 billion. With the addition of child benefit expenditure of £4·6 billion, this makes a total provision for the family of nearly £10 billion.

58. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much will be spent on benefits for children in low-income families in the next financial year, excluding child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Planned expenditure on provision for families in 1990-91, excluding child benefit, is £5,359 million. This includes the extra help to low income families with children which since April 1988 has amounted to £350 million in real terms. The benefits included in this total are one-parent benefit, family credit, maternity benefit and statutory maternity pay, and income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit paid to lone parents and to people looking after elderly parents.

Community Care Grants

21. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will revise directive 29 to allow claimants for community care grants to be eligible for funds to pay deposits for rented housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no current plans to do so, but we will continue to monitor the situation carefully.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many community care grants applications by month since January 1989 have been (a) met in full, (b) met in part, (c) dealt with by a combination of grant and loan, (d) met with a loan only and (e) refused.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 19 January at column 487.

Social Fund

23. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review social fund appeals.

42. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review social fund appeals.

53. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review the operation of social fund appeals.

Mr. Scott: No. We are satisfied that the appeals system for the regulated part of the social fund, that is, funeral, maternity and cold weather payments, is working well.

24. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many, and what percentage, of social fund loans have gone to pensioners.

Mr. Scott: People aged 60 and over received 21,000 budgeting loans and 3,600 crisis loans in the period April 1989 to January 1990. This represents 4·5 and 0·1 per cent. respectively of loans awarded. In addition, community care grants were awarded in 8,300 cases where a loan had been applied for.

28. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the social fund refusal rate for the latest available month.

38. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the social fund refusal rate for the latest available month.

44. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the social fund refusal rate for the latest available month.

Mr. Scott: Details of the individual refusal rates for the three types of payment are in the Library. The overall refusal rate can be derived from the numbers of applications decided and awards made which are also available in the Library.

50. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to improve the access of people on invalidity benefit to social fund community care grants.

62. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to improve the access of people on invalidity benefit to social fund community care grants.

65. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to improve the access of people on invalidity benefit to social fund community care grants.

Mr. Scott: No. Like single payments, where help could only be given to people entitled to supplementary benefit, social fund community care grants are intended for those in receipt of income support.

67. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review local social fund budgets.

Mr. Scott: As a result of our close monitoring of the social fund, I recently announced that an extra £3 million had been made available this year for 106 offices coming under pressure from an increase in demand. We are currently considering social fund allocations to individual offices for 1990-91 and will make an announcement in due course.

74. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase the payment from the social fund in the event of severe weather.

Mr. Scott: No. We believe that £5 is a reasonable amount to pay towards the extra expenses for heating incurred in each week of very cold weather, given that ordinary heating costs are an element in regular weekly benefit.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to ensure that the social fund loans budget become self-financing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 29 January at column 35.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West of 26 February, (Official Report, column 589, on the High Court judgment on the social fund, if he will send a copy of the revised guidance to the honourable Member for Oldham, West at the same time as it is placed in the Library.

Mr. Scott: Yes.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish the monthly anticipated expenditure profile for the social fund for the year 1990-91;

(2) when he expects to announce the local office allocations for the social fund for the year 1990-91;

(3) when he will announce the formula on which local office allocations for the social fund for 1990-91 will be based.

Mr. Scott An announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will be revising the cash limits for the social fund announced for 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 22 February 1990 at column 894.

Departmental Service

25. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to improve his Department's service to the public.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since the Government reforms were introduced in 1988, the social security system has become simpler for claimants to understand and easier for staff to operate. As a result there have been very real all-round improvements in standards of service to the public. In particular the average 1989-90 times taken to clear income support claims and callers have both improved by 24 per cent. when compared with pre-reforms' performance.

I am aware, however, that there is still room for further improvement, particularly in certain inner cities. We are tackling this by relocating some work, which requires no face-to-face contact, away from London to areas where we have fewer problems over staff recruitment and retention. In addition, between now and 1991, we expect our programme to computerise social security operations in all local offices to make a major impact on the speed and accuracy of the service they provide.

Pensioners (Income)

26. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the most recent figure for pensioners whose incomes fall in the lowest quintile of national income distribution.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest available figures on the proportion of pensioners whose incomes fall in the lowest fifth of national income distribution.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that in 1979, a total of 38 per cent. of pensioners were in the bottom quintile of national income distribution, and in 1987 the proportion had improved to 24 per cent.

33. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the increase in pensioners' average net incomes since 1979.

39. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the increase in pensioners' average net incomes since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent figures he has for the change in pensioners' incomes from savings since 1979.

55. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent figures he has for the increases in pensioners' average net incomes since 1979.

63. Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much pensioners' average net incomes have increased since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that between 1979 and 1987 average pensioners' total net income increased by over 31 per cent. in real terms. The figures also show that, over the same period, income pensioners receive from their savings more than doubled in real terms.

Disabled People

27. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a further statement on his proposals to extend help with the extra costs of disability to less severely disabled people of working age and below.

Mr. Scott: "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cm. 917) which we laid before Parliament on 10 January includes a proposal to introduce a new disability allowance in April 1992 for people of working age and below. The new benefit will incorporate the existing payments made through attendance allowance and mobility allowance within a common structure for administration and adjudication and introduce new lower rate payments for people with moderate-to-severe disabilities who have care and mobility needs. The disability allowance will have two separate components: a care component paid at three different levels, and a mobility component paid at two levels. We estimate that about 850,000 people will receive the mobility component of the disability allowance, including 150,000 who do not qualify for help through mobility allowance. We estimate some 540,000 will receive the care component, including 140,000 who do not qualify for attendance allowance.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his policy towards the HELIOS programme of the European Community for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: Information on the steps the Government are taking to ensure that the United Kingdom plays a full and active role in the HELIOS programme was given in my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 20 December 1989 at Column 302. I opened the conference, which was well attended, to publicise the HELIOS programme on 9 February.

43. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent estimate he has made of how many people will gain from the disability package set out in "The Way Ahead".

47. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will benefit from the proposals set out in "The Way Ahead".

Mr. Scott: We estimate that some 850,000 disabled people and carers will gain from the proposals set out in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People".

46. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a further statement on his plans for help to those who are less severely disabled and of working age and below.

Mr. Scott: The proposals set out in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cm. 917) include a number of measures to help those who are less severely disabled and of working age and below. In particular, the new disability allowance for people of working age and below will extend help with the extra costs of being disabled; the new disability employment credit will make it easier for disabled people to take up jobs; and there will be an increase of up to £10 a week in severe disablement allowance for those disabled early in life. These proposals are in addition to the package of 10 measures announced last October. These include improving the help provided by income support and housing benefit for the least well off who are disabled by increasing the disability premium for adults by £1·70 for a single person and £2·60 for a couple; helping families with disabled children by raising the disabled child's premium from £6·50 to £15·40; and helping carers by introducing a carer's premium for those receiving invalid care allowance. In addition, mobility allowance will be extended to people who are both deaf and blind, attendance allowance will be extended to children under two, and the six-month waiting period for attendance allowance will be abolished for terminally ill people. We are also improving incentives to rehabilitation for employment by increasing by £6·50 the therapeutic earnings limit in invalidity benefit (IVB) and severe disablement allowance (SDA), and enabling people receiving IVB and SDA to keep their benefit when they go on an employment rehabilitation course.

48. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will benefit from new measures to help disabled people who do not qualify for attendance allowance or mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) on 5 February at column 519.

Housing Benefit

34. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to increase housing benefit in real terms in the next financial year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The uprating of housing benefit and community charge benefit personal allowances and premiums takes effect in April 1990. Certain premiums are being increased above the amount required to maintain their value in real terms: these are the family premium, the disabled child premium and the lone parent premium. In October the lone parent's earnings disregard is to increase from £15 to £25, and a carer's premium is being introduced.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish for each local authority area in Northamptonshire, the number of people presently receiving housing benefit and income support together with housing benefit; and what are the costs involved.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table.

Housing Benefit: Estimated recipients and benefit expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of households and persons in the London borough of Lambeth claiming housing benefit and rate relief in 1988 and in 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information about the number of households or persons claiming housing benefit is not available. However, the estimated number of households receiving housing benefit is in the table.

Assistance with rent only	1,538	1,492

Glasgow Office

35. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the working of the Glasgow social security centre; and what further plans he has to extend benefit-processing work away from south-east England.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The income support work of Ealing, Southall and Acton offices is being processed at the Glasgow social security centre. Notting Hill began transfer of work on 12 February. Monitoring and evaluation of performance at Glasgow indicates that claims are being processed faster and more accurately.

There are currently no plans to extend further benefit processing work away from south-east England beyond the 21 London offices already identified for relocation.

Disability Benefits

36. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from disablement organisations about disability benefits.

Mr. Scott: We have received comments on the OPCS surveys of disability and our proposals in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cm. 917) from 70 organisations of and for disabled people and from a large number of individual people with disabilities. The Social Security Advisory Committee have also written to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State welcoming our proposals as a significant improvement to the system of benefits for disabled people. We shall continue to take into account the views of interested organisations and individuals in the course of further work on our proposals for change, in particular in our detailed work on the new disability allowance and the disability employment credit.

Community Care

37. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what views he sought from individuals and organisations involved in caring for mentally ill, disabled or elderly relatives at home as part of the review of benefits being undertaken by his Department.

Mr. Scott: The Government encouraged comments on the findings of the major surveys of disability carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys between 1985 and 1988; and our proposals for improving social security help for disabled people and carers have been made in the light of the views and comments of interested organisations. I have sent a copy of "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cm. 917) to a number of organisations, including the National Council for Carers, inviting their comments, and on 27 February my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of "Caring Costs", a coalition of over 20 voluntary organisations representing carers. We shall continue to take into account the views of interested organisations and individuals in the course of our detailed work on the proposals.

Income Support

40. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent discussions he has had on the level of income support payable to residents of private and voluntary residential and nursing homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have had meetings with a variety of interested organisations and individuals.

69. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has received any recent representations that able-bodied unemployed young people under 18 years refusing to take training should be paid income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have received no such representations. There is no reason why able-bodied 16 or 17-year-olds should not find work or a YTS place if they do not wish to continue their studies. If these young people refuse to take advantage of the opportunities available to them there is no justification for them to have recourse to the social security system.

However able-bodied young people who can go onto YTS but cannot live at home, for example because they have no home, would be at risk of physical or sexual abuse or are estranged from their families, can claim income support during the same period as the child benefit extension period, provided they are seeking a job or YTS place.

War Pensions

49. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent contact social security Ministers have had with representatives of war pensions interest groups.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My noble Friend Lord Henley, who has special responsibility for war pensions, regularly meets representatives of war pensioners and war widows to discuss matters of concern.

In the last six months he has chaired the central advisory committee on war pensions and met representatives of war pensions committes in three regions. He also opened the war pensioners' annual national homecraft and art exhibition. He has received deputations from the Royal British Legion and the War Widows Association of Great Britain. He attended remembrance day ceremonies at the Cenotaph and the Not Forgotten Association's Christmas party for war disabled pensioners. In addition he has visited the headquarters of the Royal British Legion and its village at Maidstone and answered letters on a variety of topics.

Family Incomes

54. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children live in families on, or within 40 per cent. above, the appropriate benefit level for their circumstances.

61. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children live in families with income on, or within 40 per cent. above, the appropriate benefit level for their circumstances.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) earlier today.

60. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people live in families with incomes which are on, or within 40 per cent. above, the appropriate benefit level for their circumstances.

66. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people live in families with incomes which are on, or within 40 per cent. above, the appropriate benefit level for their circumstances.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North West (Mr. Banks) earlier today.

Family Credit

56. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of claimants entitled to family credit took up their entitlement in the last quarter of 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: During the last quarter of 1989 almost 244,000 claims for family credit were received, and in the same period 150,000 awards were made. Information about the caseload during that period is not yet complete, and estimates of the total number of families eligible for family credit at that time will be possible only when information becomes available from the 1989 family expenditure survey.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham on 17 January, Official Report, columns 284-86, what is the Government's policy on the relativity between family credit ceilings and (a) inflation and (b) average earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Social security benefits, generally, are increased by reference to the movement in prices rather than earnings. The family credit ceilings derive from the level of the family credit rates, and those rates are reviewed each year in the light of the movement in retail prices excluding housing costs. In fact most of the increases in the family credit rates at the 1989 uprating and again at the 1990 uprating next month represent significantly more than that, as shown in the table.

	1989 Uprating per cent.	1990 Uprating per cent
Increase in RPI (excluding housing costs)	4·7	5·2
Actual Increase in Family Credit rates
Adult Credit	4·7	8·2
Child Credits
aged under 11	21·7	13·0
age 11-15	13·2	9·7
age 16-17	11·2	8·7
age 18	9·1	7·7

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received regarding the take-up of family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The take-up of family credit has been mentioned, in both Houses, during exchanges on the forthcoming increases in social security benefits, but otherwise few representations have been received recently.

Invalid Care Allowance

70. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in receipt of the invalid care allowance in the area covered by the Dod street Department of Social Security office in Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Scott: At 5 February 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of people in receipt of invalid care allowance in the area covered by the Department's office in Dod street was 146.

National Insurance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women and men earned below the national insurance threshold in each of the last 15 years; and how many earned over it.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table gives the numbers who paid employees' class 1 national insurance contributions at some time during the years from April 1975, when earnings related contributions with a lower earnings limit were first introduced, until 1986-87 which is the latest year for which final figures are available. The fact that some class 1 contributions were paid means that the person concerned must have had earnings which reached the lower earnings limit on at least one occasion during the year.

Year	Weekly lower earnings limit	Number who paid Class 1 national insurance contributions (thousands)
	£	Women	Men
1975-76	11·00	9,176	14,534
1976-77	13·00	9,325	14,808
1977-78	15·00	9,412	14,793
1978-79	17·50	9,412	14,729
1979-80	19·50	9,646	14,777
1980-81	23·00	9,267	14,259
1981-82	27·00	8,935	13,649
1982-83	29·50	8,793	13,288
1983-84	32·50	8,744	13,102
1984-85	34·00	8,885	12,968
1985-86	35·50	9,156	13,016
1986-87	38·00	9,316	12,987

The figures are for contributions paid in the United Kingdom except for 1975-76 which refer to Great Britain only.

I regret that detailed information on the numbers of employees earning less than the various lower earnings limits over the above period is not available. However, for the years 1984-85 onwards it is estimated that in any week about 2·75 million people earned below the lower earnings limit of which about a quarter were men. Up to 0·5 million of these people would be only temporarily below the lower earnings limit by virtue of a reduction in their normal earnings for example due to sickness.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham on 12 December 1989, Official Report, column 584, what is the reason for the £3·48 fall in the real weekly value of national insurance child dependency addition plus child benefit for widowed mothers between 1979 and 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Child benefit legislation specifically provides for the rate of child benefit to be taken into account when determining the levels of child dependency increase payable with national insurance benefits. The method of doing this is to calculate what the child dependency increase would be if the general uprating percentage were applied, and then to deduct any cash increase in child benefit. It applies to all child dependency increases not only those payable with widowed mothers allowance.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out in a table the national insurance contribution liability of (a) contracted-in employees through class 1, (b) contracted-out employees through class 1, (c) self-employed people through class 2 contributions, (d) self-employed people through class 4 contributions, showing separately the total effects at tax relief available on class 4, the amount due in the year, and the weekly equivalent for the latest available year for a single person earning, and assuming their income remains constant throughout the year, (i) quarter average male earnings, (ii) half average male earnings, (iii) average male earnings, (iv) one and a half average male earnings, (v) two times average male earnings, (vi) five times average male earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table shows class 1, 2 and 4 liability for 1989-90 under the headings requested. With the exception of the position when earnings attract tax at the 40 per cent. rate, the contributions shown have been calculated by reference to the average earnings of all male employees as at April 1989 as given in "Social Security Statistics 1989". The same average has been used for both class 1 and class 2-4 calculations.

Widowers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the support his Department offers to widowers of working age with young families in the immediate bereavement period and later.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are a wide range of social security benefits available to widowers of working age with young families. In addition to child benefit and one-parent benefit many widowers continue in employment in the period after bereavement and depending on their level of income can receive family credit and housing benefit. Widowers who are not employed can, depending on their circumstances, receive income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Sick Pay

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what considerations underlie the decision not to pay statutory sick pay and sickness benefit for the first three days of any absence from work due to illness.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No payment for the first three days of absence from work due to illness has been made since 1971. We consider that a person's own resources should normally be sufficient to cover the first three days of illness. But where this is not so, income support is available as appropriate. If a period of entitlement to sickness benefit or statutory sick pay occurs not more than eight weeks after a previous such period has ended and the earlier spell lasted for at least four days, then payment is made from the first day of incapacity of the second or subsequent spell.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend the date at which changed arrangements were introduced in regard to the compensation of claimants suffering from the vibration white finger condition.

Mr. Scott: No.

Mr. Charles Haggarty

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, if he will take steps to provide Mr. Charles Haggarty of Marloch avenue, Port Glasgow, with an ex-gratia payment pending the revision of guidance to adjudication officers following the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of McKiernon v. Secretary of State for Social Services.

Mr. Scott: No. We are still considering the full implications of the judgment in the case of McKiernon. The chief adjudication officer has still to issue guidance on cases which have been disallowed under regulation 25 of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries) (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations since the date of that judgment.

Travelling Expenses

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for travelling expenses to enable claimants to visit relatives in hospital were granted and how many refused between May 1989 and November 1989.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 29 January at column 34.

Area Computer Centres

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date and where, the invitations to tender to run the area computer centres at (a) Norcross, Lancashire and (b) Livingston were published.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not the practice to publish invitations to tender for service contracts such as those for the area computer centres at (a) Norcross, Lancashire and (b) Livingston.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the additional amounts families living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation are paying from their weekly benefit to pay for heating, hot water, breakfasts and other charges.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Families living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation are able to claim housing benefit to help towards accommodation charges and income support to help towards other expenses. Charges for accommodation and other services will vary in individual cases.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will reply to a letter from Field Lane homeless families centre of 22 September 1989 on behalf of organisations working with homeless families in London concerning families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation and changes in benefit.

Mr. Newton: I have replied today.

Blind People

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met representatives of the Royal National Institute for the Blind and other blind people's organisations; and whether he discussed the White Paper "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People".

Mr. Scott: On 13 December 1989 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met representatives of the Disability Benefits Consortium which includes the Royal National Institute for the Blind and which represents other blind people's organisations. We shall soon be meeting the Disability Benefits Consortium again to listen to its views on the Command Paper "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People". I will also separately be meeting representatives of the National Federation of the Blind and Disabled of the United Kingdom.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of claims paid, the average length and total cost of income support paid to students in each region and in Great Britain during the summer vacation of 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table.

Region	Number of claims	Average length weeks	Benefit cost £
North East	25,656	6·15	4,701,900
London North	12,503	4·97	2,125,366

Midlands	21,593	5·91	3,729,968

Scotland	26,560	7·34	4,824,092
London South	10,170	5·71	1,955,010
Totals	135,163	6 weeks	25,138,798

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of claims paid, the average length, and total cost of housing benefit paid to students in each region and in Great Britain during the summer vacation of 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is not available in the form requested. However, management information returns for May 1988 show that there were 78,000 housing benefit claims from students current at that time. The average amount of housing benefit in payment was £7·80.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of claims paid, the average length, and total cost of unemployment benefit paid to students in each region and in Great Britain during the summer vacation of 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received on the level of charges in private residential homes.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the level of benefits paid to people in residential nursing homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) earlier today.

DEFENCE

Army Housing (New Forest)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will review his policy on selling Army housing in the New Forest district council area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Surplus Army quarters suitable for sale will be disposed of as expeditiously as possible by the most appropriate method.

Aldermaston

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if contractorisation at AWE Aldermaston and Burghfield will apply to Trident warhead component production and assembly.

Mr. Neubert: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House on 5 December 1989, Vol. 163, column 165, the Government plan to introduce full contractorisation of the Atomic Weapons Establishment in its entirety, including warhead component production and assembly.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes in working practices are being considered at AWE Aldermaston, in the light of the Gardener report; and whether they will have an effect on the production schedule of the Trident missile warhead.

Mr. Neubert: Within AWE, radiation exposures continue to be authorised only on the basis that they are justified, comply with statutory limits and are as low as reasonably practicable. In 1988, the average whole body occupational exposure for radiation workers at AWE was 0·7 milliSieverts. The general public in the United Kingdom receives typically 2 mSv per year from natural and background sources. Trident warhead production remains on schedule to meet the in-service date of the mid-1990s.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of staff turnover, as a percentage, at AWE Aldermaston in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Neubert: Intake and outflow of staff at the Atomic Weapons Establishment have been approximately equal at about 800 over the 12-month period to 1 February 1990. To express this as a percentage would reveal total AWE staff numbers, which would be undesirable on security grounds.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the effect on the cost of the Trident production programme of contractorisation at AWE Aldermaston and Burghfield.

Mr. Neubert: The cost of introducing full contractor operation of the Atomic Weapons Establishment will be determined by competition. In the longer term, this cost should be offset by increased efficiency and improved utilisation of resources. It is too early to say how any net changes in costs would be attributed to individual programmes.

"Programme for Promoting Nuclear Non Proliferation"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his departmental library receives the newsbrief from the "Programme For Promoting Nuclear Non Proliferation".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he chemical warfare defence establishment at Porton Down has offered any technological or scientific assistance to the United States Department of Defence to destroy the United States stockpile of chemical weapon agents and nerve gases.

Mr. Neubert: As we have made abundantly clear, the United Kingdom does not possess, produce or seek to acquire any chemical or biological weapons; we abandoned our possession and production of such weapons in the late 1950s. The work carried out at the chemical defence establishment, Porton Down, is totally oriented towards protective measures; there is absolutely no offensive intent.

The United Kingdom, through the chemical defence establishment, has collaborated over many years with the United States and our other NATO allies on approaches to the safe destruction of chemical agents and weapons, and we fully expect this collaboration and sharing of techniques to continue, as an agreement on a global ban on chemical weapons is one of NATO's arms control priorities.

Princess Mary's RAF Hospital

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Princess Mary's Royal Air Force hospital, Buckinghamshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is currently undertaking a study into the number and location of service hospitals required in the United Kingdom. The outcome of this review will be known later this year.

RAF Pilots (Health)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the frequency of tests for heart conditions for Royal Air Force pilots.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All RAF aircrew are given an electrocardiogram test (ECG) on entry and thereafter, as a routine matter, an annual medical examination. Aircrew aged between 25 and 30 years old are given an ECG every five years; those aged over 30 every two years and those aged over 40 annually. Additionally, aircrew are given a chest X-ray on entry, which is repeated when they are 50 years of age. There are also annual blood tests.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the number of Royal Air Force aircraft crashes which were attributed to pilot illness during the last 20 years.

Mr. Neubert: Since 1 January 1970 there have been three RAF aircraft accidents in which the aircraft crashed and which could be attributed to pilot illness.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Neubert: Equal opportunities is featured on seven management training courses covering issues such as recruitment, personnel management, staff appraisal and selection interviewing. To establish what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters have received such training would involve a disproportionate amount of time and effort.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Neubert: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents, who wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, have encouraged the development of a range of high-quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made in the roles played by women in each of the armed forces in the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the last decade the role of women in all three services has expanded considerably. Members of the WRNS, WRAC and WRAF can now be armed, for defensive purposes.

I recently announced the introduction of sea service for members of the WRNS. We have also widened the opportunities for employment of members of the WRAC to include all posts except those which would deploy into forward areas in war, and women are now more closely integrated into the corps and regiments that employ them. In the RAF, women may now serve as aircrew in all capacities except those which have a direct combat role.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child-care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Neubert: We are planning to open nurseries for the children of MOD civil servants in central London and at the Royal Aerospace Establishment, Farnborough.

Consideration is being given to running holiday play schemes in other parts of the country and the MOD has participated in the Westminster holiday play scheme.

MOD units outside London are being encouraged to consider provision of suitable child-care for their area and we are currently surveying staff to determine demand for a ring of Civil Service nurseries around London for the children of civil servants who work on the periphery of or commute into London.

Costs will be met by combination of departmental subsidy and charges to parents, the levels of which are yet to be determined.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what duties, in each of the armed forces, women are currently prohibited from carrying out.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Decisions taken over the last year will lead to a considerable expansion in the types of employment open to women in all three services. However, there will remain a number of areas of employment from which it is at present intended that women will continue to be excluded. The principal exceptions are that women in the Army and the RAF will not be employed in direct combat duties and that women in the Royal Navy will not be employed in the submarine service, in the Royal Marines or as aircrew. We are, however, considering whether it is possible to reduce further the areas of work from which women are excluded.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Neubert: Grade 5.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Neubert: All applicants to join the Ministry of Defence and all members of staff are treated equally for employment and advancement on the basis of their ability, qualifications and suitability for work. Particular measures taken to promote equality of opportunity include flexible upper age limits for recruitment and promotion, the introduction of five-year career breaks for people with domestic responsibilities, child care provision, use of special leave during school holidays, a trial working from home scheme, reinstatement and flexible working patterns including part-time posts and job-sharing, and women-only management development training courses.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Neubert: The figures are as follows:

Grade	Per cent.
Seven	4·1
Six	1·4
Five	3·5
Four	0·0
Three	1·6
Two	0·0
One	0·0

Greenham Common (Arrests)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women have been arrested under the RAF Greenham Common byelaws since they were introduced; how many women were charged; and how many were convicted.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since the byelaws came into operation on 1 April 1985 2,448 arrests have been made, and in 1,503 of these cases the person arrested has been charged. There have been 812 convictions.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Neubert: Sexual harassment is not tolerated in the Ministry of Defence. Instructions have been issued to line managers and staff setting out the Departments policy and guidelines for dealing with cases of sexual harassment. Complaints are recorded centrally only if they result in a disciplinary penalty. In the past five years there have been 12 such cases and the penalties have ranged from dismissal to reprimands.

Pin-ups

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Neubert: An instruction was issued in May 1988 requiring the removal from Civil Service premises of any material of a sexual nature which might cause offence.

Radiation

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average radiation dose, whole body (a) received by nuclear submarine personnel, (b) reported by the Central Electricity Generating Board nationally and (c) reported by the Central Electricity Generating Board at the Sellafield nuclear power plant, for each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For figures relating to nuclear submarine personnel for the years 1978 to 1988 I refer the hon. Member to my written answers to him of 2 May 1989, Official Report, column 62, and 20 March 1989, Official Report, column 478. The average individual radiation dose in 1989 was 1·69 milliSieverts.

I will ask my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) to write to Nuclear Electric Ltd. and British Nuclear Fuels plc, the operators of Sellafield, to obtain the information requested in parts (b) and (c) of the question.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum radiation dose, rounded to the nearest milliSievert, received by any nuclear submariner in one year during the last decade.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The maximum recorded individual radiation dose to a Royal Navy submariner in any one year during the last 10 years as 50·96 milliSieverts, in 1980.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum total radiation dose received by any nuclear submariner over any period, or number of periods, spent as a classified radiation worker working for the Royal Navy aboard British nuclear submarines; and whether or not such an individual or individuals are still working as classified radiation workers within Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Data are readily available only for personnel who have ceased radiation work since 1979.

The maximum total radiation dose recorded for any member of the Royal Navy who ceased radiation work since 1979 is 201·98 milliSieverts. This cumulative radiation dose was accrued over the period September 1969 to October 1987, and is the only example shown on available records of a total cumulative dose in excess of 200 milliSieverts. A further 39 Royal Navy personnel are recorded as having cumulative doses in excess of 100 milliSieverts.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the radiation exposure limit for classified persons set by the Ionising Radiations Regulations for maximum annual dose, cumulative year-on-year dose and total dose over a lifetime.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 state the following. The dose limit for the whole body resulting from exposure to the whole or part of the body, being the sum of the following dose quantities resulting from exposure to ionising radiation, namely the effective dose equivalent from external radiation and the committed effective dose equivalent from that year's intake of radionuclides, shall in any calendar year be:

(a) for employees aged 18 years or over,	50mSV
(b) for trainees aged under 18 years,	15mSV
(c) for any other person.	5mSV

There are no limits on cumulative or total lifetime dose other than those implicit in the annual dose limits.

The regulations also include dose limits for individual organs and tissues, the lens of the eye, the abdomen of a woman of reproductive capacity and the abdomen of a pregnant woman. For details of these I refer the hon. Member to schedule 1, parts II, III, IV and V on pages 35 and 36 of IRR85, issued by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and available in the House of Commons Library.

Forest Moor Base

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the Forest Moor royal naval base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is a naval communications establishment.

Running Costs

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current average annual running cost of an operational (a) type 23 frigate, (b) type 22 frigate, (c) type 21 frigate, (d) Leander class frigate, (e) type 42 destroyer, (f) type 82 destroyer, (g) anti-submarine warfare carrier, (h) assault ship, (i) type 2400 submarine, (j) Oberon class submarine, (k) Fleet class submarine, (l) Ton class minesweeper, (m) Ton class minehunter and (n) Hunt class minehunter;

(2) what is the current average annual running cost of a squadron of (a) Sea Harrier aircraft, (b) Sea King HAS 5 anti-submarine helicopters, (c) Lynx HAS 2/3 anti-submarine helicopters, (d) Sea King AEW 2 helicopters and (e) Sea King HC 4 commando assault helicopters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The current average annual running costs (at financial year 1988-89 prices) of the following Royal Navy vessels are:

		£ million
(a)	Type 23 frigate	5·3
(b)	Type 22 frigate	5·6
(c)	Type 21 frigate	3·9
(d)	Leander class frigate	4·2
(e)	Type 42 destroyer	6·0
(f)	Type 82 destroyer	6·5
(g)	Anti-submarine warfare carrier	21·4
(h)	Assault ship	9·0
(i)	Type 2400 submarine	3·4
(j)	Oberon class submarine	2·4
(k)	Fleet submarine	4·4
(l)	Ton class minesweeper	1·0
(m)	Ton class minehunter	0·5
(n)	Hunt class minehunter	0·9

The current average annual running costs (at financial year 1988-89 prices) of a squadron of the following Royal Navy aircraft are:

		£ million
(a)	Sea Harrier	0·8
(b)	Sea King HAS 5/6 anti-submarine helicopter	1·6
(c)	Lynx (including all operational Lynx helicopters)	0·5
(d)	Sea King AEW 2	0·6
(e)	Sea King HC4 commando assault helicopter	0·9

These costs include personnel, fuel, spares and so on, and administrative support services, but exclude new construction, capital equipment and refit-repair costs.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has reached a decision on the future of the wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have decided not to proceed with the abolition of the councils for the present. However, the consultation exercise showed that our concern about their adverse effects is widely shared by employers, who have confirmed the Government's view that the system should have no permanent place in the labour market. I therefore intend to keep its operation under close review.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the total number of unemployed and (b) the total number of long-term unemployed for each of the months between July 1986 and December 1989 inclusive for each of the standard regions, Scotland, Wales and Great Britain.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 February 1990]: As the information requested is detailed and lengthy, I will write to the hon. Member.

Business Incentives (Women)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what incentives his Department promotes for women wishing to start up their own business.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The Government's policy is to create a beneficial climate for small businesses generally, mainly by encouraging conditions of fair competition and minimising regulation, and by providing a complementary range of fiscal, financial and advisory measures.

My own Department's services include the development of a wide range of business training, the loan guarantee scheme, the enterprise allowance scheme in which over one third of participants are now women, and the small firms service. All these opportunities are open equally to men and women. My Department is keen to encourage women to set up in business, and part-funded a study into the barriers faced by female entrepreneurs conducted by the Scottish Enterprise Foundation, published in November 1988. Following that, the Training Agency has invited organisations to compete for a contract to develop enterprise training for women within employment training.

Women are increasingly taking advantage of enterprise opportunities. Between 1979 and 1988 the number of self-employed women in the United Kingdom more than doubled, compared with an increase of just under 50 per cent. for self-employed men.

TRANSPORT

Coastal Protection

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken by his Department to develop national policies for coastal protection and sea defence work in respect of the threat to ports from erosion of the coastline and the rise in sea levels.

Mr. McLoughlin: The main policy interest relating to coast protection and sea defence work rests, in England, with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and elsewhere with the territorial Departments. In specific cases where problems arise with respect to ports it is normally for the harbour authorities to assess the need for work and to take such action as may be necessary.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current financial targets and limits set by him which apply to Network SouthEast and the assumptions as to the increase in passenger fares made in connection with their plans for future revenue and capital expenditure.

Mr. Portillo: For 1989-90 the British Railways Board's external financing limit is now £635 million. The PSO cash limit is, at present, £496 million. The EFL applies to BR as a whole and the PSO limit to supported sectors. They are not broken down by sector.

In the medium term, the board has set Network SouthEast the objective of reducing its grant requirement to zero in 1992-93. This was endorsed by my right hon. Friend in his letter to Sir Robert Reid of 20 December, which set out BR's objectives for the next three years. Over the same period, planned investment will amount to £1·2 billion—an increase of 30 per cent. in real terms over the previous three-year period. According to BR's own plans, on which the medium-term objectives are based, fares on NSE are likely to rise by less than 10 per cent. in real terms over the next three years.

Air-conditioned Rolling Stock

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of existing rolling stock on British Rail and the London Underground have air conditioning; and what percentage of the new rolling stock will have it.

Mr. Portillo: The figures for BR are given in the table below.

	Percentage of fleet with air conditioning		[1]Percentage of planned future rolling stock with air conditioning
	1989-90	1993-94
InterCity	85	[2]100	100
Network SouthEast	2	15	50
Provincial	2	24	75

[1]Taken from British Rail's 1989 corporate plan. For Network SouthEast the figure includes all rolling stock that will have been ordered by March 1995.
[2]Percentage of carriages in regular, all year round service. A very small number of vehicles used for charter will not be air conditioned.

London Underground has no air conditioned rolling stock, and none of the planned new rolling stock will have air conditioning.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the proper equipment is available and arrangements made to ensure that when a vehicle overturns on the Severn bridge quick remedial action can be taken.

Mr. Atkins: The equipment necessary for the recovery and removal of overturned vehicles on the Severn crossing is already available. High winds are almost invariably the cause of vehicles overturning on the crossing and these winds also impede and delay vehicle recovery.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the reason for the closure of the Severn bridge on 26 February; and for how long traffic was disrupted.

Mr. Atkins: A high-sided heavy goods vehicle overturned in high winds on the westbound carriageway of the Severn crossing at approximately 3.30 am on 26 February. The vehicle came to rest across the central reservation, spilling diesel fuel on both carriageways. As a result, both carriageways were closed to traffic. The vehicle and spillage was cleared by early afternoon, but with winds gusting to 70 knots, it was not considered safe to reopen the crossing until 4.50 pm. High-sided vehicles were banned until 3.30 am the following day.

Newbury Bypass

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decision he has reached about the route for the Newbury bypass.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment are still considering the inspector's report on the A34 Newbury bypass public inquiry. We would hope to be able to announce their joint decision during the spring.

Roads, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new road building funded by his Department is planned for the city of Liverpool for the next decade.

Mr. Atkins: There are none of our trunk roads within Liverpool. We support local authority spending on some of their more important roads through transport supplementary grant (TSG), currently paid at 50 per cent. of accepted expenditure. In Liverpool we are at present supporting phases of the Park road relief road and the Great Howard street improvement. It is for the city council to settle its forward programme and the schemes to be included in future annual bids for TSG.

Roads (Congestion)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the measures he has taken to reduce congestion on the roads.

Mr. Atkins: Last year we announced in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" a doubling of the trunk road programme. Our proposals to add some 2,700 miles of new or improved road to the trunk road network will make a significant impact on congestion on major inter-urban routes. Plans for over 150 bypasses will remove through traffic from towns and villages. In city centres better traffic management measures, parking controls and improvements to public transport, including the development of new facilities such as light rail systems will contribute towards reducing congestion.

Full details of the trunk road programme are contained in the roads report "Trunk Roads, England—Into the 1990s", published on 20 February. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Traffic Information

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to improve access to motorists of up-to-date traffic information by means of radio.

Mr. Atkins: We have held discussions with the BBC, AA and others involved in the provision of travel information about ways of improving the availability and reliability of information through better arrangements for its collection, co-ordination and dissemination. The Department is contributing to a trial by the BBC of radio data systems, a newly developed system to allow improved dissemination of travel information by radio.

A1 (Fatal Accidents)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatal accidents have occurred between Doncaster and Scotland on the A1 in each of the past five years.

Mr. Atkins: Figures available are for the A1 and A1(M) between the Scottish border and the border of Doncaster metropolitan district, which is approximately five miles south of Doncaster. In 1984, there were 22 fatal accidents. The figures for successive years are 19 fatal accidents in 1985, 38 in 1986, 25 in 1987 and 23 in 1988. The table shows fatal accidents for A1 and A1(M) separately and the resulting fatal casualties.

Fatal accidents and casualties on the A1 and A1(M) between Doncaster and Scotland, 1984 to 1988

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Fatal accidents
A1	21	14	31	20	22
A1(M)	1	5	7	5	1
TOTAL	22	19	38	25	23
Fatal casualties
A1	24	16	45	22	28
A1(M)	2	5	7	5	3
TOTAL	26	21	52	27	31

Environmental Pressure Groups

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with environmental pressure groups on 23 February.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend met representatives of Transport 2000, Friends of the Earth, the Council for the Protection of Rural England, the World Wide Fund for Nature and the Royal Society for Nature Conservation on 23 February. He exchanged views with these organisations on a wide range of transport and environmental issues, and hopes to have further meetings with them.

Vehicle Emissions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what policies he has to develop measures to improve driver efficiency as part of Her Majesty's Government's policy to reduce the emission of greenhouse gases.

Mr. Atkins: Pollution emitted by road vehicles is related to fuel consumption. My Department regularly issues a booklet about the fuel consumption of new cars which also advises motorists on how to save fuel when driving. We are considering what further measures are necessary to encourage driver efficiency.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies are being undertaken into the development of advanced catalytic converter technology for turbo-diesel engines by the transport road research laboratory.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 March 1990]: None at present. Industry has its own longstanding development programmes in this field. These will be furthered by the £2·3 million joint venture programme between Government and a consortium of United Kingdom companies, directed towards cleaning up vehicle exhaust emissions, announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Enterprise on 15 February.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for testing the effectiveness of motor vehicle emission control devices once fitted and in use.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 March 1990]: Our proposed amendments to the Construction and Use Regulations include a requirement for the user of a vehicle to keep the engine in tune and any emission control equipment in working order. This can be checked by most garages. We are also considering whether changes are needed in the existing annual testing schemes and roadside spot checks of exhaust condition.

Ship Registers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce incentives to United Kingdom shipping companies to stop them registering their shipping in other countries.

Mr. McLoughlin: No.

Radioactive Materials (Ports)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list by year for the last 10 years (a) the sources and (b) the destinations, of radioactive material (i) imported and (ii) exported, through the ports of Immingham and Hull;

(2) if he will list by year for the last 10 years how many tonnes of radioactive material were (a) imported and (b) exported through the ports of (i) Barrow, (ii) Dover, (iii) Felixstowe, (iv) Harwich, (v) Liverpool, (vi) Portsmouth, (vii) Southampton and (viii) Workington, and in each case what method of transport was used to convey the material to or from the port.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 22 January, Official Report, column 491.

Tyres

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he will issue to local authority trading standards departments in relation to current offences alleged to have been committed under sections 10 and 12 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 with respect to the alleged breach of regulation 4 of the Motor Vehicles Tyres (Safety) Regulations 1984 in the light of the acceptance and imminent introduction of BS AU144C 1988 retread car and commercial vehicle tyre specifications.

Mr. Atkins: We shall consult on proposed amendments to the regulations, which will include the introduction of the BS AU 1440 requirements, later this year. As usual, the trading standards authorities, who are responsible for enforcement, will be included in the consultation.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to replace the British Standards AU144B 1977 specification for retreaded car and commercial vehicle tyres with British Standard AU144C 1988 requirement, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 2 March 1990]: I shall be consulting on amendments to the Motor Vehicles (Tyre Safety) Regulations 1984 later this year. The amendments will include the change proposed by my hon. Friend.

Minibuses

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what documentation and tests are to be required after 1992 for a person to be qualified to drive a minibus in the United Kingdom and other European Community countries; and what are the present arrangements.

Mr. Atkins: Minibuses with up to 17 seats that are not used for hire or reward may be driven in the United Kingdom by holders of full ordinary licences who are over 21 years of age. Younger drivers are also allowed to drive minibuses in closely defined circumstances. In order to drive these vehicles in other European Community member states, drivers must obtain a certificate of driving experience from the local traffic area office.

Proposals for a second directive on the driving licence, as published by the European Commission, would require new drivers of minibuses to take a second test and meet tougher health standards. The United Kingdom has been pressing for the retention of the present arrangements. Useful progress has been made in direct discussions with Commission officials. Details of the modifications agreed with the Commission were announced in the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 21 July 1989, Official Report, column 336. There is still a good deal of negotiation ahead before the proposals are finalised. Any changes arising from the directive are unlikely to be in place by 1992.

M3 Extension

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what impact the recently approved extension of the M3 through Twyford Down near Winchester, Hampshire, will have on the natural landscape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The impact on the landscape of the Department of Transport's proposals for this section of the M3 motorway is set out at length in the letter conveying the decisions of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment on the reports of the two independent inspectors who conducted the public inquiries. I am sending the hon. and learned Gentleman a copy of the letter and arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Beach Pollution (Sussex)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Worthing of 28 February, Official Report, column 237, regarding the MV Fathulkhair, (1) whether he was informed by the French authorities of the loss of the vessel's dangerous cargo and potential risk on British beaches; when he first knew of the problem; whether the other dangerous chemicals found were on the MV Fathulkhair's manifest; and what information he has on whether the initial stowage and subsequent securing in Cherbourg were in conformity with Merchant Shipping Regulations;

(2) where the MV Fathulkhair is registered; when the master of the vessel notified the authorities in Cherbourg of the loss of dangerous cargo; when the French authorities notified his Department of the danger; and if he is satisfied that the communications arrangements are adequate to warn of such dangers.

Mr. McLoughlin: As explained in my answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 237, the MV Fathulkhair is registered in Qatar. I understand that the loss of dangerous goods was not reported by the master to the French authorities although the vessel at one time put back into Cherbourg to re-secure and survey cargo. Had the loss been so reported I am satisfied that the French authorities would have notified my Department's marine pollution control unit (MPCU) of the potential risk to British beaches under a longstanding bilateral agreement for co-operation in dealing with pollution in the Channel —Mancheplan.

These arrangements have worked well in other recent incidents in the Channel involving the loss of dangerous goods, such as the Perintis and the Murree. Within the framework of Mancheplan there are also twice-yearly meetings between the MPCU and its counterparts in Cherbourg and annual counter-pollution exercises are held to ensure that communications are both speedy and effective.

On this occasion, the first my Department knew of the danger on British beaches was when a canister of potassium cyanide was reported on the morning of 21 February to Sussex police who immediately informed Her Majesty's Coastguard. The MPCU was subsequently able to determine that this had been shipped on the MV Fathulkhair and was then advised by the shipping agent of other dangerous cargo which had been lost overboard from the vessel. This information was passed by the MPCU to the French authorities and to all United Kingdom coastal local authorities which might be affected. Other dangerous chemicals found on beaches on 21 February and on succeeding days are consistent with those reported by the shipping agent as being lost from MV Fathulkhair. Marine surveyors of my Department are investigating to see whether cargo loaded on board the MV Fathulkhair at Sheerness was stowed in conformity with merchant shipping regulations. Any subsequent re-securing of the cargo in Cherbourg is of course a matter for the competent French authorities.

Lowland Airports

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has concluded his review of Scottish lowland airports policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I have now concluded my consideration of the views put in the over 1,100 submissions received during the recent consultation. I was much impressed by the scale and quality of the response, and I am glad to have been able to consider the issues against the background of this very full expression of Scottish opinion.

I believe it is right in principle for Government to intervene in the operation of the aviation market only to the extent and when circumstances make it necessary. My intention in ordering the consultation was to determine whether to maintain a special policy for the lowland airports, or to adopt the less restrictive approach which applies more generally in the United Kingdom. I have concluded, in close consultation with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, that the interests of Scotland generally and of the users and providers of air services in Scotland are best served by allowing each of the lowland airports to handle the traffic they are able to attract, subject of course to the licences held by airlines, to international air service agreements and to the physical capabilities of the airports. I shall not, therefore, be making fresh traffic distribution rules for the lowland airports. I did not find that there was a persuasive argument for construction of another airport in Scotland.

The benefits to Scotland that can be expected to flow from this, and the rate at which those benefits will be become manifest, are necessarily difficult to state with precision. Much depends on the response of the industry and of users to the additional opportunities that a more liberal policy will open up: already two airlines have announced proposals for new services between Glasgow and the United States of America. It is the firm belief of almost all those well placed to take an informed view that the policy of confining long-haul services to Prestwick has hampered Scotland's economic development and that a less restrictive approach could be expected to enhance business efficiency and help encourage inward investment. I am myself clear that airlines' ability to respond flexibly to the needs of users is very important.

I recognise and regret that the change in policy is likely to have an adverse impact on local Ayrshire employment. However my right hon. and learned Friend and I are confident that this will be more than offset by wider benefits to Scotland as a whole, and in the meantime I welcome BAA's firm policy of making no forced redundancies at Prestwick.

I am conscious of the concern on safety grounds at the prospect of additional traffic at Glasgow and Edinburgh.

I should stress that there is no question of any unsafe operations being permitted at either airport. A statutory responsibility for the safety of civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. Objectivity in assessing safety standards is one of the key elements which take the regulation of aviation safety out of the commercial market place as far as is humanly possible. Thus, while the length of Glasgow's runway might impose a commercial penalty —which would be a matter for the airlines—there is no question of safety standards being compromised. Much higher levels of air traffic than are envisaged at Glasgow are already present at, for example, Heathrow and Manchester, airports also located in urban areas.

There is concern, too, about additional noise and vibration at Glasgow and Edinburgh that an increase in traffic may bring. Responsibility for noise control measures at these airports rests with BAA as airport operator, and I am satisfied that this arrangement should continue, as indeed it does at all United Kingdom airports outside the London system. A number of noise abatement measures are already in place at Glasgow and Edinburgh, and I am asking the chairman of the BAA to ensure that these are kept under review.

It is suggested that the withdrawal of Prestwick's sole gateway status would lead to the airport's closure. BAA has said that it will move to a common tariff at Glasgow and Prestwick for long-haul traffic, allowing Prestwick to compete fairly. Although it believes that passenger services will nevertheless in due course transfer from Prestwick, the BAA has made clear its firm intention of keeping the airport open and of intensifying its marketing of its other facilities, notably for all-cargo operations. I welcome those intentions, because I know there is concern among some Scottish business interests for the future of air freight facilities in Scotland. I very much hope that BAA will be successful in realising Prestwick's advantages for all-cargo services. It starts from a strong position, such services having accounted for 38 per cent. of all air transport movements at Prestwick in 1988, and for 80 per cent. of cargo moved through the airport in 1988-89. With the continuation of cargo operations at Prestwick and the bellyhold capacity offered by any additional long-haul services at Glasgow and Edinburgh, I believe Scotland will continue to enjoy good air freight coverage.

Lowland Scotland is fortunate in having three fine airports. By extending freedom of choice, allowing the market to respond freely to the wishes of users, I am confident that each of the airports will be encouraged to realise its proper potential, to the benefit of Scotland as a whole.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the United Kingdom's preparedness to deal with an oil spill at sea has been reviewed in the light of recent tanker accidents.

Mr. McLoughlin: Contingency arrangements to deal with pollution at sea in United Kingdom waters are kept under constant review by the Department's marine pollution control unit (MPCU) which was set up in 1979 with specific responsibility to do so and to take charge of operations.

A thorough examination covering United Kingdom counterpollution responsibilities, communications and resources has been carried out. As a result of this the capability of the MPCU to deal with major oil spills is being increased by doubling its contracted aerial dispersant spraying capacity by the use of larger aircraft. The unit's ability to detect oil slicks at sea is also being doubled by increasing to two its complement of remote sensing aircraft, which are used to control and direct counterpollution operations. Additionally this enhanced remote sensing capability will be used to increase by more than 60 per cent. regular aerial surveillance patrols of United Kingdom waters to deter and detect ships making illegal operational discharges of oil. Overall spending in 1990-91 will depend on the number of incidents in the year but is expected to be of the order of £4 million.

Trunk Roads and Motorways

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the role of local authority agents in relation to the sections of the Department of Transport chapter of the Public Expenditure White Paper for 1990-91 to 1992-93 dealing with trunk roads and motorways, Cm.1007.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 2 March 1990]: Under current agency arrangements it will fall in general to local highway authorities to manage maintenance of trunk roads on behalf of the Department. Authorities will also be responsible in general for designing and supervising the less expensive new construction schemes, normally those costing less than £1 million.

It is the Department's policy to use private firms of consultants, selected by competition, for design and supervision of major schemes. We are however prepared to employ an agent authority on such a scheme where this is justified for reasons such as invested knowledge, linkages with local road schemes, or traffic management considerations.

Traffic Calming

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the proposed new regulations on road humps and other traffic calming measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 2 March 1990]: My aim is for these regulations to come into force before Easter.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those authorities which have set a poll tax (a) below and (b) above the Government's assessed level.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 21 February, Official Report, column 741.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in descending order of magnitude for each non-metropolitan county in England the percentage amount by which its 1990-91 standard spending assessment represented an increase or decrease from the comparable adjusted figure for the 1989-90 grant-related expenditure assessment.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 5 March 1990]: I will write to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, further to his replies of 27 February, Official Report, column 178, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, concerning the average amount of Government contribution to local expenditure, he will now publish the information in the Official Report.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 23 February at column 929.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) of 23 November 1989, Official Report, columns 16-17, whether he intends the proposed country agencies of the Nature Conservancy Council to have responsibility for making nature reserve agreements under section 16 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. Amendments to the 1949 Act contained in paragraph 1(2) and (3) of schedule 6 to the Environmental Protection Bill which is currently before Parliament are intended to achieve this.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 1 February, Official Report, column 245, what is the maximum number of new members appointed to the Nature Conservancy Council or its predecessor bodies with effect from the same date; and on what date and on how many occasions there have been more than 18 members on the council.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The maximum number of new members appointed to the Nature Conservancy Council (NCC) with effect from the same date is 11 from 1 November 1973. From 1 April 1989 until 28 September 1989, there were 19 members on the council. On no other occasion have there been more than 18 members. Information on the NCC's predecessor bodies is not readily available.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many D and F grades were employed at TCS on 16 February; and how many had applied for early retirement or severance at that date.

Mr. Chope: On 16 February 1990, a total of 318 permanent of D and F grades were employed in TCS. At that date, 152 had applied for early retirement or severance.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often he met members of the privatisation unit of the Crown Suppliers in 1989.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend meets his officials as necessary.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often the Parliamentary Under-Secretary met members of the management buy-out team for the product supply services division and the buying agency of TCS in 1989.

Mr. Chope: I had one formal meeting with the management buy-out team for PSSD and the buying agency, to discuss its proposals.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he encourages managers from the buying agency of TCS to bid for their business separately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government welcome staff interest in bidding for the business of the Crown Suppliers. Managers of the buying agency of the Crown Suppliers are among those buy-out teams and outside organisations which have been invited to bid for the contract furnishing business, which consists of the product supply and services and the buying agency divisions of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether in 1989 TCS received any advice about EEC directives on procurement.

Mr. Chope: Like other Government Departments, the Crown Suppliers receive advice from the Treasury on EC directives from time to time. In 1989, some 20 such papers were received.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of consultants employed by the Property Services Agency at DWO Teddington; and what was the total cost in 1989.

Mr. Chope: Five consultants were employed at the district works office at Teddington during the financial year 1989-90 at a cost of £177,000.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of consultants employed in place of in-house staff at DWO Westminster in 1989.

Mr. Chope: There were no consultants employed in place of in-house staff at DWO Westminster during 1989.

Hostel Rents

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given to local rent officers to ensure that nominal rent levels for hostels for single people do not vary widely from one area to another.

Mr. Chope: The Rent Officers (Additional Functions) Order 1989 lays down the basis on which rent officers assess the rents paid by, and accommodation occupied by, private tenants claiming housing benefit. The order broadly requires the rent officer to assess the claimant's rent by reference to the level of rents being paid for similar accommodation within the locality by tenants who are not in receipt of housing benefit. Advice on how rent officers might approach this task particularly in circumstances where no direct market evidence is available was included in a study of the private rented housing market commissioned by the Department from the consultants Price Waterhouse. Copies of that report were circulated to rent officers and placed in the Library in February 1989. We have not issued any specific guidance as to the assessment of hostel charges.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanisms exist to (a) review the level of nominal rent set by rent officers for single person hostels and (b) replace rent officers whose assessments are grossly out of line with reasonable rents.

Mr. Chope: Where a local authority is dissatisfied with the rent officer's determinations under the Rent Officers (Additional Functions) Order 1989, it can apply for the case to be redetermined by another rent officer, drawn from a different rent registration area. The redetermination will be made by reference to the same criteria as applied to the initial determination. The redetermining officer is normally required to seek the views of two other rent officers, neither of whom will have previously dealt with the case. Responsibility for the day-to-day management of the rent officer service in each registration area lies with the chief rent officer, but overall responsibility lies with the proper officer of the local authority concerned.

Westminster Cemeteries (Sale)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking in respect of the report by the district auditor on the sale by Westminster city council of three cemeteries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Action on the report is for the city council and the auditor to take. The auditor's findings are provisional and the council has until 30 March to make representations to him. The auditor will then decide whether to apply to the High Court for a declaration that the items in the accounts relating to the transactions are "contrary to law".

Environmental Initiatives

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce initiatives on (a) prevention of sea disposal of wastes, (b) reductions in atmospheric pollution from transport, (c) long-term monitored storage for radioactive waste, and (d) measures to combat the greenhouse effect at the next Council of European Environment Ministers in Brussels on 22 March.

Mr. Trippier: It is the sole prerogative of the Commission to put forward proposed measures for action by the European Community. Responsibility for setting the agenda for meetings of the Council of Ministers rests with the member state holding the Presidency of the Council, currently Ireland. Nevertheless I have asked the Presidency to consider a number of possible initiatives for consideration by the Environment Council on 22 March, including the Community's role in global action to tackle the greenhouse effect.

Kirklees Metropolitan Council

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out a table showing for each year since 1979 (a) the full-time, (b) the part-time and (c) the total staffing levels of Kirklees metropolitan council.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Major Developments (Design)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his policy in relation to the design of major development proposals.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government have advised local planning authorities, in circular 22/80, confirmed by circular 31/85, and in planning policy guidance note No. 1, that they should not seek to impose their tastes on developers simply because they believe them to be superior. Judgments about external design are essentially subjective, and I have seen no evidence that a more interventionist approach by local authorities would result in improved standards overall. Indeed, there is a risk that attempts to compromise between differing aesthetic judgments may produce bland buildings which satisfy no one.

Accordingly, where they consider it essential to refuse planning permission or to impose conditions related to design, local planning authorities should ensure that the grounds for refusal or for conditions relate to relevant planning issues such as the density and bulk of the development and its compatibility with its surroundings. This may include, in sensitive areas, the use of materials appropriate to the locality. Such control of external appearance may be particularly important where development proposals affect national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty, conservation areas, or the setting of important historic landmarks. Authorities should in general confine their concern to those aspects of design which are significant for the aesthetic quality of the area. Only exceptionally should they control design details, if the sensitive character of the area or the particular building justifies it. Alterations to buildings of special architectural or historic interest are controlled through listed building consent procedures, for similar reasons.

Although I have no plans to impose further measures of aesthetic control, I am deeply concerned to promote good design. My concern relates particularly to the standard of planning applications made for major developments. I hope that developers will bring forward schemes which will make a major contribution to the architectural fabric of the country in the long term.

Pursuit of the highest architectural standards should not be deflected by debate about style. I acknowledge that style is important, but dressing a building in different stylistic devices, whether classical, gothic, high tech or of the modern movement, is essentially a subordinate activity. I attach great importance to the more fundamental architectural values of good proportion and scale, and skill in the use of space and light, which distinguish good buildings of any period.

I do not believe that these qualities can be achieved by regulation, control or Government edict. I cannot and would not want to try to impose my own views on design through individual planning appeals. So I must look to developers and designers to have greater regard for the impact of their buildings on the environment, now and in the future, and to aim always to achieve the highest possible standard.

County Structure Plan, Leicestershire

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the costs to local planning authorities in Leicestershire of advancing the present expiry date of the county structure plan of 1996: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 5 March 1990]: My Department has no information on costs relating specifically to the review of the Leicestershire structure plan. All such plans have to be reviewed well in advance of their end date if they are to continue to perform their planning function.

Planning Appeals (Staffordshire)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of planning appeals (a) upheld and (b) rejected by him in each year since 1980 in respect of planning refusals by (i) Lichfield district council, (ii) Cannock Chase district council and (iii) Stafford district council.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 1 March 1990]: This information is available only in respect of appeals decided since 1 April 1984 and is as follows.

Litter

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the definition of litter as adopted by his Department in regard to legislation covering waste and pollution.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 2 March 1990]: We have not sought to define litter in the Environmental Protection Bill. Clause 71 of the Bill defines the offence of littering in terms of throwing down, dropping or otherwise depositing, and leaving "any thing whatsoever in such circumstances as to cause, or contribute to, or tend to lead to, the defacement by litter of any place."

It is for the courts to decide, in all cases brought before them, whether the item complained of constitutes litter.

Commons

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce his legislative proposals in respect of the Common Land Forum's recommendation on commons.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 2 March 1990]: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, on 12 February 1990, Official Report, column 64.

Thatched Roofs

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will issue an urgent planning circular to planning authorities recommending that they relax planning requirements that storm damaged thatched roofs must be repaired or replaced with thatch, where shortage of available thatchers renders such a course impractable for the householders concerned.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 6 March 1990]: In those cases where planning or other permissions are required, each proposal must be considered on its merits, having regard to the development plan and any other material considerations. Wherever possible, local planning authorities should adopt a flexible approach, but they will need to take account of the long-term consequences for the special character of thatched buildings and their surroundings.

Lindane

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the container of lindane lost in the Channel in 1989 has been found.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The container was lost in an area of the Channel in which under a longstanding bilateral agreement the French authorities are responsible for co-ordinating counterpollution action. Despite an intensive and very comprehensive search mounted by the French Navy and continuing vigilance, it has not been found. My Department's marine pollution control unit maintains close contacts with the French authorities and is satisfied that every effort has been made to try and locate the missing container. Sampling and analysis of seawater and fish both in the area where the container was thought to be lost and in the English Channel as a whole has been undertaken by the French authorities and by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) respectively. No increased levels of lindane have been detected. Further sampling and analysis will be undertaken by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food later this year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Gallows (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the gallows kept at Wandsworth prison are next to be tested; and who will do this.

Mr. Mellor: The gallows will next be tested in June. This will be done by a member of the prison's works department.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) of 15 February, Official Report, column 371, how many of the 31 Iranian citizens served with the notice of the intention to make deportation orders against them on the grounds that this would be conducive to the public good for reasons of national security were involved in full-time or part-time education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Fifteen.

Foreign Office Employees (Special Branch Detentions)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by name since 1979 the number of employees of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office that have been detained by special branch officers; on what charge they were detained; and what was the result of their inquiries.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not available.

Immigration (West Indies)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Jamaica, (b) Trinidad and Tobago, (c) Guyana, (d) Barbados and (e) St. Lucia have made applications for entry clearance certificates at the respective British High Commissions in the West Indies; how many such applications have been refused during the 12 months of 1989; and what are the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on entry clearance applications refused initially in 1987-88 was published on 5 April 1989, Official Report, columns 221-24, in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling). Information on applications in 1989 is given in the table. The other information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Trinidad and Tobago, (b) Guyana, (c) Barbados and (d) St. Lucia have (i) been admitted and (ii) been refused admittance and removed during the 12 months of 1989; and what are the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the table. St. Lucia is not separately identified in the statistics of admissions and removals.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are being held in detention for immigration reasons; where they are being held; how many are asylum-seekers; and how many in the latter category are women.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No central record is maintained of the number of people held in detention for immigration reasons. On 28 February there were 187 people detained solely under Immigration Act powers in the following establishments:

	Number
Harmondsworth detention centre	70
Queens Building, Heathrow	13
Gatwick Airport	6
Newhaven	11
HMP Haslar	87

It is estimated that some 30 people were detained at other prisons and in police cells in the south-east of England on the same day. There is no central record of how many of those detained had sought asylum.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women have been detained in Holloway for immigration reasons over the last 12 months; and how many of these are asylum-seekers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The most recent figures available are for the calendar year 1989. In this period, 16 women were detained in Holloway under the powers conferred by the Immigration Act 1971. There is no central record of how many of these had sought asylum.

Correspondence

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes dated 28 November (reference 27880/89).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 28 February. I am sorry for the delay in his receiving a reply.

Tobacco Sales to Children

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to increase penalties for people who sell cigarettes to children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our proposals for strengthening the law to prevent illegal sales of tobacco to children will be put before Parliament when there is a suitable opportunity.

Police Shifts

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the use of the Ottawa system of police shift patterns.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are aware of the experiment that is being conducted with the Ottawa shift system but no representations have been made to my right hon. and learned Friend about it.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has conducted any studies in the last five years into alternative shift systems for the police service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such studies have been conducted by the Home Office. However, a report prepared by the Home Office police requirements support unit, which was sent to all chief officers of police in England and Wales on 30 January, collates all the research into shift patterns which has been done in forces during the past three years and proposes further research into alternative shift systems.

Police Rent Allowances

Mr Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the cost of implementing in full the agreement reached by the Police Negotiating Board; and what will be the cost resulting from his decision to set aside the agreement on rent allowances and related matters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has decided that serving officers who are receiving rent allowance on 31 March should receive no less after that date and that officers living in accommodation provided by the police authority on the same date should receive a transitional allowance of £300 a year for up to three years. These decisions mean that the level of expenditure on rent allowance is unlikely to be significantly reduced in the next financial year. There are too many hypothetical factors for a meaningful comparison to be made between this situation and what would have happened had my right hon. and learned Friend accepted the agreement of the Police Negotiating Board in full.

Asylum

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a decision has been reached regarding the request for asylum by the Chinese diplomat Ning Hong Shan.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Ning Hong Shan was granted refugee status on 3 August 1989.

Civil Defence

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the outcome of the study into regional co-ordination of home defence planning undertaken in the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I have received a report on the study, and I have today placed in the Library a summary of its main findings. The study has identified a number of deficiencies in the co-ordination of home defence planning at regional level, and proposals are made for improvements. In the light of this study, and with the continuing support of other Departments, it has been decided that a small centrally led team should be established whose aim will be to improve co-ordination of planning in each region, drawing on and extending the work of the original study. Under these arrangements, responsibility for writing plans would remain with individual authorities, departments and public utilities at the local level, but the team will provide additional guidance, working through existing emergency planning fora.

I have asked officials to put the arrangements into effect as soon as possible and to consult interested parties at national and local level.

Cyclists (Convictions)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pedal cyclists have been convicted in each of the last five years for offences involving (a) going through traffic lights, (b) riding on the pavement and (c) going the wrong way along a one-way street.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 21 February 1990]: Information available centrally cannot separately identify the number of pedal cyclists who commit offences of going through traffic lights and going the wrong way along a one-way street. Information on the number of pedal cyclists convicted of riding on the pavement for 1984 to 1988 is given in the table.

PRIME MINISTER

Mortgage Interest Rates

Q30. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters she has received regarding the increases in mortgage interest rates.

The Prime Minister: I have received approximately 360 representations this year on the subject of interest rates.

North Downs

Q112. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit the North Downs area of outstanding national beauty in mid-Kent.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Homelessness (London)

Q168. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received concerning homelessness in London.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations and reports on homelessness in London. I and my colleagues look at them very carefully in the light of the action we are taking as follow-up to our review of the homeless legislation.

South Africa

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the procedures operated by the Commission to ensure that EEC legislation is adhered to by member states, with particular reference to the South African sanctions measures; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Commission is in no doubt of our commitment to implementing Community legislation, nor about our concern that it should be adhered to similarly by other member states.

Young People (Inner Cities)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she has any proposals to introduce a consultation programme as part of the review into the effects of policies of a number of Government Departments towards young people who leave home and come to live in the inner cities;

(2) which Government Departments are involved in reviewing the effects of those Departments' policies towards young people who leave home and go and live in the inner cities; and which Department is taking the lead.

The Prime Minister: The main Departments involved in these discussions are the Department of the Environment, which has a co-ordinating role, the Department of Health, the Department of Employment, the Department of Social Security, the Home Office and the Department of Education and Science. When we have fully considered the issues, appropriate consultation arrangements will be made.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what arrangements she has made for the representation of Scotland in the review of the effects of a number of Departments' policies on young people who leave home and go to live in the inner cities;

(2) whether consideration of young people who leave home and live on the peripheral estates and in rural areas will be included in Departments' reviews of the effects of policies on young people who leave home and go and live in the inner cities.

The Prime Minister: Scottish Ministers are kept in touch with all discussions on this matter. The Scottish Development Department itself considers all situations which may contribute to homelessness.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to extend the poll tax to Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The local government arrangements in Northern Ireland are significantly different from those in the rest of the United Kingdom and we have no present plans to replace them.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 6 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an Audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

ENERGY

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the Government's plans to provide assurance in respect of the financial position of Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today laid before the House a minute informing the House of an assurance I propose to give to Nuclear Electric in respect of its financial position. Copies of the minute have been placed in the Library of the House.

WALES

Pre-school Playgroups

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to set up a fund from which money can be handed over to pre-school playgroups so that they can pay the proposed fees for inspection of playgroups alluded to in the new Children Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are no plans to set up a fund from which the costs of registration and annual inspection of pre-school playgroups may be met.

We have received a number of representations on this issue. The Government do not propose to use the powers contained in the Children Act, to charge playgroups high registration or inspection fees. It is proposed that the charge will either be a nominal one or it may be possible for playgroups to be exempt from the fees regulations. This is to be considered in more detail during the process of consultation on new guidance and regulations which will lead to the introduction of the Act.

Water Pollution

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the health implications for people eating substantial amounts of fish from Lake Trawsfynydd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Annual assessments are made of the maximum dose of radioactivity received by people eating fish from Lake Trawsfynydd. The latest information shows that only 7 per cent. of the internationally recommended dose limit of 1 milliSievert was received in 1988 by the most exposed groups.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of Legionnaire's disease have occurred in the Mid Glamorgan health district in the past two years.

Mr. Grist: As cases of Legionnaire's disease are not notifiable, the information is not available centrally.

Park and Ride

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of British Rail concerning park and ride facilities in south Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. This is a matter for British Rail in consultation with the local authorities.

Skomer, Dyfed

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his decision regarding the designation of Skomer, Dyfed, as a marine nature reserve.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend expects to publish the requisite notice and draft order this month, with a statutory period of not less than 28 days within which representations on the draft order may be made. If at the end of that period there are no objections the order designating the area as a marine nature reserve may be made with or without modifications. If there are objections there is a statutory requirement either to hold a local inquiry or appoint a person to hear the objections before the order, with or without modifications, can be made.

Roads (Tolls)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the building of roads and the imposition of tolls by private companies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government wish to encourage greater private sector involvment in the provision of roads. The Green Paper "New Roads by New Means—Bringing in Private Finance" published in May 1989 set out our ideas. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will be publishing our response to the consultation shortly. Tolling is envisaged as the principal source of revenue for privately financed roads but in general road users will continue to have a choice between tolled privately financed roads and other roads. Where there is a monopoly, such as an estuarial crossing, the Goverment will impose some form of control on the level of the toll to be charged.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to detect cervical cancer at an early stage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: All district health authorities in Wales operate cervical screening services for women aged 20 to 64 based on computerised call and recall, which are designed to detect both pre-cancerous changes and the early stages of cervical cancer. Their efforts have been supported by a total of £1·3 million of recurring Welsh Office funds and, in addition, a further £390,000 has recently been allocated for the purchase of additional equipment. Welsh Office officials are continuing to work with health authority managers and clinicians to ensure maximum effectiveness of the programme.

Integrated Development Operation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement as to the allocation of funds originally intended for the integrated development operation for Powys, Gwynedd and Dyfed.

Mr. Peter Walker: In 1988 the European Commission allocated £108 million of European regional development fund grant to Dyfed, Gwynedd, Powys, and £30·5 million has already been committed to projects in the area. The Commission has not yet taken a decision on the allocation of additional funds from the European social and agricultural guidance funds which will convert the original programme into an integrated development operation.

Businesses

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many (a) small businesses, (b) medium-sized businesses and (c) large businesses are registered as employers in Wales;

(2) what is the definition in terms of members employed of (a) a small business, (b) a medium-sized business and (c) a large business registered in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: There is no single, accepted definition of small, medium or large businesses in terms of their employment. However, a breakdown of census of employment data units in Wales over a wide range of employment size bands is as follows:

Numbers of Census of Employment Data Units with employees in Wales: September 1987

Size of units (Number of employees)	Number of units[1] (thousands)
1 to 10	36·2
11 to 24	7·7
25 to 49	2·9
50 to 99	1·4
100 to 199	0·8
200 to 499	0·4
500 to 999	0·2
1,000 or more	0·1
All sizes	49·7

[1] The figures relate only to data units with employees. Sole proprietors and Her Majesty's Forces are excluded. Also excluded are agriculture and horticulture holdings. Some worksites may comprise several data units because of the way the information is collected eg because of different pay arrangements for weekly and monthly paid staff.

Source: 1987 Census of Employment.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many small businesses in Wales have taken advantage of the services offered by the business improvement scheme and the enterprise initiative with respect to preparations for the single market in 1992.

Mr. Peter Walker: A total of 2,362 Welsh companies have applied for assistance under the enterprise initiative consultancy schemes, of which 2,208 have benefited from the initial business review. Since June 1989, the business review has automatically included specific questions and guidance on the implications of the single European market.

The enterprise initiative consultancy schemes are only one part of the Government's efforts to ensure that small businesses are aware of the importance of the single market. My Department's exports branch staff regularly raises such issues in its contacts with business while the single market unit provides guidance on all aspects of the single market. Since January 1989, the Welsh Office has provided speakers at seminars or conferences on 89 occasions, including a series of 14 Welsh Office seminars currently under way.

In total, some 3,425 grants, totalling £10 million, were offered under the business improvement services scheme, which operated from December 1984 to March 1989. It is not possible to provide information on how many of these were relevant to single market issues.

Eye Tests

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total number of eye tests carried out in Wales annually from 1985 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Grist: The number of eye tests carried out in Wales which were paid for by the family practitioner committees for each financial year were as follows:

	Number
1985-86	600,714
1986-87	626,644
1987-88	697,280
1988-89	733,469

Most of the sight tests since April 1989 will have been private transactions and statistical information on these is not available centrally. The Government have commissioned a survey of sight tests to cover the period from Christmas 1989 to 31 March 1990. The report on the survey results will be placed in the Library of the House of Commons, some time in early summer.

Dental Treatment

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total numbers of individual appointments kept at dentists' surgeries in the Principality annually from 1985 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available.

Colliery Waste

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take measures to bring together the relevant authorities to prepare for the immediate removal of the Albion colliery waste tip above the village of Cilfynydd in Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. Grist: The relevant authorities, the Mid Glamorgan county council, as owners of the land, and the Welsh Development Agency, which would provide funding, are already discussing the best course of action for dealing with the remains of the Albion tip.

Flooding

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take measures to bring together the relevant authorities in Mid Glamorgan to undertake the remedial work needed to ensure that there will be no repeat of the flooding suffered by householders and owners of commercial premises in Pontypridd and Telapod in 1990.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the relevant authorities to resolve, but I understand that they have met to discuss how a solution may be best achieved.

Water Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for (a) Langland bay and (b) Limeslade bay (i) the dates in 1989 when total coliforms and E. Coli samples were taken, (ii) the corresponding total coliforms and E. Coli results for each date and (iii) the EEC Bathing Waters Directive (76/160/EEC) conforming level for both total coliforms and E. Coli.

Mr. Grist: The information is as follows:

	Langland Bay		Limeslade Bay

A bathing water conforms with the bacteriological standards of the EC bathing water directive if 95 per cent. of samples taken do not exceed 10,000 total coliforms per 100 ml and 2,000 E.Coli per 100 ml.

Steel

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list with dates meetings at ministerial or senior official level between the Welsh Office and British Steel since privatisation;

(2) if he will list with dates the meetings he has had with the chairman of British Steel since privatisation;

(3) if he, any of his Ministers, or senior officials had discussions with British Steel about its current capital investment programme before that programme was finalised.

Mr. Peter Walker: There have been no formal discussions between myself, my ministerial colleagues or senior officials at the Welsh Office and the chairman or other senior officials of British Steel since privatisation, although public life in Wales provides frequent opportunities for informal meetings and discussions on a range of issues. British Steel's capital investment programme is a matter for the commercial judgment of the company.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Waste Disposal

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will examine the effectiveness of current legislation relating to dumping, tipping, and land infilling; and if he will consider bringing forward fresh proposals about (i) the unsightly desecration of the countryside, (ii) destruction of wildlife habitats and (iii) the problems of recycling.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The existing legislation in Northern Ireland on waste management is at present under review. I intend to consult district councils later this year with proposals for improved powers to control waste disposal.

The powers will include measures to minimise any detrimental effects of landfill on the amenity of the countryside and to ensure site restoration after disposal operations cease. Proposals will be put forward for more recycling of waste.

Fisheries Research

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish (a) the draught and tonnage of the fisheries research vessel Lough Foyle, (b) the type of fish covered by research carried out by the vessel since it came into the possession of the Northern Ireland authorities, (c) the number of full-time crew employed on the vessel, (d) the number of scientists employed on the vessel, (e) the number of other staff employed on the vessel, (f) the number of staff employed at the shore establishment and which directly support the vessel, (g) the port at which the vessel is based, (h) the sea area which is covered by research cruises on behalf of the Northern Ireland authorities, (i) the number of days spent at sea in each year since the vessel came into the possession of the Northern Ireland authorities and (j) the costs attributed to the vessel in each such year, or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The information is as follows:

Portavogie Harbour

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why access to Portavogie harbour was blocked in the evenings of Friday 16 and Saturday 17 February; how many fishing boats had to anchor outside the harbour entrance and how many were within the harbour; whether Portavogie harbour was occupied to its full capacity that weekend; and how many fishing boats were damaged that weekend.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 1 March 1990]: One fishing vessel is known to have suffered damage during that weekend when she broke her moorings in the early hours of Monday morning. The mooring basins were occupied substantially in excess of their design capacity. Two vessels had to berth at the eastern breakwater in the outer harbour and approximately 80 vessels were berthed within the mooring basins or alongside the north pier. No fishing vessels had to anchor outside the harbour. During the evenings of Friday 16 and Saturday 17 February, the entrance to Portavogie harbour was not blocked although access to the mooring basins was not possible as the area was fully utilised.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many councillors there are in Northern Ireland; and how many of these are women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 5 March 1990]: Of the 564 councillors currently in office, 64 are women. Two council seats are vacant.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Biological Warfare

128. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of biological warfare proliferation amongst developing countries.

129. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of biological warfare proliferation amongst developing countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are concerned about the possible development of biological weapons in several developing countries. We believe this is taking place, despite the 1972 biological weapons convention, which bans the production and possession of biological and toxin weapons, and to which over 100 states are party. It is not, however, our practice to comment on the detailed information available to the Government on such matters.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether talks have been instigated between Her Majesty's Government and the new Somali Government with a view to encouraging the conditions under which Britain might be able to restore aid to Somalia.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had a useful discussion with the new Somali Foreign Minister, Mr. Ahmed Jama Abdulle, on 23 February during which he encouraged the new Somali Government to persevere in pursuing the goals that they have set themselves of improved human rights observance, achievement of national reconciliation, liberalisation of the constitution, and economic reform.

Ethiopia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much famine relief has now been sent to Ethiopia by Her Majesty's Government; and what percentage has arrived in Ethiopia so far.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since mid-1989 we have made bilateral commitments via British NGOs of food aid totalling 44,250 tonnes, at a cost of some £10 million, together with other bilateral emergency aid commitments totalling £4 million. A total of 15,850 tonnes of food have already arrived, a further 14,700 tonnes are due for delivery before the end of April and the balance thereafter. Of non-food commitments our expectation was that about half would be delivered by the end of April but this is subject to the port of Massawa returning to normal functioning.

Arms Reduction

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to attend the next six-monthly meeting arranged by his Department with non-governmental organisations to discuss arms control, disarmament and non-proliferation matters.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs sees no reason to change the customary practice whereby these meetings are chaired by the responsible Minister of State.

Hungary

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his meeting with Hungarian Ministers in Budapest on 27 February to 1 March, he raised (a) the forthcoming nuclear non-proliferation treaty fourth review conference, (b) energy and environmental protection technological assistance for Hungary and (c) joint ventures between Hungary and the United Kingdom on the environmental clean-up in Hungary.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his visit to Spain on 26 February, he raised the matter of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with the Spanish Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent visit to the United Nations in New York, he raised the issue of the forthcoming fourth review conference of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty with (a) the Secretary-General, (b) officials of the United Nations, (c) the United Kingdom permanent representative or (d) any of his counterparts.

Mr. Waldegrave: This issue was not raised during my right hon. Friend's visit.

United Nations Disarmament Handbook

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in regard to the distribution in the United Kingdom and dependent territories of the United Nations annual disarmament handbook and periodical disarmament review.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no arrangements for public distribution of these publications.

Diplomats

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by year since 1979 the names of officials in his Department employed on diplomatic duties who have been (a) suspended from duty or (b) dismissed from the service; what offence they committed; and of those listed, if he will show in his answer, those who were fully reinstated to diplomatic duties.

Mr. Sainsbury: As a general principle, Government Departments do not disclose to third parties personal information relating to their employees, without the consent of the employee concerned.

Mr. Andrew Balfour

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 24 January, Official Report, column 686, if he is yet in a position to make a statement on Mr. Andrew Balfour's future in the diplomatic service.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Balfour has been informed as recently as 23 February that his future is still under consideration and that we will be in touch with him shortly regarding the outcome.

Daphne Parish

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what negotiations his Department has had with the Iraqi authorities over the forthcoming trial of British citizen Daphne Parish charged with spying, and what assistance will be given by his Department for her defence.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made almost 50 representations to the Iraqi authorities on Mrs. Parish's behalf since the arrest last September, and have been in close contact with her family throughout.

In response the Iraqi authorities have assured us that Mrs. Parish's lawyer will be given proper access to her and her case file before the trial takes place, and that a representative from the embassy will be able to attend the trial. We look to the Iraqi Government to ensure that the trial is a fair one and that Mrs. Parish has the opportunity to present a full defence.

Czechoslovakia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent visit to Czechoslovakia, the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), discussed verification of demilitarisation with the Czech authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: I did not.

Miss Toi Kwanran

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when the Bankok entry clearance officer's statement of refusal of entry concerning Miss Toi Kwanran, FCO Ref. GV100/6949 was forwarded (a) to his Department in London and (b) to the immigration appeals office;

(2) when the entry clearance officer's explanatory statement of refusal of entry was prepared in Bankok concerning Miss Toi Kwanran, who wishes to join her husband Mr. Neil Houghton of 32 Skelwith drive, Barrow.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members of 14 December 1988, I have referred the questions to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. My hon. Friend will receive a reply from the unit as soon as possible.

Angola

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the question of the withdrawal of Russian military advisers from Angola with Russian Government representatives in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have discussed the presence of the Soviet military advisers in Angola with the Soviet Government on a number of occasions, most recently on 13 February in Moscow. Withdrawal of the advisers would promote the cause of peace in Angola.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Deaf-blind Children

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional provision is being planned for the training of teachers of deaf-blind children.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The cost of training teachers of deaf-blind children is already provided for within the national priority areas within the LEA training grants scheme and consequently attracts financial support at the higher rate.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what consideration he has given to providing financial assistance to voluntary organisations to provide educational services, including pre-school services, for deaf-blind children;

(2) what financial support is being offered to local education authorities which wish to set up family centres as recommended in the policy statement, "Educational Provision for Deaf-Blind Children";

(3) what plans his Department has to offer financial support to local education authorities to enable them to carry out the recommendations made in the policy statement "Educational Provision for Deaf-Blind Children";

(4) what responses he has received from local education authorities to his Department's policy statement "Educational Provision for Deaf-Blind Children";

(5) what steps are being taken by his Department to follow up his Department's policy statement "Educational Provision for Deaf-Blind Children" published in March 1989.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for educational provision for deaf-blind children rests with local education authorities. The Department's policy statement on the educational needs of these children is intended to provide a framework within which local education authorities and bodies responsible for non-maintained schools will be able to plan services and provision for deaf-blind children. The Department will be following up this document later in the year, to see what progress has been made by authorities towards providing for the needs of deaf-blind children. It is for individual authorities, in the light of local circumstances, to decide upon the allocation of resources for the provision for deaf-blind children from the total funds available.

Manchester Local Education Authority

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to meet representatives of Manchester local education authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend recently visited Manchester LEA. I have myself agreed to meet a delegation from the authority.

National Curriculum

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the arrangements for assessing pupils' achievements under the national curriculum.

Mr. MacGregor: The Secretary of State for Wales and I have today broadly endorsed the recommendations of the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) about arrangements for administering assessments in the core subjects of the national curriculum at key stage 1.

We have in particular accepted the council's advice that it should have responsibility for the national administration of the assessment arrangements; and that the local responsibility should rest generally with local education authorities (LEAs). We believe that this should apply to key stage 2 as well as key stage 1. We do not propose to prescribe in detail how the assessment arrangements should be implemented. In our view, effectiveness will best be secured by arrangements which, whilst conforming to the overall criteria of national policy, take account of LEAs' local circumstances and their existing patterns of organisation for monitoring and evaluating the performance of their schools.

LEAs and schools will need to make appropriate provision within the resources available to them for the establishment of these assessment arrangements as an integral part of the national curriculum. We have provided specific grant support to help redirect resources to these new priorities in 1990-91. We propose to extend this support in later years, and will be announcing details as soon as possible after Easter, following consultation with the local authorities. As a means of securing effective planning within the framework of national policy, we intend to make it a condition of grant that LEAs underpin their bids with coherent national curriculum assessment implementation plans.

A draft order under section 4(2)(c) of the Education Reform Act, setting out the proposed statutory requirements, will be published around Easter, and submitted to the House in final form by November 1990 in readiness for the first statutory assessments in summer 1991.

These arrangements are an important element in ensuring that the national curriculum does raise standards of teaching and learning in our schools.

I am arranging for copies of SEAC's advice and of my reply to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HEALTH

NHS Expenditure

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a breakdown of National Health Service spending per capita in relation to both capital and revenue spending by district health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: Tables showing district based figures of average total revenue and capital expenditure per head of resident population for 1988-89, the latest year available, have been placed in the Library.

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all appropriate cost headings taken into account by health authorities in determining the true cost of in-house laundering and dry-cleaning facilities.

Mr. Freeman: We expect health authorities to take account of all relevant expenditure in determining the cost of their in-house laundering and dry cleaning facilities.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what capital expenditure has been incurred by health authorities on the purchase of new laundering and dry-cleaning equipment over the past two years;

(2) what proportion of the capital expenditure incurred on the purchase of new laundry and dry-cleaning machinery and on the construction of new and renovation of existing laundry facilities over the last two years was for the creation of additional laundry capacity.

Mr. Freeman: Capital expenditure incurred by health authorities on the purchasing of laundry and dry cleaning equipment over the last two years is as follows:

1987-88	2,350,000
1988-89	2,069,000

It is for health authorities to determine the laundry facilities required to meet their needs.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what capital expenditure has been incurred on the building of new National Health Service laundries and the renovation of existing laundry facilities over the last two years.

Mr. Freeman: No new National Health Service laundries have been built in the last two years. Renovation of existing laundries is a matter for local health authorities.

Business Rates

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of uniform business rate to be paid for each district health authority and special health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not held centrally about the contribution in lieu of the uniform business rate to be paid in respect of individual district health authorities. The estimated contributions for London postgraduate special health authorities to be paid in 1990-91 are as follows:

SHA	1990-91 Contribution in lieu of the Uniform Business Rate
	(£000s)
Hospital for Sick Children	588
National Hospital for Nervous Diseases	283
Moorfields Eye Hospital	118
Bethlem Royal and Maudsley	267
National Heart and Chest	232
Royal Marsden	241
Hammersmith and Queen Charlottes	654
Eastman Dental	62

Nuclear Weapons Testing

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any communication over the past three months from his counterpart in the Soviet Union on the subject of the health effects of nuclear weapons testing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. In December last, I received a letter from Mr. E. Chazov, Minister of Public Health of the USSR, about nuclear weapons testing. I sent a reply on 19 January.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he requested that any official papers concerning public health effects of atmospheric atomic weapons tests be withheld from publication on 1 January under sections 3(4) and 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Ugilec

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to initiate a study of the potential adverse health effects on (a) the general public and (b) the production work force on the development of the chemical ugilec.

Mr. Freeman: The Commission of the European Communities has recently made a proposal to the Council of Ministers for a directive to prohibit the marketing and use of ugilec 141 and ugilec 121 in the Community. I understand that neither of these substances has been used to a significant extent in this country nor has either been manufactured here. However, the Government will be pressing for a full assessment, at the Community level, of the risks posed by these substances compared with the risks of PCBs which they are intended to replace.

GP Drug Budgets

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report details of cash limits on general practitioners' drug budgets that he plans to introduce in the next 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to introduce cash limits on GP drug budgets.

AIDS

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to change the current methods of funding AIDS education and research.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

NHS Reform

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that all working papers, implementation documents, consultative documents, departmental circulars and other publications in regard to the implementation of (a) the National Health Service aspects and (b) the care in the community aspects of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill and the associated White Papers shall be numbered sequentially and shall be available in the Vote Office and the Library, together with a comprehensive list of all such publications which is brought up to date from time to time.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All relevant documents are already placed in the Vote Office or Library as appropriate.

Goodmayes Hospital, Essex

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions his Department has drawn from investigations into the causes of the recent outbreak of food poisoning at the Goodmayes hospital, Essex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman: This is a matter for North East Thames regional health authority; in implementing its food hygiene policy, the region has taken note of the recommendations in the report into the outbreak of food poisoning at Goodmayes hospital.

Vasectomies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions his Department has drawn from the retrospective study into the possible connection between vasectomy operations and the development of testicular cancer, undertaken at Bangour central hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am advised that this study provides no conclusive evidence of a causal association between vasectomy and testicular cancer.

Condoms

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will introduce mandatory kite-marking of condoms on sale in Britain, to conform to the British Standard Institution's requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to make the new standard mandatory, although the matter is under review while an international standard is being considered.

The standard for condoms set by the British Standards Institute (BS 3704.1989) was issued on 30 March 1989. It has been approved under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which makes it easier for action to be taken, for example, by trading standards officers, against suppliers of condoms which do not meet the standard.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he will define the necessary level of senior professional staff involvement in the management of the hospitals in assessing applications for National Health Service trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Each application will be judged on its own merits taking into account local circumstances.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the types of organisations he will expect regional health authorities to consult on National Health Service trust applications;

(2) what procedures regional health authorities will be required to follow in local consultations on National Health Service trust applications.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It will be for regional health authorities to determine locally the detailed arrangements to be made for consultation on NHS trust applications. We would, however, expect them to seek the views of district health authorities, the staff of the unit concerned, general practitioners, community health councils, and the local community.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he will be issuing on the format of National Health Service trust applications.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An outline application document was circulated on 16 August 1989, under EL(89)(MB)148, and has been placed in the Library.

Abortions

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions have been performed by the procedure of killing the unborn baby by an injection of intra-cardiac potassium chloride administered through the wall of the womb.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 February 1990]: There were 15 abortions recorded in England and Wales during 1988 where an injection of intra-cardiac potassium chloride was administered through the wall of the womb.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pregnancy terminations were made after 24 weeks in the last year.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The latest complete year for which data are available is 1988. In that year, the number of terminations performed after 24 weeks gestation in England and Wales was 22. The provisional figure for the first nine months of 1989 is 17.

NHS Reform

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of any firms of outside consultants and the terms of their contracts employed by his Department in connection with the National Health Service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 27 February 1990, c. 127-28]: I regret that the following details of consultants used for the launch of "Working for Patients" in 1989 were inadvertently omitted.

NML Presentations Limited—To assist with the launch of the White Paper.

NML Presentations Limited—To assist with the launch of the Self Governing Hospitals initiative.

Kingsley Lord—To assist with the development of an NHS Communications Programme.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving income support in the areas covered by the (a) Poplar, (b) Stepney and (c) Shoreditch Department of Social Security offices; and how many in Tower Hamlets as a whole.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table.

	Local office	Income support live load[1]
(a)	Poplar	13,680
(b)	Stepney	8,901
(c)	Shoreditch	9,917

Tower Hamlets is served by four social security offices—the three listed in the table and Hackney local office. The total income support live load[1] for these four offices is 47,870.

[1] Source: 100 per cent. of the cases in action on 30 November 1989. These figures include a number of cases where benefit has ceased but other action on the case is continuing.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 18 December 1989, Official Report, column 68, he will list the six accountancy firms and provide details of the payments made to them during 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information about the five accountancy firms employed by the Department is set out in the table. The firms have been employed on accountancy-orientated tasks which includes work on management information systems.

	1988-89 £	1989-90 to date £
Touche Ross	73,647	53,112
Price Waterhouse	380,000	236,000
BDO Binder Hamlyn		34,063
Peat Marwick McLintock		19,603
Ernst Young	25,404	85,863

I regret that the sixth firm referred to in the answer of 18 December at column 68 was a management consultancy firm included in error, which has not been employed on accountancy related work.

Pensioners

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to meet pensioners' representatives to discuss pensions, standing charges, concessionary fares and other matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We regularly meet representatives from pensioners' organisations. Most recently my right hon. Friend the Minister of State accompanied the Prime Minister at a meeting with a delegation from the National Pensioners' Convention and discussed a range of issues of concern to them.

Local Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his answer on 14 February, Official Report, column 298, he will now provide the information on single payments and social fund expenditure by local offices in machine-readable form to the Library.

Mr. Scott: Information in the form requested is not currently available. However, we hope to make available details of social fund expenditure in a machine-readable form early in the new financial year.

Disability

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many deaf people are in receipt of (a) disability premium and (b) severe disability premium.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available. However, in May 1988, the latest date for which information is available, 248,000 income support claimants were receiving the disability premium; and 35,000 the severe disability premium.

Taxable Incomes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the total number of families with children whose taxable incomes are below the income tax thresholds; how many are in paid work; how many are receiving income support; and how many are receiving invalidity benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 17 January 1990]: The number of families with children in 1987, the latest year for which information is available, whose taxable income was below the income tax threshold was about 1·5 million. Of these, 300,000 were in paid work, 100,000 received invalidity benefits and all but about 30,000 received supplementary benefit.

Notes:

1. Paid work is defined as where either the head or the spouse earns more than £4·00 per week.
2. Invalidity benefits included are:
   - Invalidity pension/allowance
   - Non-contributory Invalidity pension
   - Statutory sick pay
   - Sickness/industrial injuries benefit

THE ARTS

British Library

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what financial assistance he is providing to the British library (a) to help it relocate 300 staff from London to Yorkshire and (b) to purchase new buildings at Boston Spa.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 1 March 1990]: Relocation of staff from London to Yorkshire is part of the library's requirement for its future operations and is based on best value for money. The costs would normally be found from the library's grant-in-aid. Exceptionally, because the move will bring significant savings in long-term running costs, the Government are prepared in principle to allow the British library to retain up to half the receipts from the sale of the building which it currently occupies at Store street in London as a contribution to the costs of constructing a new building at Boston Spa in Yorkshire and the relocation of staff.

This is subject to a satisfactory proposal for major expenditure commitments being presented by the board for my approval in the normal way.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what he estimates will be the costs of rehousing 300 British library staff from London to Boston Spa in (a) capital, for purchasing or existing buildings and (b) personnel costs in relocation allowances.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 1 March 1990]: Building costs at Boston Spa are estimated by the British library to be in the range of £2·5 million to £5 million. Final figures will depend on the construction strategy chosen by the library after further investigation. Personnel costs in relocation allowances are estimated to be £1 million.

Export of Goods

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter from Mr. Neil Chalmers, director of the natural history museum to him, dated 2 February, concerning the Export of Goods (Control Order) 1987.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 2 March 1990]: I have today laid in the Library of the House a copy of the letter of 2 February to me from Mr. Neil Chalmers, director of the natural history museum.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what action he will take to make it possible for "Lizzie", a 340 million-year-old fossil, to remain in Britain; and if he will urgently bring forward an amendment order to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987 to bring natural objects such as fossils within its ambit.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 2 March 1990]: Statutory responsibility for export licensing rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. Any amendment to Export of Goods (Control) Orders, the latest of which is SI 1989/2376, is therefore a matter for the Secretary of State. However, I have asked the reviewing committee on the export of works of art, which advises me on such matters, to submit recommendations about the export control of natural heritage items, so that I can advise my right hon. Friend on this matter.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Eqeal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Luce [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents, who wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, has encouraged the development of a range of high-quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 5 March 1990]: My Department has issued a policy statement about sexual harassment to its staff. The statement explains that all sexual harassment is unacceptable and outlines the complaints procedure. One complaint has been reported in the past five years. The individual initially received an oral warning. Her behaviour however continued, and following a written warning she resigned from the Civil Service as further disciplinary proceedings were instigated.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Money Management Group

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about the Money Management group of companies; their shareholders and directors and any current investigations being undertaken into their activities.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to those companies controlled by Mr. Adrian Ward. Information on Money Management Financial Services Ltd. and Money Management Associates Ltd. is on the companies public files at Companies House. The chief executive advises me that Mrs. Linzi Ward is shown as director of both companies. In each case, the two subscribers to the memoranda of association, Instant Companies Ltd. and Swift Incorporations Ltd., are shown as the only shareholders. I understand that Adrian Ward, trading under the name Money Management Financial Services, holds a licence issued by the Director General of Fair Trading under the Consumer Credit Act 1974. My Department does not hold records of other companies operated by Mr. Ward. MMFS had an interim authorisation which was withdrawn on 26 February. This is a matter for FIMBRA and the SIB.

As regards the question of investigations, my Department does not comment on the affairs of various companies.

Company Audits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to amend the Companies Act 1989 so as to require the supervisory bodies to ascertain whether or not an auditor has received more than 15 per cent. of his income from one client.

Mr. Redwood: No. Under the Act the Secretary of State may recognise a supervisory body only if, among other things, it appears to him that it has adequate arrangements and resources for the effective monitoring and enforcement of compliance with its rules. Such arrangements would need to cover any rules that required company auditors to observe the body's guidance on the proportion of income which they may receive from any one client.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward legislation to prevent individuals criticised by his Department's inspectors from acting as auditors for companies.

Mr. Redwood: No, but under part II of the Companies Act 1989, the Secretary of State may not recognise a supervisory body unless it appears to him that it has adequate rules and practices designed to ensure that company auditors are fit and proper persons for appointment.

EC Structural Funds

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of "The Structural Funds of the European Communities", compiled by Graeme de la Mer for the London chamber of commerce.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The publication in question is available for companies to inspect in the world aid section of my Department. The world aid section is a central source of information on commercial opportunities arising from projects financed by the European structural funds in the other member states of the Community.

Funerals

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the 1989 Office of Fair Trading report entitled "Funerals", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A number of right hon. and hon. Members have written to the Secretary of State and me recently about the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) 1989 report on funerals. Most of them had seen a report prepared by the National Association of Funeral Directors (NAFD) detailing its criticisms of the OFT report.

The OFT report was the result of a monitoring survey of the effectiveness of the NAFD's code of practice. The Director General of Fair Trading has a duty under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to encourage industry associations to adopt codes of practice which promote and safeguard the interests of consumers. In carrying out this duty he acts independently and the report on funerals is therefore a matter for him. I know that he is concerned about the comments made in the NAFD report and he has prepared a comprehensive response. I shall ask him to write to the right hon. Member.

Electronics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had from the electronics industry on the subject of skills shortages.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been no direct representations from the electronics industry on skills shortages during the past two months, but there have, in the past, been approaches with regard to IT skills shortages. In recognising this my Department announced support of up to £440,000 over three years for the recently launched Women into Information Technology (WIT) campaign, where this support is appropriately matched by industry. My Department supports a programme aimed at stimulating the production of distance learning video courses on subjects directly relating to skills in microelectronics, information technology, and their applications. Support is also being given to an industry-further education collaborative programme aimed at producing interactive video courses relating, in the main, to IT skills.

My Department also has an information technology advisory board (ITAB) with representatives from industry, commerce and academia. One of ITAB's support committees advises specifically on education and training and comments on IT skills issues.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the European Community's plans in respect of animal testing for cosmetics.

Mr. Forth: The proposed amendments to the cosmetics directive are designed to improve the level of public safety. The United Kingdom has succeeded in limiting the animal testing required to the essential minimum.

European Commission

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met his counterparts in the European Commission; and what topics were discussed.

Mr. Redwood: I meet European Community Ministers and Commissioners on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues.

Manufacturing Productivity

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has carried out any studies into the effects of Government regulations on productivity improvements in manufacturing industry and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department co-ordinates the Government's deregulation initiative, under which individual Departments review existing regulatory requirements and scrutinise new proposals in order to minimise any unnecessary constraints these may impose on business performance. In assessing the costs to business of complying with new regulations, Departments have particular regard to the impact on the management resources of small firms.

Japanese Companies

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of Britain's manufactured exports are made by Japanese-owned companies.

Mr. Redwood: I regret that the information is not available.

Steel

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many meetings since privatisation there have been between (a) Ministers, and (b) senior officials, and the chief executive or other board members of British Steel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the flotation of British Steel my noble Friend the Minister for Trade has met a member of the company's board in connection with an overseas trade mission.

There have been meetings between officials in various parts of the Department and members of the British Steel board since the flotation on a variety of subjects, but the precise number could be established only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list with dates meetings between himself and the chairman of British Steel since privatisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Neither I nor my predecessor has formally met the chairman of British Steel since the flotation of the company.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has formulated a policy view about a single plate mill strategy in the steel industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Internal Market Council held on 22 February.

Mr. Redwood: The Council reached a satisfactory agreement on the main agenda item: a directive on public procurement in the water, transport, telecommunications and energy sectors. This represents an important step towards the liberalisation of public procurement in the Community. The Council also received a progress report from the Commission on further work in this area.

The Council also agreed a timetable for future work towards liberalisation of the insurance market in the Community, and discussed amendments to the fourth and seventh company law directives.

This was a satisfactory first Council under the Irish Presidency, which maintains the momentum on the single market built up during the French Presidency.

EC-USSR Trade Agreement

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the EC-USSR trade and economic co-operation agreement.

Mr. Ridley: Following discussions in the Community, this agreement was signed after the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 December. While welcoming the conclusion of this significant agreement the Government very much regret that they had not allowed enough time for the parliamentary scrutiny process to be completed before they felt bound to give their consent to the signature of this agreement. Unfortunately, since both the Soviets and our EC partners attached so much importance to the early signature of this agreement any attempt to delay it would not have been understood and could have put at risk any commercial benefit that the United Kingdom may stand to gain from the momentum and climate of good will which the agreement has generated.

I hope that the House will understand, therefore, why the Government agreed, exceptionally, to the signature of the agreement before the scrutiny process had been completed.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in support of the proposal by the Anglo-Greek Consortium to acquire the NESL Southwick shipyard for the purpose of vessel construction after 9 December 1993.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: I have received representations of support for this proposal from the hon. Member, British Shipbuilders, Sunderland metropolitan borough council and A and P Appledore International Limited. The Tyne and Wear development corporation expressed a preference for the use of Southwick rather than North Sands if the Anglo-Greek consortium's proposal were to go ahead.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 March 1990]: All my Department's management training courses, including those courses specific to women, deal with equal opportunities issues.

Staff are also able to attend a separate training course on equal opportunities, and are guided by my Department's policy statement and programme of action on equality of opportunity for women.

We do not have the figures available on the proportion of managers at grade six level and above who have received formal training on equal opportunities issues, but all have received guidance.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what child care provision his Department provides for pre-school age children of employees; what child care provision for school holidays or after-school care is provided for employees' children aged five years or over; what plans there are for increasing provision in the next five years; and how these are to be funded.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The DTI is considering arrangements for workplace child care for pre-school age children. We are, for example, giving strong financial support to an OMCS-led child care study considering the feasibility of interdepartmental nurseries in both central and outer London.

In conjunction with other Government Departments we organise holiday play schemes for five to 12-year-old children in London and Cardiff. Future provision will depend on the outcome of the OMCS-led study, and on other discussions.

Child care schemes are funded by the users. However, my Department expects to contribute to the start-up costs, and to provide ongoing financial support to running costs where this offers value for money and can be contained within departmental running costs.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what grade is his Department's equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 March 1990]: My Department's equal opportunities officer is a grade seven.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 March 1990]: Our recruitment and promotion policy and procedures are monitored regularly to ensure that they operate equitably for all groups of staff. My Department's equal opportunities officer is involved in that monitoring.

With women returners in mind, my Department is about to embark on a trial recruitment exercise for clerical staff in the Westminster area. Women will also benefit from a career break scheme including a definite right of return which my Department will be introducing shortly.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of civil servants in his Department are women at each of the grades (a) seven, (b) six, (c) five, (d) four, (e) three, (f) two and (g) one.

Mr. Forth: [holding answer 5 March 1990] The proportions as at 26 February 1990 were:

	Per cent
G1	0
G2	11
G3	4
G4	11
G5	12
G6	8
G7	12

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The policy of my Department is to regard any form of sexual harassment as totally unacceptable. Guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff. Five complaints have been reported in the past five years. Of these, one was withdrawn by the complainant before it was investigated, and two were found to have insufficient evidence to support further action. In the other two disciplinary charges were brought and penalties imposed.

Pin-ups

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The Department's existing guidance to staff on sexual harassment requires managers to take action where posters or photographs are displayed which seem likely to give offence.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average percentage of pay in profit-related pay schemes in each year; and what is their distribution.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information on actual payments of profit-related pay is not yet available.

Employer Stock Ownership

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the distribution by (a) size and (b) sector of firms with employer stock ownership plans;

(2) what is the number of employer stock ownership plans and employee share ownership trusts that have been set up in each of the last five years; how many employees are involved; and how much less corporation tax has been paid as a result.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue will not learn of the establishment of employee share ownership trusts of the kind defined in the Finance Act 1989 until claims for the tax relief provided by that legislation are received. Such claims may be made up to two years after the end of the period of account in which the relevant company contributions are made. None has yet been cleared.

I regret that information is not available on the extent and character of other arrangements which are also commonly, though imprecisely, known as employee share ownership plans.

As regards the operation of the 1,603 all-employee share schemes approved by the Inland Revenue up to 5 April 1989, however, some 2 million employees had been given shares or options over shares with an initial market value of some £5 billion by that date. Other information on these schemes is published in "Inland Revenue Statistics 1989".

European Investment Bank

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution the European Investment Bank made to underwriting the Channel tunnel project.

Mr. Ryder: The European Investment Bank approved a loan of £1 billion to the Channel tunnel project in 1987. The European Investment Bank has made no contribution to underwriting the loan. Security for the loan will be provided by the syndicate of banks co-ordinating the financing of Eurotunnel in the form of:

(a) Letters of credit from up to 20 first class commercial banks;

(b) A pro-rata share with the syndicate banks in the charges on the project revenues and assets.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are taken to prevent the misappropriation of the premium bond prize winners fund.

Mr. Ryder: There is no scope for misappropriating money from the premium bond prize fund. Prize draws are carried out under the strictest security and are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office and the Department for National Savings' own internal auditors. Winning numbers are selected wholly at random by ERNIE and this machine has been so designed that it cannot be programmed to generate any particular number. Tests to verify the randomness of the numbers selected are conducted by the Government Actuary after every prize draw. Prize draws and the verification of prizes against valid bonds are subject to strict testing, checking and security procedures. The bonds and stock office carries out checks to ensure that prizes are paid out only to the registered holders of winning bonds. Prizes are paid from the National Loans Fund, for which audited accounts are presented annually to Parliament. Numbers of all winning prizes are published in a monthly supplement to the London Gazette and copies are available for inspection at main post offices.

Taxation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) of 20 February, Official Report, columns 681-82, on investment income and earned income, if he will give the average sum per taxpayer reflected in the aggregate amounts for each taxpayer group.

Mr. Lilley: Estimates are given in the table. They are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are provisional. All estimates are subject to a large degree of uncertainty since some investment income on which tax is deducted at source is not reflected in the survey.

Average amounts of investment income and earned income

Bottom 50 per cent.	580	6,580	740	7,200
All taxpayers	1,320	12,190	1,720	13,310

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has for abolishing discriminatory provisions for purposes of taxation.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 March 1990]: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product total taxation was in June 1979 and today.

Mr. Ryder: Information is not available on a monthly basis. Information for the years 1979 and 1988 (the latest available) was given in the reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 8 January 1990, Official Report, column 558.

Gross National Product

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the gross national product per head of population in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that this information is not available. There are no estimates of gross national product which by definition includes income from assets held abroad. There are, however, estimates of gross domestic product which exclude such income. They are produced annually by the Central Statistical Office and the latest figures for these countries were published in Economic Trends of November 1989.

Income Tax (Wales)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of income tax collected in Wales in each of the five years up to 1988-89.

Mr. Lilley: Information for the period requested is available from 1984-85 to 1987-88 and covers residents of Wales. The estimates are in terms of liabilities rather than tax collected and are shown in the table.

Year	£ billion
1984-85	1·38
1985-86	1·39
1986-87	1·49
1987-88	1·51

VAT (Wales)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of value added tax collected in Wales in each of the five years up to 1988-89.

Mr. Ryder: Information on value added tax paid by businesses registered in Wales could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It would not reflect tax collected by businesses in Wales registered elsewhere in the United Kingdom and would include tax accounted for by businesses registered in Wales which carried on business elsewhere.

Mortgages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 12, what was the average increase in repayments per week on the average mortgage in each region between 1 June 1988 and today.

Mr. Lilley: The information is as follows.

Region	Average new mortgage[1]	Weekly payment[2]		Increase
		9·8 per cent. interest rate	14·5 per cent. interest rate
	£	£	£	£

[1] Third quarter 1989.
[2] Assuming endowment mortgage.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make provision for writing down against tax liabilities the increase in mortgage debts of individuals where incurred because of the rise in interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: I cannot comment on tax matters in advance of my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of local expenditure is raised (a) locally and (b) nationally.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to table 21.4.13 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1021).

Japanese Banks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Japanese banks have been granted a licence by the Bank of England to open a branch in London; and what reciprocal facilities have been granted to United Kingdom banks.

Mr. Ryder: The following Japanese banks have been authorised by the Bank of England to open branches in the United Kingdom:

Bank of Tokyo Ltd
Bank of Yokohama Ltd
Chuo Trust and Banking Company Ltd
Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank Ltd
Daiwa Bank Ltd

Fuji Bank Ltd
Hokkaido Takushoku Bank Ltd
Industrial Bank of Japan Ltd
Kyowa Bank Ltd
Long-Term Credit Bank of Japan Ltd
Mitsubishi Bank Ltd
Mitsubishi Trust and Banking Corporation
Mitsui Bank Ltd
Mitsui Trust and Banking Company Ltd
Nippon Credet Bank Ltd
Saitama Bank Ltd
Sanwa Bank Ltd
Sumitomo Bank Ltd
Sumitomo Trust and Banking Company Ltd
Taiyo Kobe Bank Ltd
Tokai Bank Ltd
Toyo Trust and Banking Company Ltd
Yasuda Trust and Banking Company Ltd

In addition the Bank of England has authorised United Kingdom incorporated subsidiaries of a further eight Japanese banks.

Five United Kingdom banks have branches in Japan. The Government are not aware of any United Kingdom bank currently seeking authorisation for banking activities in Japan.

Civil Service (Working Patterns)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many reports have been produced since July 1987 on the possibility of changing working patterns in the Civil Service.

Mr. Ryder: A report on the potential for developing more flexible working patterns in the Civil Service was produced by the Cabinet Office in September 1987. A copy was placed in the House of Commons Library at the time.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the status of the working patterns reports of September 1987; if he will list the recommendations of that report that were accepted by the Government; and if he will provide a progress report on their implementation.

Mr. Ryder: The report on working patterns was an internal research report which looked at the potential for developing more flexible working patterns in the Civil Service. It was not prescriptive. Departments have been encouraged to make use of the ideas and suggestions contained in the report, where these will help to meet the needs of the work and their staff more efficiently and effectively. A number are now taking forward initiatives in these areas.

National Loans Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which bodies have borrowed from the National Loans Fund over the last year.

Mr. Lilley: In the year to February 1990, the National Loans Fund has made most advances to the Public Works Loan Board. Loans have also been made to the following bodies:

New Town Development Corporations
Housing Corporations and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive Regional Water Authorities (pre-privatisation)
British Rail
Civil Aviation Authority
Crown Suppliers
Her Majesty's Stationery Office
Land Authority for Wales
North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board
Royal Mint
Scottish Development Agency
South of Scotland Electricity Board
Welsh Development Agency

Hotels and Guest Houses (Valuation)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he is giving to allowing valuation officers to assess hoteliers and guest house owners on supported profit figures.

Mr. Lilley: Valuation officers are required to determine the rateable value of hotels and guest houses having regard to the provisions of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. An estimate has to be made of the rent at which the property might reasonably be expected to be let from year to year, and profitability is one aspect that can be taken into account in appropriate cases.

Household Incomes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average household gross income in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland in 1989-90.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average household net income in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England in 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: Estimates for 1989-90 are not yet available.

Banking Services

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the Government's response to the Jack committee report on banking services, law and practice.

Mr. Ryder: It was announced last week that a committee has been set up under the chairmanship of Sir George Blunden to oversee the preparation of a code of banking practice by the British Bankers Association (BBA), the Building Societies Association (BSA), and the Association for Payment Clearing Services (APACS). This was the central recommendation of the review committee's report. I warmly welcome this initiative by the banks and building societies and am particularly pleased by their confirmation that the consumer interests will be fully consulted. The Government's response to the remainder of the recommendations in the review committee's report will be published shortly.

National Insurance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing information available to him on the national insurance contributions or equivalents paid by people in (a) Germany, (b) Italy, (c) France, (d) the United States of America, (e) Holland and (f) the United Kingdom, together with the income bands where appropriate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

Details concerning national insurance contributions or their equivalents for member states of the European Community are contained in the Department of Social Security's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities," the 1989 issue of which is available in the Library. For the USA the 1990 contribution rate for employers is 7·65 per cent. each and the rate for the self-employed is 15·3 per cent. The maximum annual contribution for both employers and employees is $3,924.45 for 1990. For the self-employed it is $7,848·90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information on sales to sitting tenants of public sector agencies in Scotland for the periods requested, other than 4th quarter 1989 for which figures are not yet available, is set out in the following table:

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish the figures for the number of recorded cases of (a) leukaemia and (b) non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in Dunoon and the surrounding area for each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The registered number of cases in the postcode area (which includes Dunoon for the period from 1968 to 1987 (latest available year) are as follows:

Training Schemes

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the level of grant given towards the employment training scheme to each Scottish district council in 1988-89, 1989-90 and the projected figures for 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: In employment training a basic training grant at a rate of £18 per trainee week is paid to organisations which have a contract as a training manager for employment training. In addition supplementary grants are payable to training managers to cover additional costs associated with the provision of project or higher cost training and are related to individual needs. The amounts paid to individual training managers either as basic training grants or supplementary grants depend on the number of trainees they can attract and the needs of the individual trainees. Fifteen district councils:

Angus
Argyll and Bute
Caithness
Clydesdale
Cumnock and Doon Valley
Dunfermline
East Kilbride
Hamilton
Kirkcaldy
Lochabar
Midlothian
Moray
North East Fife
Ross and Cromarty
Wigtown

are at present training managers, but it is not possible to estimate the amount of grant payments to each of these for the years in question.

Radon Gas

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the causes of high radon gas levels in Kincardine and Deeside district; if he will identify the areas particularly affected; and if he will summarise the assistance and advice available to householders.

Mr. Rifkind: Studies by the National Radiological Protection Board have indicated that the accumulation of higher than normal concentrations of radon in buildings is influenced by the uranium content and permeability of the underlying rocks and soils, and also by some characteristics of the buildings. Some of these factors combine in the Dee valley to cause higher levels of this naturally occurring gas in a small percentage of houses: such levels have been discovered in the areas of Aboyne, Ballater, Banchory, Braemar and Torphins.

The Scottish Office has arranged for the National Radiological Protection Board to provide information and a free radon measurement to any concerned householder in the Kincardine and Deeside district. In addition, grants continue to be available, through the present improvement grants system, for any remedial action which may be necessary.

Steel

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates when, with steel as the principal topic, he has met delegations from steelworkers and other organisations in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: During the last six months, my right hon. and learned Friend met a delegation of Ravenscraig shop stewards on 30 November 1989, a delegation of Scottish Labour Members of Parliament on 7 December 1989, and representatives of Strathclyde regional council and the Scottish Trades Union Congress on 8 January 1990.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list with dates the meetings he has had, or any of his Ministers or senior officials have had, with the chief executive or other board members of British Steel since privatisation.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman of British Steel on 26 October 1988. He met the chairman again, with his chief executive, on 26 October 1989.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he, any of his Ministers, or senior officials had discussions with British Steel about its current capital investment programme before that programme was finalised.

Mr. Lang: The capital investment programme of British Steel is a matter for the company.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has formulated an official policy on the issue of a single plate mill strategy in the steel industry.

Mr. Lang: The issue of a single plate mill strategy is a matter for British Steel. My right hon. and learned Friend has made clear his view that the company should give full and careful consideration to the case for investment in Scotland.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) of 28 February, Official Report, column 272, whether on 26 October 1989, or in the continuing contacts mentioned by him in Official Report, column 271, he raised with the chairman of British Steel its investment programme and future intentions towards Ravenscraig;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan of 28 February, Official Report, column 271, whether in his discussions with the chairman of British Steel on 26 October 1989 he raised the future of Dalziel works;

(3) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan of 28 February, Official Report, column 271, whether on 26 October 1989 the chairman of British Steel informed him that a plate mill was stored at Lackenby;

(4) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan of 28 February, Official Report, column 271, whether on 26 October 1989 he discussed with British Steel's chairman the issue of a single plate mill strategy;

(5) where his meeting was held with the chairman of British Steel on 26 October 1989; and how long the meeting lasted.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend's meeting with the chairman of British Steel was held in his office in Whitehall; it lasted about an hour. The detailed matters discussed are commercially confidential.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan of 28 February, Official Report, column 271, whether the continuing contact with British Steel since last October has been at ministerial or official level.

Mr. Lang: Both:

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan of 28 February, Official Report, column 271, what specific issues his Department has raised with British Steel in its continuing contact with that organisation.

Mr. Lang: The detailed matters raised by my right hon. and learned Friend's Department with British Steel are commercially confidential.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what correspondence he has received from British Steel since his meeting with the chairman of British Steel on 26 October.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received two letters from the chairman of British Steel, the contents of which are commercially confidential.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he received information from British Steel about (a) its intention to impose a production pause on Ravenscraig over the Christmas and new year holiday period, and (b) the latest production pause to be imposed on Ravenscraig.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend's officials received information from British Steel on 22 November 1989 about the first production pause and on 20 February 1990 about the latest production pause.

Pensioners

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many single pensioners are now eligible for payment of the poll tax who had (a) no liability for rates in 1987-88, (b) no liability for rates in 1988-89 and (c) liability for 20 per cent. rates in 1989-90.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 22 February 1990]: Information on the number of single pensioners in Scotland who are now liable for the community charge but who had no liability for rates in 1987-88 or 1988-89 is not available. This is because a number of pensioners had no liability to pay domestic rates, not as a result of the housing benefit they received, but, for example, because they lived in another person's house and made no payment towards the rates of that property. These pensioners were not entitled to housing benefit and therefore they would not have been identified by the housing benefit management information system. Our latest estimate for 1989-90 is that about 150,000 single pensioners in Scotland are receiving the maximum community charge rebate of 80 per cent.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate (a) the number of bed and breakfast establishments in Scotland, (b) the number which operate commercially for less than 100 nights per annum, (c) the number which have six or fewer beds for commercial let and (d) the number which meet both the criteria set out in categories (b) and (c) above.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 5 March 1990]: In order to be eligible for the rating exemption announced by my right hon. and learned Friend last week, bed and breakfast establishments must operate for fewer than 100 nights per annum or have six or fewer beds for commercial let.

The information requested is as follows and is taken from the register of the Scottish Tourist Board compiled for the purposes of taking an entry in the board's "Where to Stay" guides:

	Number
(a) Number of establishments	3,846
(b) Number which operate commercially for less than three months[1] per year	68
(c) Number which have six or fewer beds	2,943
(d) Number which meet criteria at both (b) and (c)	45

[1] For the purposes of the board guides, establishments are described as open for a given number of months in the year. No information is available on the number of days of opening.

Local Income Tax

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of preparing the answer of 27 February to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton), Official Report, columns 117-19.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 March 1990]: About £110.

Police Accommodation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he is making to the Scottish Police Federation following representations made to him concerning (a) the position of officers in provided accommodation and the introduction of a provided accommodation allowance and (b) updating of the force rent allowance; and when he expects to lay regulations governing the level of allowances.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 March 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend and I met the chairman and general secretary of the Scottish Police Federation on 8 February to hear their representations about the proposed arrangements to replace rent allowance with a new housing allowance.

In response to the representations of the Scottish Police Federation my right hon. and learned Friend has decided to make provision in the forthcoming regulations for an allowance of £300 a year to officers who were living on 31 March 1989 in accommodation provided by the police authority; this allowance will continue for three years or until the officer leaves provided accommodation, whichever is sooner.

The regulations will have the effect of permitting rent allowance reviews due in 1989 to proceed, but my right hon. and learned Friend is not persuaded that rent allowances should be updated in forces not due reviews in 1989.

The regulations are expected to be laid this week.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has submitted to the European Community Commission any detailed proposals for allocating an additional 1 per cent. of milk quota in 1990.

Mr. Gummer: My proposals were that quota should be allocated to producers who received awards from the Dairy Produce Quotas Tribunal which were scaled back and have not yet been fully implemented; to smaller producers; to producers in remote areas, principally the islands of Scotland and the Scilly Isles; and to new entrants. The Commission raised a number of points in connection with these proposals. With one exception, which concerns my proposal to lend quota to new entrants rather than grant it outright, all points of difficulty have now been satisfactorily resolved and I am awaiting formal Commission agreement. Regulations will then be laid before Parliament and the majority of the quota issued before the end of the current quota year.

Fishing Boat Grants

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he received the applications for fishing boats grants Nos. (1) UK/0/114/89, (2) UK/0/122/89, (3) UK/0/117/89 and (4) UK/0/113/89; when he expects to submit them to the European Commission; and if he will make a statement about the delay in release of these grant payments.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

Project number	Date application received	Date of Commission announcement of successful grant awards	Date claim received
UK/0/114/89	5 July 1988	31 March 1989	26 June 1989
UK/0/122/89	5 July 1988	31 March 1989	26 June 1989
UK/0/117/89	31 August 1988	31 March 1989	26 June 1989
UK/0/113/89	30 September 1988	31 March 1989	6 June 1989

The submission of individual claims for payment of grants is not permitted by the European Commission. The member state must be in receipt of a certain number of claims (usually 20 per cent. of the aid awarded in any one round) before they can be submitted to the Commission. We are now satisfied that an appropriate number of claims has been received to meet the Commission's requirements and payment can be expected shortly.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will initiate a programme of active surveillance of Britain's cattle stock involving veterinary surgeons making visits to farms, markets and slaughterhouses to identify cattle suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy or the early symptoms of the disease.

Mr. Maclean: There is already a programme of active surveillance carried out by veterinarians in the Ministry's state veterinary service, official veterinarians employed by local authorities and those in private practice.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has as to the transmissibility of (a) bovine spongiform encephalopathy and (b) scrapie through the consumption of bone or bone meal from affected animals.

Mr. Maclean: Epidemiological evidence shows that the most likely cause of BSE was the feeding to cattle of compound rations containing meat and bone meal which included material derived from sheep infected with scrapie.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of incidents where bulls at artificial insemination centres have been found to have contracted bovine spongiform encephalopathy, including the age of the bull, the breed and the artificial insemination centre.

Mr. Maclean: BSE has been confirmed in five Friesian bulls at AI centres. Their ages in months were 48, 55, 64, 67 and 71. It is not the practice to identify the premises where cases occur.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many progeny per year are normally expected from bulls at artificial insemination centres.

Mr. Maclean: A bull approved for use in artificial insemination might be expected to sire an average of 200 progeny, but it may be considerably more for an exceptional animal.

Live Animal Stock (Exports)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by year for the last 10 years, and by live animal stock (a) the number and (b) the value of stock exported by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: The number and value of live animal stock exported by the United Kingdom over the last 10 years are listed in the table.

Equine Meat Trade

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to restrict or ban the trade in horse, pony and donkey meat between the United Kingdom and other countries; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of the impact of the European single market on the trade in horse meat after 1992.

Mr. Curry: We have no proposals to restrict or ban the trade in horse, pony and donkey meat between the United Kingdom and other countries. Any such action would be contrary to article 34 of the treaty of Rome and thus illegal. The Commission's proposals in respect of the single European market contain no items specifically relating to trade in horse meat but envisage that the trade will continue after 1992.

The United Kingdom intends to press strongly in the EC negotiations on the welfare of live animals in transit for provisions which discourage the export of live horses and ponies from the United Kingdom for slaughter.

DEFENCE

NATO (Out of Area)

15. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the United Kingdom's armed forces in NATO's out-of-area capabilities.

47. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the United Kingdom's armed forces in NATO's out-of-area capability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO has no out-of-area role. The United Kingdom's armed forces do, however, maintain an out-of-area capability, as described in successive Statements on the Defence Estimates.

Community Charge

16. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from serving members of Her Majesty's forces about arrangements for paying the poll tax.

53. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from serving members of Her Majesty's forces about arrangements for paying the poll tax.

104. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from serving members of Her Majesty's forces about arrangements for paying the poll tax.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of representations about arrangements for the community charge.

Service Women

17. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to allow women into the Royal Horse Guards and the Royal Life Guards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Under the present deployment guidelines for women in the Army, women may be employed in peace and war in all posts except those where the primary role is direct combat. There are, therefore, no current plans for members of the WRAC to be employed in combat posts in the Household Cavalry, but other posts in these units may be open to them.

24. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to encourage the wider employment of service women.

113. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to encourage the wider employment of service women.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to encourage the wider employment of service women.

Mr. Tom King: We have over the last year announced plans to allow women to serve in surface ships of the Royal Navy; to increase the number of women in the Regular Army by up to 6,000 and to enable them to fill all posts other than those that would deploy to forward areas in war; to recruit women as pilots and navigators in the RAF; and to increase the number of women in ground trades in the RAF by 2,000. We are continuing to look for other areas of employment which may be opened up to women.

Land Holdings

18. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent of his Department's current land holding; and what plans he has to acquire further land.

29. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent of his Department's current land holding; and what plans he has to acquire further land.

65. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent of his Department's current land holding; and what plans he has to acquire further land.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes).

Northern Ireland

19. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the operations of those security forces in Northern Ireland responsible to him.

Mr. Tom King: The armed forces deployed in Northern Ireland in support of the RUC continue to make a substantial and essential contribution to the defeat of terrorism in the Province.

Trident

20. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the cost of the Trident programme is still to be expended; and what is his estimate of the annual running cost of one Trident submarine.

114. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the cost of the Trident programme is still to be expended; and what is his estimate of the annual running cost of one Trident submarine.

Mr. Alan Clark: Of the total currently estimated cost, about £6,000 million has yet to be spent, although some £2,000 million of that is already contractually committed. It is too early to say with any precision the likely running costs of the Trident force. They are not, however, expected to be significantly different from those of Polaris.

85. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made on the construction of the first two Vanguard-class Trident submarines.

Mr. Neubert: Construction of the first two Vanguard-class submarines at Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. is well advanced.

22. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence told the House when announcing the revised Trident cost estimate on 31 January, the Trident programme continues to progress to time and budget towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

United States Defence Secretary

21. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart; and what was discussed.

25. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart; and what was discussed.

43. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart; and what was discussed.

52. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart; and what was discussed.

Mr. Tom King: I last met Mr. Cheney during my visit to Washington at the end of January. We discussed a range of current defence issues.

58. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Defence Ministers; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met his colleagues from the eastern members of NATO (except Iceland) at the independent European programme group meeting at Gleneagles on 21 February. The last meeting of NATO Defence Ministers was the defence planning committee on 28-29 November 1989. Copies of the communiqués issued after both meetings have been placed in the Library of the House.

28. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his NATO colleagues; and what he expects to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will next meet his NATO colleagues at the defence nuclear planning group in early May when a range of defence issues will be discussed.

Eastern Europe

30. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been instituted to assess the military implications of political changes in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We keep the implications of political changes in eastern Europe under constant review. These changes are welcome and we look to the CFE process for reductions in military capabilities to provide enhanced security at the lower levels of forces which NATO has long sought.

82. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the recent developments in eastern Europe have caused his Department to reconsider its military commitments to NATO.

87. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the impact of recent events in eastern Europe on British defence commitments.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I have given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, West (Mr. Maples).

78. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the EUCLID meeting of European Defence Ministers on 20 and 21 February.

84. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the EUCLID meeting of European Defence Ministers on 20 and 21 February.

112. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the EUCLID meeting of European Defence Ministers on 20 and 21 February.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Ministers of the independent European programme group (IEPG) nations met at Gleneagles on 21 February. Among other matters, they discussed the EUCLID European research and technology programme and expressed satisfaction at the progress made on the outlined plan for the programme and endorsed some of the principles which will govern how the work will be undertaken. They also endorsed the aim of having a memorandum of understanding ready for signature this year, and looked to nations to implement the programme as soon as possible thereafter. They welcomed the valuable relationship developing between the EUCLID governmental organisations and the European defence industries group (EDIG), and stressed its importance for the success of EUCLID.

A copy of the communiqué issued after the meeting has been placed in the Library of the House.

NATO Policy

32. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has commissioned any studies into the effects of a change of policy in NATO from flexible response to minimum deterrence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO has always sought to ensure deterrence while maintaining only the essential minimum levels of nuclear and conventional forces. NATO's flexible response strategy is consistent with that aim and remains the best means of deterring any potential aggression, and thus guaranteeing peace and security.

Civil Community (Assistance)

33. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department has given to the civil community in the United Kingdom over the past year.

45. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department has given to the civil community in the United Kingdom over the past year.

79. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department has given to the civil community in the United Kingdom over the past year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The services are constantly engaged in providing assistance to the civil community in one form or another. This ranges from comparatively routine projects, such as the attachment of volunteers to social service organisations, through frequent explosive ordnance disposal operations to assistance in cases of accident or natural disaster. Over the last year notable examples of assistance have been the provision of temporary accommodation to house victims of the floods in north Wales and the loan of generators and chain-saws to help provide temporary power and restore lines of communication following the storms last January.

Equipment Expenditure

34. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of United Kingdom defence equipment expenditure is spent in the United Kingdom; and how many jobs are supported both directly and indirectly in British industry as a result of that expenditure.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989, volume 1, paragraph 401, and volume 2, table 6.8.

Air-to-Surface Missile

35. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest plans to deploy a new tactical air-to-surface missile.

88. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest plans to deploy a new tactical air-to-surface missile.

93. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest plans to deploy a new tactical air-to-surface missile.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn).

Soviet Union

36. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has on the present military doctrine adopted in the Soviet general staff.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Recent statements by senior Soviet officials claim that since 1987, the Soviet Union's military doctrine has been strictly defensive. It has been emphasised by the Soviet Chief of the General Staff that the main direction of his department's work is to make the armed forces unequivocally defensive. However, the internal debate in the USSR over the precise formulation of a new doctrine following the current and prospective force reductions in Europe continues.

66. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has on the policy of the Soviet general staff towards the doctrine of defence sufficiency.

120. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has on the policy of the Soviet general staff towards the doctrine of military sufficiency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 2 March, Official Report, column 382.

Conventional Force Reductions

37. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has received any representations from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on the CFE talks.

46. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has received any representations from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on the CFE talks.

118. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has received any representations from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on the CFE talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of letters, some of which have been inspired by CND, on many aspects of defence policy and arms control negotiations. However, I note that no recent representations have been received from CND on the most encouraging progress at the CFE talks towards a negotiated and verifiable agreement on conventional forces in Europe.

124. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department will make to the implementation of any CFE agreement.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department will make to the implementation of any CFE agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department will be participating fully in the implementation, including verification, of a CFE agreement.

127. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the CFE talks in Vienna.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Very substantial progress has been made in the CFE talks. NATO and the Warsaw pact have reached agreement on ceilings for tanks, helicopters and United States and Soviet stationed manpower in the central region. In the course of the latest round of negotiations in Vienna, which finished on 22 February, progress was made towards resolving the remaining differences, and NATO tabled detailed proposals on verification.

49. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the flooding of land above and below the village of Tilshead in Wiltshire following the construction by the Army of causeways for military vehicles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the recent exceptional rainfall, a large quantity of water accumulated behind a causeway which crosses a valley north-east of Tilshead village. The defence land agent Durrington took immediate steps first to prevent and then to control the overflow of water down the valley by inserting culverts in the causeway. Subsequently the defence land agent and Army engineers took the precautionary step of strengthening the causeway in a complex overnight operation involving many individuals and organisations. Water has not been known to accumulate behind the causeway in the past and on this occasion its existence may well have prevented even worse flooding in Tilshead village.

Volunteer Reserves

69. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made following the launch of his Department's campaign to recruit and retain members of the volunteer reserves.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current volunteer reserve forces campaign has as its prime aim improving retention in the reserve forces, although we would expect to see some measure of spin-off on recruitment. In addition to a widened public understanding of the importance of the volunteer reserves, there are encouraging signs that the campaign has made employers more aware of how the training offered in the volunteer reserves has relevance to civil employment and the benefits which they may gain thereby as a result of employee membership of the reserve forces. To date, more than 820 major employers, representing over half the United Kingdom work force, have pledged their support and we are confident that there has been a genuine reduction in the pressures which have acted against volunteer employees in the past.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department's commercial approach to defence procurement, including the greater emphasis on competition as part of the overall strategy of seeking value for money, has achieved substantial savings. Mr. Archie Hamilton: British forces will continue to fulfil our responsibilities for the protection of Berlin in conjunction with those of other Allies and we have no plans at present to change the size of the Berlin garrison, which will remain in place for as long as it is needed. It will additionally provide escorts and interpreters for the incoming Stockholm document, INF (intermediate nuclear forces) and CFE inspections into the United Kingdom.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the criteria he has adopted to determine the standard spending assessment for local education authorities in England and Wales for the year 1990-91; and, for each element, if he will quantify the relevant sums he deems appropriate for expenditure by the London borough of Newham in that financial year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The basis on which the education components of the standard spending assessments (SSAs) for 1990-91 for England and Wales are calculated is set out in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) and the Welsh Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report. Copies of both reports have been placed in the Library. The sectoral elements of the London borough of Newham's SSA for education are as follows:

	£ million
Primary Education	35·281
Secondary Education	35·105
Post-16 Education	14·772
Under 5 Education	7·251
Other Education	6·101
Total Education	98·510

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made any estimates of the amount by which Staffordshire county council would be required to reduce its education budget for 1990-91 if it were to spend at the level of its standard spending assessment for education; and whether he has made any assessment of the reductions in teaching staff and of spending on books at such a spending level.

Mr. MacGregor: It is for Staffordshire county council to reach its own conclusions on priorities within any particular level of spending.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any estimate of the reduction in teaching and non-teaching staffs and in non-pay items including school books and equipment which would be required if local education authorities in England brought their spending in 1990-91 to the level of their standard spending assessments for education.

Mr. MacGregor: It is for individual authorities to determine their own priorities for expenditure.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the additional administrative costs falling upon higher education institutions of (a) the proposed student loans scheme, (b) the proposed access funds and (c) the payment of tuition fees in three instalments rather than one.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are considering what rôle the higher education institutions might play in securing access to the top-up loans for their students. It is not expected that administration of the access funds will add noticeably to the costs of institutions' student advisory services. The additional costs of the termly payment of tuition fees are expected to be negligible.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is sub-contracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are at present 14 internal auditors in the Department. The total staffing cost of the Department's internal audit division, including travel and subsistence, training and the cost of support staff, is estimated at £405,000 in the present financial year. In addition, £12,000 has been spent in the present year on bought-in support from private firms to achieve economic and effective audit coverage, particularly in computer areas. The audit plan for 1989-90 covers 60 discrete audit areas; reports are issued on each assignment. Two of the reports have been drawn to the attention of Ministers.

Food Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much he has allocated for spending on the closure of the Institute of Food Research at Bristol: and from which year's allocation it will come.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend announced his allocation of the science budget in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 10 January 1990 at columns 623-24. It is for the research councils to determine how much they will spend from their allocations for any particular purpose.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been allocated to Staffordshire county council for teacher training on drug abuse and for anti-drug co-ordinators.

Mr. Alan Howarth: For the financial year 1990-91, Staffordshire education authority will receive grant aid on education support grant expenditure of £66,500 on preventive health education, and on expenditure of £69,000 under the associated LEA training grants scheme national priority area. Both these programmes cover education about drug abuse.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the total cost of the proposed phased implementation of the recommendations of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay in 1990-91; what was the corresponding figure in the remit to the committee; and who will be responsible for funding any difference between these two figures.

Mr. MacGregor: The additional cost in 1990-91 of implementing the IAC's recommendations in the way I have proposed would be £620 million in England and Wales, compared with the financial constraint set out in the IAC's remit of £600 million. The difference should not be an appreciable burden for local authorities given the scope that exists for savings across their services.

Disabled Students

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations his Department has received regarding a fourth access fund for disabled students.

Mr. Jackson: Representations in favour of such a fund have been made by several hon. Members and organisations representing disabled people.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make a statement on the revised arrangements for the disabled students' allowance.

Mr. Jackson: Shortly.

Disabled Graduates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what representations his Department has received regarding the disposable income level of disabled graduates;

(2) whether his Department has carried out any research into the disposable income levels of disabled graduates.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has received a number of representations from organisations representing the interests of disabled people. A few have provided evidence in support of their claim that disabled graduates will be at a disadvantage when repaying top-up loans. We have also examined evidence from the OPCS surveys of disability in Great Britain.

University Lecturers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the real increase in the earnings of university lecturers over the last decade, over the previous decade and over the two decades combined; and if he will set out in a table (a) the salary of a university lecturer at the top of the lecturers' scale, (b) the retail prices index and (c) average United Kingdom earnings for (i) the 1970s, (ii) the 1980s and (iii) the two periods combined.

Mr. Jackson: Data for total earnings of university lecturers are not available. The following table shows lecturers' salaries in actual and real terms in comparison with the retail prices index and average earnings over the periods (i) April 1970 to April 1979 (ii) April 1979 to April 1989 and (iii) April 1970 to April 1989:

These show that in 1990-91 the Department plans to spend £126·4 million on nuclear research and development (including some restructuring costs), and £20·3 million on research and development on renewable sources of energy, including £7 million on wind energy and £1·2 million on tidal energy.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the basis for the statement by the right hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) that Britain was at the bottom of the league on energy efficiency in June 1984; and what assessment he has made of evidence that Britain was achieving the target of being at the top of the league by the end of that Parliament.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The statement by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) was designed to encourage efforts to improve the United Kingdom's energy efficiency, not to set operational measures of performance. The United Kingdom's performance over the period 1983 to 1987 matched, and in some cases exceeded, that of most other countries, as the following table shows:

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Wakeham: There are 10 internal auditors in the Department of Energy, including the head of internal audit. The total cost of the unit is £185,000 per annum. Fifteen reports were produced in 1989, none of which was brought directly to the attention of a Minister. No internal audit work is contracted to private firms; it is a completely internal professional service.

Fuel Exports and Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide figures for January 1990 of fuel exports and imports equivalent to those given in his answers of 9 November 1989, Official Report, column 767 and 19 December 1989, Official Report, columns 118-19.

Mr. Wakeham: The equivalent information for fuel exports and imports for January 1990 as set out in my previous answers on 9 November 1989, Official Report, columns 767-68, and 19 December 1989, Official Report, columns 118-19, is as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General how many internal auditors are employed in those departments for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

The Attorney-General: Internal audit coverage for departments for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible is as follows: the Lord Chancellor's Department, including the Public Record Office; the Northern Ireland Court Service and the Land Registry. For the financial year 1988-89 the figures requested are:

	Number of auditors	Cost £	Audit reports produced	Sub-contract work—Computer Auditor Consultants	Cost £
Lord Chancellor's Department	27·5	594,660	39	—	16,000
Northern Ireland Court Service	5	98,700	25	None	—
Land Registry	6	117,569	19	None	—

No reports have been drawn to the attention of the Lord Chancellor by internal audit. The head of internal audit reports to the accounting officer.

THE ARTS

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many internal auditors are employed in his office and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to his attention; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Luce: No internal auditors are employed by the Office of Arts and Libraries. Internal audit services are, however, provided by the Cabinet Office team at no cost to the Office of Arts and Libraries. Two internal audit reports were produced in 1989 as part of a predetermined cycle of audit reviews, neither of which was drawn to my attention. No internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Anti-dumping Duties

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list details of (a) successful anti-cartel actions which have been taken by the European Commission over the last 10 years, indicating whether the products involved were subject to anti-dumping duties and (b) anti-cartel actions which have been taken by the European Commission over the last 10 years which have resulted in an agreement between the Commission and the cartel in order to preclude action, indicating whether the products involved were subject to anti-dumping duties.

Mr. Redwood: Details of cases in which the European Commission has taken decisions are listed in the table. In a much larger number of cases the Commission has negotiated satisfactory undertakings which have precluded the need for action, but these are not usually made public.

In the two cases asterisked, certain imports from third countries of the products involved were, during the period of the infringements, subject to anti-dumping duties. This may also have been so in some other cases but, if so, those cases are not readily identifiable.

Recycling

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to move from material specification to performance specification in respect of British Standards in order to allow a greater use of recycled material.

Mr. Ridley: The Department's Warren Spring laboratory has identified the historical emphasis upon material specification for standards as a significant barrier to the development of markets for recycled materials, and a shift towards performance specification would begin to undermine that barrier. The whole question of standards has been identified as a key area for discussion by the recycling advisory group, set up to help to develop a national approach to recycling and to propose means of increasing United Kingdom recycling rates. The group is due to present its recommendations shortly and these will be carefully considered by the Government.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to amend British Standard 5750 to allow a greater use of recycled material.

Mr. Ridley: The question of standards has been identified as a key area for discussion by the recycling advisory group, set up to help develop a national approach to recycling and to propose means of increasing United Kingdom recycling rates. The group is due to present its recommendations shortly and these will be carefully considered by the Government.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the recycling advisory group to report on its consideration of recycling of domestic and industrial waste.

Mr. Ridley: The group is expected to complete the current phase of its work before the end of May.

Company Audits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will bring forward legislation to require all organisations seeking the status of a qualifying body under the Companies Act 1989 to issue recommended reading lists to their students.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will legislate to require all auditors of all companies to detect fraud and report it to the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Redwood: No, but I hope that all auditors will apply the guidance in the newly issued auditing guideline on the auditor's responsibility in relation to fraud, other irregularities and errors.

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those of his Department's inspectors' reports completed since January 1979 that have taken four years or longer to be published.

Mr. Redwood: There have been no reports completed since 1979 for which the date of publication is four years or more later than the date of the report.

Departmental Structure

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on his plans for the future structure of his Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 783-4.

Mr. Ridley: None, as of 5 March 1990.

Accounting Standards Task Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the sources of funding for the accounting standards task group.

Mr. Redwood: The sources of funding for the accounting standards task group are my Department and the Bank of England. In addition, two major accountancy firms are respectively providing the services of a senior manager and a secretary.

Postal Services

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the efficiency of the postal services.

Mr. Ridley: The Post Office has set itself a target for this year to deliver 3 per cent. more letters on average by the next day. I welcome this commitment. Its real unit costs fell by 4·6 per cent. over the last target period, the three years to 29 March 1989.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Redwood: My Department employs 32 internal auditors at a cost of £786,000 a year. In 1989, 54 final internal audit reports were produced; none of these was referred to a Minister. No internal audit work is contracted out to private firms at the present time.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's child care network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The report was prepared for the European Commission which has not yet developed any proposals. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom's policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents, who wish to do so, can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government, through the Department of Health and the ministerial group on women's issues, have encouraged the development of a range of high quality child care options for both parents and employers.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what record was kept by an official of his Department of the information given to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North on 6 December 1988 by the chairman of British Shipbuilders concerning the financial support available from the General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union for the north-south bridge consortium which was bidding to acquire North East Shipbuilders Limited; and what steps have subsequently been taken to check the accuracy of this information.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The view taken by British Shipbuilders and its financial advisers was that the proposal received from the north-south bridge consortium did not provide the basis for a viable future for merchant shipbuilding in the Sunderland yards. This was irrespective of whether the General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union had been able to confirm an oral indication of £10 million towards the consortium's capital provision. The Department's financial advisers agreed with this assessment. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster took account of all relevant considerations in reaching the decisions announced on 7 December 1988. The Department's records refer to sources of finance available to the consortium. Given the view taken of the proposal as a whole, there was no point in inviting financial advisers to investigate the GMBATU indication.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drink Driving

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the national organisations responding to his consultation paper on possible changes to the breath testing legislation that were in favour of the police being given powers to conduct random breath testing either within the prescribed context of a roadside checkpoint or in the context of them being given unfettered discretion powers;

(2) if he will make a statement on the outcome of his consultation on changes to the breath testing legislation;

(3) if he will place copies of responses from organisations to his consultation exercise on breath testing legislation in the Library.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 1 February 1989 at column 252, the following national organisations wrote to the Home Office to express support for extended police powers to conduct roadside breath tests, either in the form of unfettered discretion or some other form:

Alcohol Concern
Association of Industrial Road Safety Officers
Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland)
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Association of Scottish Police Superintendents
Automobile Association
Baptist Union of Great Britain
British Medical Association
British Safety Council
Campaign Against Drinking and Driving
Churches Council on Alcohol and Drugs
County Surveyors' Society
Cyclists Touring Club
Guild of Experienced Motorists
Institute of Incorporated Highway Engineers
Justices' Clerks' Society
K-DOOR (Keep Death Off Our Roads)
Liberty
Magistrates' Association
Medical Commission on Accident Prevention
National Council of Women
National Federation of Women's Institutes
Parliamentary Advisory Council on Transport Safety
Police Federation (England and Wales)
Police Superintendents' Association (England and Wales)
Royal College of Community Medicine
Royal College of Midwives
Royal College of Nursing
Royal College of Psychiatrists
Scotland's Campaign Against Irresponsible Drivers
Scottish Accident Prevention Council
Scottish Council on Alcohol
Scottish Police Federation

We have considered carefully these and other responses received and we intend shortly to announce our conclusions.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve drivers' perception of the actual risk of being detected for excess alcohol.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Regular surveys carried out on behalf of the Department of Transport indicate a marked change in public attitudes towards drinking and driving in recent years. This included an increased awareness of the risk of being caught. This is borne out by the publication on 7 February of statistics of roadside breath tests for the 12 months to September 1989. They show that while the overall level of breath testing continues to rise, there is a continuing downward trend in the proportion of positive tests. A copy of the relevant Home Office statistical bulletin (4/90) is in the Library.

The Government encourage chief constables to make full use of police powers to require roadside breath tests. The efforts of the police will be further reinforced by the Government's drinking and driving campaigns to be launched again this year during the summer and at Christmas.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is sub-contracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Waddington: Twenty-one internal auditors, including three support staff, were employed as at 1 October 1989. The annual cost is estimated at £524,000.

In the current financial year 31 reports have been issued. One assignment was partly contracted out to a private firm at a cost of £30,000. One internal audit report was specifically drawn to the attention of a Minister. More generally, internal audit findings and recommendations which are relevant to issues that Ministers are considering are reported to them in the context of submissions on those issues, but information on the number of reports thus drawn to the attention of Ministers is not readily available.

Ministerial Visits (Security)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the police and security operation for the visit to Bradford and west Yorkshire by the Prime Minister on 28 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of west Yorkshire that the additional police costs for the visit were £7,132.

Political Asylum (Chinese Citizens)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Chinese diplomats applied for political asylum in the United Kingdom since June 1989; and what action was taken in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Four Chinese diplomats applied for political asylum in the United Kingdom in 1989. All were granted refugee status.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for political asylum have been received within the last 12 months from Chinese citizens residing in the United Kingdom; and how many have been granted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the following table:

Applications[1] received for refugee status by Chinese nationals subsequent to their entry to the United Kingdom, and decisions[1] on such applications, 1989.

	Number
Applications	52
Decisions	15
Granted refugee status	10
Granted exceptional leave	5
Refused refugee status or exceptional leave	—

[1] Provisional figures which may be underestimates.

These figures do not include Chinese nationals who apply to remain here on an exceptional basis, and are being allow to stay under the terms of the announcement to the House on 20 December 1989, at column 274.

Suspects' Rights

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a statement as to the Government's proposals on the right of silence.

Mr. John Patten: We are still considering the comments we have received on the report of the departmental working group on the right of silence. I cannot yet say when we shall be ready to announce proposals.

HEALTH

General Practitioners

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of general practitioners per 1,000 population for (a) England and Wales and (b) the Greater Manchester area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of general practitioners per 1,000 population for England and Wales at 1 October 1988 (the latest data for which figures are available) was 0·54. The figure at 1979 was 0·46.

The information requested is collected from family practitioner committees (FPCs), which are not necessarily coterminous with metropolitan boundaries. The number of GPs per 1,000 population in the areas covered by the FPCs which cover the Greater Manchester metropolitan area was 0·51 at 1 October 1988 and 0·44 at 1 October 1979.

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table of the numbers of laundry, cleaning, catering and security contracts awarded in-house and externally each year since 1983 in each health authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Freeman: Information held centrally is readily available in the form requested only on a regional health authority basis and is shown in the tables. It represents the results of the initial tendering exercises undertaken following the launch in late 1983 of the Government's competitive tendering initiative for domestic, catering and laundry services.

Similar information is not held centrally for other services.

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rates

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in what manner under the current rating system (a) National Health Service property and (b) private hospitals are assessed;

(2) in what manner, for the purposes of the uniform business rate (a) National Health Service property and (b) independent hospitals, will be assessed.

Mr. Freeman: NHS property is occupied by the Crown and is thus exempt from rates. However, contributions in lieu of rates are paid on the same basis as though the property were rateable. The Treasury valuer determines the values of NHS property for rating purposes, applying the principles laid down in rating legislation and agrees these with the representative of the rating authority; the contribution is then calculated by applying the local rate poundage to the value. Similar principles will apply to the determination of contributions in lieu of rates after 1 April 1990; the Treasury valuer has revalued all non-domestic NHS property for this purpose.

Private and independent hospitals are rateable and are assessed by the valuation office in accordance with the relevant legislation. This will continue after 1 April 1990.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the number of deaths from cervical cancer in 1988; and how many of these deaths were of women aged 65 years and over.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table:

Number of deaths from cervical cancer[1] by age-groups in England and Wales, 1988

Age-group	Number of deaths
All ages	1,942
65 and over	967

[1] Assigned to 9th revision International Classification of Diseases (ICD) code 180.

When invasive cervical cancer develops from initial pre-cancerous change in cells of the cervix this generally takes, on average, over 10 years. Therefore, we would expect some time to elapse before the call and recall programme reduces the mortality in the 65 years and over age group. Our guidance to health authorities states that women aged 65 years and over who have not had two consecutive negative smears in the last 10 years should be screened. The new GPs' contract, which places a much greater emphasis on health promotion and ill health prevention, should provide additional opportunities for GPs to offer a cervical smear test to women in this age group when appropriate.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the prevalence of encephalopathy amongst patients identified as suffering from AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not recorded as part of the reporting system for AIDS cases. I am advised that there are a number of reports about encephalopathy in people with AIDS in the scientific literature. These show varying prevalence rates which may reflect different patient populations and diagnostic criteria.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will set up a national fund to finance the provision of drugs and treatment for illnesses requiring long-term treatment such as AIDS; what representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The costs of treatment and drugs for HIV disease and for other long-term illnesses will continue to be financed as now, by means of allocations to health authorities or through the family practitioner services, as appropriate. Pressures on services, such as those caused by HIV disease will continue to be taken into account in assessing the overall funding requirements of the NHS. There are no plans to set up a separate national fund for any specific group of illnesses; we have received no representations suggesting this course of action.

Leukaemia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each nuclear plant in the United Kingdom, the number of children who have been treated for leukaemia; and if he will show in his answer the percentage whose parents were or have been employees at a nuclear plant.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available. However, following a recommendation from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment last year, the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) is proposing to link the data on the national register of radiation workers with information on the geographical distribution of childhood cancer held by the childhood cancer research group at Oxford. We are urgently considering this and other related research proposals. A large amount of parallel research has already been commissioned by Government, which has either been completed, or is under way or planned.

Milk Tokens

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance his Department is giving to people who claim free milk tokens, but where milk distributors in their area refuse to accept them.

Mr. Freeman: Any beneficiary whose usual supplier refuses to accept milk tokens can seek information from the local social security office about alternative suppliers in the locality prepared to accept tokens. Where, exceptionally, the local office is satisfied that a token cannot be exchanged for milk a beneficiary can, as previously, be given a payment in lieu.

General Household Survey

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) further to table 3.20 of the general household survey 1986, whether he will publish in the Official Report, for 1986 and the latest year for which figures are available, the population in each country corresponding to the percentages given for the total of (i) two-adult households together with a subdivision by family size and (ii) three or more adults together with a subdivision showing the families by number of adults, distinguishing those where the adults are children aged less than 18 years and the proportion of such children in full-time education;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report, for 1986 and the latest year for which figures are available, the population in each country corresponding to the percentages given for the totals in table 3.20 of the general household survey 1986 together with (i) a subdivision of single-adult households between males and females and (ii) the number of parents with children in each case under (i).

Mr. Freeman: Not all the requested information is available, but the following tables give such data as can be provided.

1. Table 1 gives an analysis by country of the total column of Table 3.20 in the 1986 GHS annual report updated to 1987. These are the latest figures available.

2. Table 3.20 in the 1986 report shows the proportion of adults (aged 16 or over) living in households of various types. The category "2 adults aged 16-59" consists of two-person households in which both members are in the specified age-group and consequently, by definition, excludes households with children. All households containing children are subsumed in this table under the classes, "Youngest person aged 0-4" and "Youngest person aged 5-15". Such households will contain varying numbers of adults.

3. Table 2 shows, in column (a), the percentage of all households in Great Britain consisting of one adult and one child, one adult and two children, etc. Households containing two adults are distinguished by whether they are of different sexes or the same sex. Column (b) gives the same information but with the percentages based on all households containing children under 16 rather than on all households of any kind. These figures are not available for the three countries separately.

4. Table 3(a) shows the proportions of families[1] in Great Britain headed by married couples (or married mothers whose husbands are temporarily absent), by lone fathers, or by lone mothers, with one, two, and three or more dependent children. Table 3(b) repercentages the data to show the proportions of families with one, two, and three or more dependent children headed by a married couple, a lone father, or a lone mother. These data are not available by country.

[1] In the GHS, a "family" is defined as (a) a married or cohabiting couple on their own or (b) a married or cohabiting couple/lone parent and their never-married children, provided that these children have no children of their own.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many internal auditors are employed in those departments for which he is responsible and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Freeman: An average of 22 internal auditors were engaged in the internal audit of the Department of Health and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in 1989. The estimated cost was £498,000 including superannuation and training. Thirty-five audit reports were produced in 1989. No audit reports were drawn to the attention of Ministers, but the results of internal audit's work are considered by the audit committees of both Departments and the accounting officers receive an annual summary of the principal audit findings and recommendations. No internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms.

Disability

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of section 8(2) of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act.

Mr. Freeman: Officials have recently opened consultations with the local authority associations on the cost and other implications of the remaining sections of the Act, including section 8(2). Decisions on implementation will be made in the light of the outcome of these consultations and the availability of the necessary resources.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment services are available to local authorities to assist them in carrying out their duty under the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act to assess the needs of deaf-blind people.

Mr. Freeman: Section 4 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, which was implemented on 1 April 1987, requires local authorities to assess the needs of a disabled person for services under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970, if asked to do so by a disabled person or their carer. The Government White Paper "Caring for People" contains provision for the publication in late 1990 of a detailed code of guidance for local authorities which will offer advice on the working of the new assessment system. The code of guidance will be developed following discussions with professional and representative bodies.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring has been carried out by his Department into the implementation by local authorities of sections 4, 8, and 9 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's social services inspectorate has carried out a number of exercises to monitor the implementation of the Act. The results of an inspection of the operation of all sections of the Act in force, including sections 4, 8 and 9, were published on 6 February under the title "Developing Services for Disabled People", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specialist resources are available for the rehabilitation, care and training of deaf-blind people.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. Local authority social services departments allocate resources for the rehabilitation, care and training of deaf-blind people on the basis of their own, local assessment of need. A number of voluntary organisations also provide excellent services for deaf-blind people. Over the last three financial years, the Department has provided funding of £960,000 to voluntary organisations concerned with the needs of deaf-blind people.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to encourage local authorities to respond to the report, "Breaking Through —Developing Services for Deaf-Blind People".

Mr. Freeman: In October 1989, the Department and the deaf-blind services liaison group jointly funded and co-hosted with the Association of Directors of Social Services a national seminar to promote the recommendations in the report "Breaking Through". The seminar, which was aimed at senior managers of social services departments, was well attended and a report of the discussions will shortly be published and distributed to local authorities.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, in the light of the Beverley Lewis case, he has any proposals relating to the training given to professionals on assessing and meeting the needs of deaf-blind people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The death of Beverley Lewis is a very tragic case. We have received reports from the health and social services authorities concerned. When we have received the report from the coroner, we shall consider what, if any, action the Department should take in relation to the needs of deaf-blind people who are also mentally handicapped.

Community Care

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the implications of the Beverley Lewis case for community care services, with particular regard to monitoring the quality of care provided and the setting of national guidelines on community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are awaiting the coroner's report on the Beverley Lewis case. Any implications for community care services will be fully considered when it is published.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of the National Health Service trust non-executive helpers provided by regional health authority chairmen.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the figures by year and in total for the number of hospital posts notified to his Department in which the job description included a duty to advise, undertake or participate in abortions from 31 December 1983 to the latest date for which figures are available; and what was the total number of such posts vacant in each year and in total for (a) psychiatry, (b) anaesthetics and (c) obstetrics and gynaecology.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 20 February 1990, column 719]: I regret the answer given was incorrect.

The number of hospital posts notified to the Department of Health in which the job description included a duty to advise, undertake or participate in abortions from 31 December 1983 to the latest date for which figures are available are given in the table. These figures refer only to consultant posts, as information on other hospital grades is not held centrally. Also, the data requested on vacant posts are not held centrally.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Banks (Bad Debts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of revenue to be lost in respect of write-offs for bad debts incurred in 1990-91 by the main banks in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: The revenue cost of write-offs of bad debts incurred in 1990-91 by the main banks in the United Kingdom has not been estimated.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to collect information on the total tax write-off for bank lending to the Third world.

Mr. Lilley: Banks' published accounts contain information about the commercial provisions they make. Information about the amounts allowable for tax can be obtained only after the banks have submitted their accounts to the Inland Revenue and the tax allowable provisions have been discussed and agreed between the taxpayer and the Revenue. This can be a lengthy process. The Inland Revenue collects information on amounts eventually allowed for tax.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to issue guidance to banks regarding future Government tax subsidies or write-offs to banks which fail to recoup loans to the Third world or other debtor nations.

Mr. Lilley: The amount of tax relief available to banks in respect of bad or doubtful debts, including debts owed by sovereign debtors, is determined by the tax laws enacted by Parliament.

Taxation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross earnings the couple with an earner on average earnings, with two children, paid in tax, treating child benefit as negative income tax, in 1978-79 and in 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: Figures for 1978-79 have been placed in the Library of the House, as noted in Official Report, 13 April 1989, column 624, and estimates for 1989-90 were given in reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 8 January 1990, Official Report, column 559.

Bank of England

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer meets the Governor from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Privatisation Revenue

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates privatisation revenue will be in 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 15 February, column 381-82.

Consumer Spending

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his reply of 19 February, Official Report, column 524, concerning consumers' expenditure on rent, rates and water charges, if he will publish an estimate for 1989 and a forecast for 1990 together with (a) a table showing the current price figures for each year deflated by the increase in the retail prices index and (b) a table listing and quantifying the factors accounting for the changes in volume between 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates for 1989 will not be available until the latter part of March following the publication on 16 March of the CSO press notice on gross domestic product for the fourth quarter of 1989. Forecasts for 1990 are not available. With regard to (a), my earlier reply gave figures in constant prices; the use of the retail prices index for deflation is not appropriate here. With regard to (b), a description of the method of compilation of these constant price estimates is given in pages 77-78 of "United Kingdom National Accounts: Sources and Methods", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table, further to table 15.1 of the Annual Abstract of Statistics 1989, showing for the latest available year the number of households in each country corresponding to the 13 listed categories together with the numbers of adults and children in each category in each country; and if he will provide a further breakdown of the other category.

Mr. Lilley: Information on the actual number of households for each category in each country is not available: in 1986 there were some 21·5 million households in the United Kingdom. However, an approximate guide to the relative numbers of households can be obtained from the family expenditure survey. This is given in the table for 1986, the latest available year. A further breakdown of the "other" category could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table further to table 15.3 of the Annual Abstract of Statistics 1989, showing for each year and a forecast for 1987, 1988 and 1989 the amount and percentage share of imputed income from owner rent-free occupancy together with (i) the weekly equivalent of the rateable value, (ii) the percentage uplift for the general increase in rents, (iii) the corresponding increase in council rents and (iv) the rate and rent factors included in the retail prices index.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is given in the table. Figures for 1989 are not available for all items.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing, for each region, total investment by companies in research and development.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information is not available.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the expenditure of central Government for each year since 1979 in (a) cash terms and (b) constant price terms for the latest year for which figures are available; what was the percentage increase in each year; and what was the percentage increase between 1979 and the latest available year;

(2) what was the expenditure of central Government for each year since 1979 per head of population in (a) cash terms and (b) constant price terms, based on the latest year for which figures are available; what was the percentage increase in each year; and what was the percentage increase between 1979 and the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 March 1990]: The information requested on central Government's expenditure is given in the table:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Milk Quota

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for the distribution in Northern Ireland of the 1 per cent. of additional milk quota which has been allocated to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 15 February that he had submitted to the European Commission for approval the Government's proposals for the allocation of the extra 1 per cent. quota in the United Kingdom.

The proposals include allocation to new entrants

to producers whose quota is less than 200,000 litres to producers in certain remote areas to producers whose Tribunal awards had not been granted in full because insufficient quota was available

Producers in Northern Ireland will benefit under each of the categories with the exception of the remote areas provision which applies only to the Scilly Isles and Scottish islands.

Eastern Health and Social Services Board

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many administrative staff employed by the Eastern health and social services board are on a salary scale which at the minimum point is in excess of £30,000 per annum; and what is the designated name of each such grade.

Mr. Needham: There are 12 administrative staff employed by the Eastern health and social services board who are on a salary scale which at the minimum point is in excess of £30,000 per annum. The designated name of each grade is as follows:

Board General Manager
Director of Finance
Director of Operations
Director of Personnel and Management Services
Director of Planning
Unit General Manager 1 (4 posts)
Unit General Manager 2 (3 posts)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set out in the Official Report the qualifications and experience required from applicants for posts of manager of units of management in the Eastern health and social services board.

Mr. Needham: There are nine unit general manager posts in the Eastern health and social services board and applicants for all these posts were required to have:

(1.) A good academic or professional qualification to degree level and have had recent senior management experience in the public or private sector; or recent senior management experience of at least five years in the public or private sector.
(2.) A proven record of managerial achievement in their current and previous posts and be able to demonstrate leadership skills in a multi-professional environment.
(3.) The ability to set and work to agreed objectives.
(4.) The ability to communicate effectively through all levels of the organisation and with the external environment.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the annual expenditure incurred by the Eastern health and social services board is accounted for by the salaries of staff being paid in excess of £20,000 per annum who are in administrative grades.

Mr. Needham: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However, the total salaries and wages element of the Eastern board's gross revenue expenditure in 1988-89 was approximately 75 per cent. and the administrative and clerical staffs salaries and wages accounted for about 7 per cent. The proportion relating to those paid in excess of £20,000 would therefore be very small.

Litter

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions there have been under the anti-litter legislation in each district council area since the legislation came into operation; what is the number that have been successful; and what was the range of fines imposed by the courts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under article 28 of the Pollution Control and Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 it is an offence with a maximum penalty of a £400 fine for anyone, without lawful authority, to throw, dump or deposit litter in any place in the open air.

The information requested is not held centrally and is being sought from individual councils. I will write as soon as possible and will place copies of my letter in the Library.

Emigration

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in the Official Report the latest estimate of figures for emigration from Northern Ireland to (a) other parts of the United Kingdom, (b) the Republic of Eire and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

(a) 16,100
(b) 1,600
(c) 3,100

Figures are derived from the 1989 mid-year estimates of population and cover the period 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989.

Family Benefits

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many families in Northern Ireland were in receipt of child benefit in each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham: The information requested, as at 31 January, is as follows:

31 January 1988	215,476
31 January 1989	215,858
31 January 1990	215,750

Radiation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, following the publication of the Gardner report on radiation risks, he will review current radiation exposure limits at facilities licensed to handle radioactive materials in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The legislation which specifies the maximum permissible occupational dose of ionising radiation is currently under review in Great Britain. Should this review result in changes in the statutory limits applicable in Great Britain, similar changes will be made in the corresponding Northern Ireland legislation to ensure that identical legislative control exists throughout the United Kingdom.

Coleraine Hospital

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 19 February, Official Report, column 569, what steps he is taking to ensure that the Northern health and social services board is aware of the standards required by the Government for the option appraisal; and if he will outline the options being considered in the option appraisal.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The standards required by the Government for option appraisal are set out in the HM Treasury publication "Investment Appraisal in the Public Sector" and the Department of Health publication "Investment Appraisal —A Guide for the National Health Service". Both documents have been issued to health and social services boards. The identification of options is part of the appraisal process and these should include all feasible ways of providing the required level and quality of services to patients.

Fair Employment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 21 February, whether a code of practice, acceptable to the Fair Employment Commission, exists for disclosure of information as to the religious composition of the work force in each different premises of a private firm similar to that agreed for the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 February 1990]: I am informed by the Fair Employment Commission that it is not aware of any private sector firm which has drawn up guidelines on the disclosure of monitoring information. However, this issue is dealt with in "Fair Employment in Northern Ireland Code of Practice", published by the Department of Economic Development and circulated to all employers in Northern Ireland in December 1989.

Western Health and Social Services Board

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employees the Western health and social services board has; and how many were educated at a primary school in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) the Irish Republic and (c) Great Britain.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 February 1990]: On 3 January 1990, the Western health and social services board employed 6,809 staff (excluding homehelps), of whom 5,174 were educated at primary schools in Northern Ireland and 885 were educated at primary schools outside Northern Ireland. No record of primary school attended is held in respect of the remaining 750 staff.

The latest available figure for homehelps relates to 18 October 1989. Of the 1,866 employed on that date, 989 were educated at primary schools in Northern Ireland and 110 were educated at primary schools outside Northern Ireland. No record of primary school attended is held in respect of the remaining 767 homehelps.

Of those educated outside Northern Ireland it is not possible to disaggregate those who attended school in Great Britain and those who attended school in the Republic of Ireland.

Fisheries Research

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) on how many (a) occasions and (b) total days, at what cost and leasing income per day, and to whom the vessel Lough Foyle has been leased since it came into the possession of the Northern Ireland authorities;

(2) whether the leasing of the vessel Lough Foyle has shown a profit or loss.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The objective of leasing the Lough Foyle is to offset the costs associated with ownership and crewing during periods when it is not required for research by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

The MV Lough Foyle has been chartered on nine occasions involving 93 days since the vessel came into the possession of the Northern Ireland authorities. Lessees have been the Scottish Marine Biological Association, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the Department of the Marine, Republic of Ireland.

The average daily full economic cost of operating the vessel while at sea to the Department is currently £1,500.

The total leasing income to date has been £93,826·15.

Social Fund

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what consultations were made with local social security offices in determining the 1990-91 social fund allocation; and what weight was given to factors such as their premium case loads and the operation of their existing budgets;

(2) what information is available to indicate the allocation of the social fund budget to each social security office for 1990-91, indicating the balance between loans and grants, the total income support case load of each and the figures for their respective premium case loads;

(3) what reference was made to relevant health and social services agencies regarding their projections for community care in determining social fund allocations for 1990-91.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 March 1990]: The allocations to social security offices for 1990-91 have not yet been determined. They will be announced in due course and a paper containing details of the basis of the allocations will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate for each social security office the totals allocated for loans in the 1988-89 social fund budget, the total amount paid out, the number of loans given, the numbers refused, and the total amount repaid and the number of recipients who had totally repaid their loans by (a) March 31 1989, (b) June 30 1989, (c) September 30 1989 and (d) December 31 1989.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 March 1990]: The number of recipients who have totally repaid their loans is not available, but the total amounts repaid are shown in the table. The remaining information is held in the Library.

One-Parent Benefit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) women and (b) men are in receipt of one-parent benefit.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The figures are 21,620 women and 2,096 men.

TRANSPORT

Railway Investment

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate in the Official Report investment in British Rail for each of the financial years 1983 to date showing what sums for capital investment have been derived from Exchequer and BR sources, respectively, together with indications of the parts of such capital liable and not liable to interest charge, respectively, in any one year.

Mr. Portillo: Table 7.33 in chapter 7 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990/91 to 1992/93" (Cm 1007) sets out British Rail's capital requirements and the internal and external resources from which these requirements are met. "External finance" comprises revenue subsidy paid by the Government and borrowing, principally from the national loans fund. We do not apportion particular forms of finance between investment and other expenditure. BR "rail" investment since 1983 is as follows, in £m and at constant 1989-90 prices:

Year	Rail investment
1983	348
1984	[1]369
1985-86	498
1986-87	482
1987-88	604
1988-89	610
1989-90	[2]670

Note:
(1) 1984-85 was a 15-month financial period. The figure shown for 1984 is the 12-month equivalent.
(2) Estimate.

Railways Safety Inspectorate

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the transfer of the railways safety inspectorate to the Health and Safety Commission.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 27 February, Hansard col. 143.

Feasibility Studies (East Sussex)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those feasibility studies or other paperwork exercises carried out for his Department by East Sussex county council since 1985, giving the year, the nature of the study and details of any moneys paid in respect of these studies.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1985 East Sussex county council, as agent authority, has advised and assisted the Department on a wide range of issues relating to the maintenance and improvement of and development control affecting the trunk roads in the county. The number of items dealt with over this range is large. A detailed breakdown is not readily available and would be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The only major feasibility study carried out in this period is that for improving the A27 between the eastern end of the Lewes bypass and Polegate.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) in respect of the recent feasibility study into the A27 Lewes-Polegate road, conducted by East Sussex county council for his Department, on what date (a) the Department communicated to the county council its intention to commission a feasibility study, (b) the county council confirmed it wished to conduct the study, (c) the study was commissioned by his Department and (d) the completed study was received from the county council by his Department;

(2) in respect of the recent feasibility study into the A27 Lewes-Polegate road conducted by East Sussex county council for his Department (a) what sum was paid to the county council for the work carried out and (b) if any other moneys were paid out for this study.

Mr. Atkins: The need for an A27 Lewes to Polegate scheme identification study was first announced in the 1987 roads White Paper published in April 1987. East Sussex county council offered to assist in February 1988, was commissioned to carry out the study in August 1988, forwarded its confidential report to the Department in October 1988 and was paid £17,567 (exclusive of VAT).

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he or his officials last met representatives from East Sussex county council; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Officials met representatives of East Sussex county council on 1 March when the Department's consultants, appointed to investigate options for improving the A27 between Lewes and Polegate, were introduced to county officers and lines of communication established for on-going liaison during the scheme's preparation.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will convene a national conference of all interested parties to discuss the future of the Channel tunnel and rail link throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: No. British Rail undertook an extensive programme of consultation in all regions before publishing in December last year its plan for international passenger and freight services when the Channel tunnel opens. In accordance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 the board will be keeping this plan under review. Interested groups should therefore make their points to British Rail.

Midland Line (Electrification)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from elected bodies in the east midlands regarding the need to provide funding for the electrification of the midland line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have received a number of representations from local authorities about the electrification of the midland main line, including one from the midland main line consortium of local authorities. It remains for British Rail to come forward with any proposals it considers worth while.

"The Road User and the Law"

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to bring forward legislation to implement the proposals in "The Road User and the Law".

Mr. Atkins: As soon as time is available.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the managerial competence of the docklands light railway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The management of the docklands light railway is a matter for the chairman and board of London Regional Transport. The performance of the railway's operations is a regular topic of discussion between the chairman of London Regional Transport, the chairman of the docklands light railway and me.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Atkins: My Department employs 26 internal auditors at an annual cost of around £580,000. In 1989, 73 internal audit reports were produced, none of which needed to be drawn to Ministers' attention. No internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms.

Radioactive Waste

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has on the number of competing designs for a transportation flask for vitrified high-level radioactive waste; and if he will list the companies involved;

(2) what method of review and assessment he anticipates for the design safety report accompanying British Nuclear Fuels plc's formal licence submission for a transportation flask for the return of vitrified high-level radioactive waste to its country of origin;

(3) when he expects to receive a formal licence submission from British Nuclear Fuels plc's for a transportation flask for the return of vitrified high-level radioactive waste to its country of origin;

(4) whether he will place in the Library a copy of British Nuclear Fuels plc's design safety report of a transportation flask for vitrified high-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Atkins: No application has been received from BNFL plc or any other company for certification of a flask for the transport of vitrified high-level radioactive waste.

Details of the designs involved, were such an application to be received, would be the property of the applicant and subject to commercial confidentiality.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on transportation flasks for vitrified high-level radioactive waste (a) under development and (b) in service anywhere in the world; and if he will list the countries.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Roundabouts

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many roundabouts have been reduced in diameter each year for the last 10 years; and why.

Mr. Atkins: Numerical information of the kind requested is not collected. Reductions in the diameter of roundabouts are mainly made to improve efficiency and-or capacity.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was, for the five most recent years available, the number of road accidents which occurred at roundabouts; and whether the figures represent a growing or diminishing percentage of total road vehicle accidents.

Mr. Atkins: The Department collects information only on road accidents involving personal injury. The information requested for personal injury road accidents is as follows:

Personal injury road accidents at roundabouts: 1984 to 1988

	Accidents at roundabouts	All accidents	Per cent. of accidents at roundabouts
1984
Fatal	70	5,138	1·36

The figures show that there has been a slight increase in the percentage of road accidents occurring at roundabouts over the five-year period. The number of these accidents in which there were fatal or serious casualties has declined over the same period.

London Road Assessment Studies

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the total number of written comments received in response to (a) "Traffic in London", (b) the east London assessment study, (c) the south London assessment study, (d) the south circular assessment study and (e) the west London assessment study; and if he will respond to them;

(2) what is the total number of signatories on petitions received directly by him concerning "Traffic in London" and the four assessment studies in London;

(3) when he expects to make an announcement on the result of consultation on "Traffic in London" and the London assessment studies.

Mr. Atkins: The thousands of responses on the London assessment studies and "Traffic in London" are currently being collated and analysed. To make interim counts would involve a disproportionate cost and would delay the decision process, thus prolonging the uncertainty for residents.

Motorway Service Stations

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorway service stations he plans to open in the next five years.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's strategic programme for motorway service areas in England is designed to fill gaps in the existing network and provide facilities on new motorways. The programme comprises 19 sites, of which 13 are likely to open within five years, subject to completion of planning procedures and land acquisition.

Rolling Stock

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport over what time scale he has been asked to approve investment in the new Networker rolling stock to be introduced by British Rail on the north Kent line.

Mr. Portillo: Last August my right hon. Friend authorised the purchase of the first 400 class 465 Networkers at a cost of £257 million (at 1989 prices) and gave approval in principle for a further 276 vehicles. These will replace the existing rolling stock on routes to south-east London and north Kent. I expect to receive proposals for further orders of class 465s to cater for the continuing growth in demand on these routes.

Eastern District Distributor Road

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will extend the construction of the eastern district distributor road and the proposed A46-A47 link road to at least dual carriageway throughout;

(2) if, in the study that he is now making of traffic management around Leicester, he will proceed at the earliest date to make the eastern district distributor road dual carriageway standard throughout to relieve traffic congestion on the A6 at Oadby.

Mr. Atkins: The Leicester eastern district distributor road, the Leicester southern district distributor road and the A46-A47 link road are the responsibility of Leicestershire county council as highway authority, and it is for that authority to determine its standards and programming.

The proposed Leicester eastern bypass is a trunk road scheme. It is hoped to announce a preferred route in 1994. The carriageway standard has yet to be determined.

Beach Pollution (Sussex)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, regarding the MV Fathulkhair, Official Report, column 237, what steps he is able to take to secure compensation from the vessel's owners for the cost incurred in dealing with the dangerous cargo from the vessel on British beaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 6 March 1990]: I am looking into the question of whether the Government have a claim against the owners which would be enforceable as a matter of law, and if I am satisfied that there is a sustainable claim I shall initiate whatever proceedings are necessary.

EMPLOYMENT

Workplace Health and Safety

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to improve health protection and safety conditions in the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government have increased financial provision for the commission and executive over previously agreed levels again for 1990-91. The additional provision is £7 million excluding money transferred from the Department of Energy for nuclear safety research.

My right hon. and learned Friend expects shortly to receive for his approval details of the commission's plans for 1990-91 and beyond. The commission hopes to publish its plan of work in May.

Careers Service

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish the reports of inspections of the careers service begun after September 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Five inspections of careers services have been set up following the announcement of my right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) last year that reports on inspections carried out after September 1989 would be published. These inspections are all currently taking place and I would expect to publish the reports of these inspections in September or October of this year.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Health and Safety Executive's latest annual report.

Mr. Nicholls: The report of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive was published on 26 February. Latest provisional statistics for 1988-89 published in the report show an apparent levelling off of major injuries, which we very much welcome. But the number of fatalities, which include those from the Piper Alpha disaster, and high or increasing injury rates in particular industries demonstrate that there is not room for any relaxation of effort by industry to improve standards.

Construction Industry

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide statistics showing for each year between 1980 and 1989 the number of people working on Government-sponsored training programmes in the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: I regret the information is not available.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by tourist board area what information he has on the mean percentage increases that (a) hotel and (b) guest house owners are charging, following the introductions of the uniform business rate.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Public Sector Wage Bargaining (EC)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the system of public sector wage bargaining in each European Community country.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department does not hold comprehensive information on public sector wage bargaining systems in other EEC countries.

Social Charter

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what calculations his Department has made on job losses in the United Kingdom consequent upon the introduction of minimum wage legislation under the European social charter.

Mr. Nicholls: Officials in the Department have estimated that the imposition of a minimum wage set at 50 per cent. of the national average wage would result in the loss of about three quarters of a million jobs in this country.

Wages Inspectorate

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of investigations carried out by the wages inspectorate for the United Kingdom, the south-west region, Avon and the Bristol, South constituency for the latest three years and the numbers of establishments found to be in breach of wages council rates and the numbers of prosecutions for each area and year, respectively.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages inspectorate statistics are not kept for areas smaller than the inspectorate's nine divisions. The table gives the information requested for the south-west division and for Great Britain as a whole. Statistics for 1989 are not yet available.

Northern Ireland has a separate wages council system, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

	Great Britain			South West Division
	1986	1987	1988	1986	1987	1988

Number of establishments found underpaying	8,205	4,443	5,597	832	961	1,156
Number of prosecutions for all wages council offences	3	8	11	—	—	2

Bramley Employment Office

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the planned closure of the Bramley employment office in Leeds, West.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service is working progressively to bring jobcentres and benefit offices together under one roof. This will provide a new and improved one-stop service.

I will ensure that the hon. Member is informed as soon as a decision about the future of the office at Bramley has been taken.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

(a) Number of auditors employed in the Department —124.

(b) Total cost of the auditors—£2,723,881.

(c) Number of audit reports produced in 1989—302.
(d) Number of audit reports drawn to attention of a Minister—3.
(e) The following internal audit work was subcontracted to private firms—Nil.
(f) The total cost of subcontracting works to private firms—Nil.

Paisley Job Club

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many investigations have been made by his officials into the activities of the Paisley job club; and what were the results.

Mr. Eggar: Employment service officials visit Paisley job club at six-monthly intervals as part of the standard monitoring procedure. The last such visit took place on 9 January 1990. In addition, a further meeting took place on 22 February 1990 between employment service officials and the company which is contracted to run the job club on its behalf. This meeting followed allegations made by a journalist working for the Glasgow Evening Times.

The employment service believes that the Paisley job club is, in general, being run in accordance with its requirements. It is accepted that some irregularities in record-keeping have occurred, but these have had no effect on unemployment statistics and have not resulted in any additional payments being made to the contractor. The job club records are being amended to correct the errors which have been found. I believe that the Paisley job club, like the programmes generally, provides valuable help to long-term unemployed people, and others at a disadvantage in the labour market, in their search for work.

MTC Limited

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has regarding forged JC18 forms processed by his Department and MTC Limited of Ingram street, Glasgow; and if he will make a statement on what further steps he intends to take to investigate the allegations and admissions of forged documents.

Mr. Eggar: Form JC18 is a record of membership of, and outcomes from, job clubs. Allegations that 12 forms had been forged at Paisley job club were made by a Glasgow journalist. Investigations are continuing, but it has been established that incorrect information had been entered on job club records by a member who was acting without the authority of MTC Limited or the employment service and who has now left the job club.

Further checks are being made to ensure there are no other errors. The need for further action to ensure accurate record-keeping at the job club will be considered when the results of these checks are known.

The allegations are confined to the Paisley job club.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the contractual relationship between MTC Limited and the Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar: MTC Limited has 19 contracts with the Department of Employment in respect of programmes managed by the employment service. Thirteen of these are to operate job clubs and six are for the provision of restart courses.

There are further contracts between MTC Limited and the Department of Employment in respect of programmes managed by the Training Agency. These relate to employment training and YTS.

Restart

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the outcomes of restart interviews conducted three months prior to and three months after the introduction of the Social Security Act 1989, or the nearest other appropriate dates.

Mr. Eggar: Monthly figures are not available. The only figures available are for the quarters ending September 1989 and December 1989.

In the quarter ending September 1989, 505,600 restart interviews were conducted. Of these 85 per cent. resulted in an offer of help being made and 71 per cent. of interviews resulted in the offer being accepted.

In the quarter ending December 1989, 464,100 restart interviews were conducted. Of these, 82 per cent. resulted in an offer of help being made and 71 per cent. of interviews resulted in the offer being accepted.

Cumbria TEC

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next intends to meet representatives of the Cumbria training and enterprise council.

Mr. Eggar: I last met Mr. Rick Emslie, the chairman of Cumbria training and enterprise council on Tuesday 27 February.

Wages (Regional Variations)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring his Department undertakes on regional variations in pay level for jobs on offer at jobcentres in England.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Employment does not monitor regional pay variations for jobs on offer at jobcentres.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement about the sale of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Eggar: Further to the statement that my right hon. and learned Friend made to the House on 13 February 1990 (Official Report, 13 February 1990, column 141) about the sale of the Skills Training Agency (STA), I can announce that terms of sale have now been agreed with a consortium headed by Mr. Christopher Lakin for the training businesses located at Cumbria (Maryport), East Lancs (Accrington), Ipswich and St. Helens skillcentres.

The offer from Mr. Lakin's consortium was considered against the Government's objectives for the sale, which were placed in the Vote Office on 13 February, and will involve a payment of some £2 million from the Government to the consortium: this reflects the need for restructuring and reforming the training businesses. There will be no loss to the Government from the transaction compared with the alternative of closing these skillcentres. The total number of skillcentres which will be sold is now 51.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure on benefit paid to employment training trainees in December 1989 for Great Britain.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 February 1990]: Trainees on employment training do not receive benefit but a training allowance based on previous benefit entitlement plus an additional amount of £10 a week.

HSE Medical Advisory Service

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of staff employed by the Health and Safety Executive employment medical advisory service for the latest date for which figures are available and for every year since 1979; and if he will provide a breakdown by occupation and location.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 March 1990]: The total numbers from 1979 to 1989 (at 1 June) by occupational group were:

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 384, to the hon. Member for Stretford he will itemise the provisional total of 327 accidents between March 1987 and December 1989, during work on the Channel tunnel, according to the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations; and give the nature of the injury.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 6 March 1990]: The information as requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The table gives a breakdown of the nature of accidents which occurred at the tunnelling sites and were reported to the Health and Safety Executive between March 1987 and December 1989 in accordance with the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations:

Tourism (South Africa)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the United Kingdom ban on the promotion of tourism to South Africa.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1990, c. 956]: My earlier answer to this question contained an error, in that it implied that the Foreign Ministers of the European Community were a party to the ban on the promotion of tourism. Paragraph two of the reply should have read:

"In 1986 European Community Foreign Ministers and, separately, Heads of Government participating at the Commonwealth review meeting agreed to impose a number of measures against South Africa. In the case of the Commonwealth Heads, these included a ban on the promotion of tourism to South Africa. The then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment announced the implementation in the United Kingdom of this ban in a written answer to a parliamentary question on 30 October 1986 (Official Report, column 213). In our case the measure was voluntary."

WALES

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on the investigation into alleged misappropriation of funds regarding the Look After Yourself project sponsored by Gwent health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Water Pollution

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, from 1 January 1988 to date, the drinking water of any Welsh constituency has failed to meet EC standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The EC standards on drinking water quality have been incorporated into national legislation by the Water Act 1989 and the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989.

Under this legislation water undertakers may approach the Secretary of State who appointed them for a relaxation of the standards where this is because of the nature and structure of the ground from which the supply emanates, exceptional meteorological conditions, or in order to maintain a public supply in an emergency. The Secretary of State may also accept undertakings given by water undertakers to carry out remedial work within a specified time scale to bring their supplies up to standard. As a result of these procedures, which have been endorsed by the EC, the Secretary of State has been made aware of supplies including a number in Wales which do not currently meet EC standards.

The undertakers are now required to maintain public registers which include particulars of relaxations, undertakings and the results of sample analysis. In accordance with the regulations, the information is prepared on a water supply zone basis, rather than by constituency.

Local authorities have a duty to monitor the quality of water supplies for domestic purposes in their areas. Water undertakers must provide local authorities with information on the extent to which the undertaker has complied with its obligations to supply wholesome water and, where appropriate, the remedial action taken. Should a local authority believe that the public supply is, or is likely to become, unwholesome and is not satisfied that appropriate remedial action has been taken, the authority is under a duty to notify my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who if the water is supplied by an undertaker appointed by him, must in most circumstances take enforcement action against the undertaker.

The local authority's duty to monitor water supplied for domestic purposes extends to private supplies and if these supplies are unwholesome, authorities may serve a notice requiring the improvement of the supply or connection to a public supply. These notices may be served without notifying the Secretary of State unless representations or objections are received.

M4, Earlswood-Lôn Las

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a detailed analysis of the criteria used to judge tenders for the contract to construct the first stage of the M4 missing link between Earlswood and Lôn Las.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Tenders were assessed against the criteria specified in the documents issued to tendering firms and the award of contract was made on the basis of the lowest acceptable offer.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the unsuccessful tenderers for the construction of the first stage of the M4 missing link between Earlswood and Lôn Las.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is not the practice to publish this information.

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the recent publication "The Structural Funds of the European Communities", produced by the London chamber of commerce.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Publications already held in my Department's library, including the Official Journal of the European Communities, provide sufficient material on the European structural funds for reference purposes.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost, how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Peter Walker: During 1989, 17 staff were employed at a cost of £299,000, and 43 reports were issued. All reports are submitted to senior management who may draw Ministers' attention to specific matters as appropriate.

Subcontracted work includes internal audit services for NDPBs and advice and support on the development of computer audit. The total value of these contracts is £194,000.

Farming

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers, partners, directors and farm workers were employed in each county in Wales in (a) June and (b) December 1989.

Mr. Peter Walker: Figures from the agricultural census for June 1989 are shown in the following table. County figures cannot be produced from the December agricultural sample surveys.

Hospital Construction

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the approximate average lead-in time, from formal submission of planning application to commissioning, of district general hospitals constructed in Wales since 1975.

Mr. Grist: This information is not readily available for all district general hospitals completed in Wales since 1975 but the average lead-in time from submission of a planning application to commissioning has been seven years 10 months for the three most recently built hospitals for which the information is available.

Employment

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the latest available figures of employment in the following sectors in Wales: (a) coal mining, deep-mined and opencast, (b) banking, (c) steel manufacture, (d) dock work, (e) railways and (f) construction.

Mr. Peter Walker: Employment estimates for sectors (b), (e) and (f) are available from the Department of Employment's quarterly series and are given in the table. Information for sectors (a), (c) and (d) is not available from this source.

Employees in employment at September 1989

	Thousands
(b) Banking (and bill discounting)	[1]11·9
(e) Railways	5·8
(f) Construction	44·0

[1] Total employment in the financial services sector amounted to 68,000.

Figures for dock work are included in the supporting services for sea transport category for which there were estimated to be 3,300 employees in employment in September 1989.

British Coal produces the most recent figures available for the deep-mined coal mining sector. There were, on average, 4,100 employees on colliery books in the year up to 31 October 1989. The latest available information on opencast coal mining is from the census of employment, September 1987 when there were 1,400 employees in employment.

Statistics compiled by the British Steel Corporation and the United Kingdom Statistics Bureau show that there were 19,400 employees in the steel industry in December 1988.

Road Improvement

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has proposals to improve the roads between Welshpool and the English border; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The A458 Buttington Cross-Wollaston Cross improvement is planned to start in the period April 1991-March 1994, as indicated in table 6 of "Roads in Wales—Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to issue a statement of policy to guide the proposed Countryside Council for Wales in the exercise of its powers from 1 April 1991.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have placed copies of the draft statement of policy in the Libraries of both Houses and copies have also been placed in the Vote Office.

It is customary for such statements to be determined following discussions between the sponsor Department and the board of the organisation concerned, taking due account of any comments that may be received from other interested organisations. The draft statement will accordingly form the basis of discussions with the new Countryside Council for Wales when the relevant appointments are made.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide for the index-linking of all pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to index-link pensions to earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to do so.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single-pensioner households in Scotland are in receipt or have been in receipt of housing benefit for each of the past five years, expressed as a percentage of all single-pensioner households and as a numerical total.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. In 1988 in Scotland, an estimated 250,000 single people aged 60 or over were receiving housing benefit. This represents 11·3 per cent. of the total single-person population aged 60 or over in Scotland.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent figures for the total number of (a) single parents in Scotland, (b) single-parent households in Scotland and (c) single-parent households in Scotland in receipt of housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 22 February 1990]: We do not hold precise information about the single-parent population in Scotland. It is broadly estimated that in 1986 there were 100,000 single parents in Scotland, including single households which cannot be identified separately. I regret that comparative information for housing benefit is not available before May 1988 when an estimated 80,000 single parents in Scotland were receiving benefit.

Taxation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for (a) 1960, (b) 1970, (c) 1980 and (d) the latest year, the number of married couples (i) with children and (b) without children when (i) both or (ii) only one partner works and pays tax; and if he will estimate the numbers below the tax threshold.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The available information is shown in the table:

1989-90 (millions)

	[2] Above tax threshold	[3] Below tax threshold
Married couples with children
Both partners working	3·1	0·1
Only one[1] partner working	2·0	0·2
Married couples without children
Both partners working	3·0	0·1
Only one[1] partner working	1·3	0·3

Figures for the earlier years are not available.

[1] Either husband or wife.
[2] Tax unit pays tax.
[3] Tax unit does not pay tax.

Pensioners

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met representatives of pensioners' organisations; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We regularly meet representatives from pensioners' organisations. Most recently my right hon. Friend the Minister of State accompanied the Prime Minister at a meeting with a delegation from the National Pensioners' Convention and discussed a range of issues of concern to it.

Community Charge

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any additional information on the income levels up to which community charge benefits will be payable for the personal circumstances contained in the reply to the hon. Member for Taunton of 1 November 1989, Official Report, columns 233-34, on a community charge in 1990-91 of £350.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton on 1 November 1989 showed the relevant income levels using the benefit rates applicable from 1 April 1990 on an assumed community charge of £350. I have nothing further to add.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many Scots are eligible for poll tax rebates at less than the maximum rate in 1989-90;

(2) how many Scots are receiving the maximum 80 per cent. poll tax rebate in 1989-90;

(3) how many single householders in Scotland are (a) eligible for the maximum 80 per cent. poll tax rebate and (b) eligible for poll tax rebate at less than the maximum rate, in 1989-90.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 22 February 1990]: Information is available only on numbers estimated to be receiving community charge rebates, not numbers eligible. In 1989-90, some 320,000 claimants in Scotland are receiving rebates at less than the maximum rate and 560,000 at the maximum rate. About 280,000 single householders are receiving maximum rebate and 120,000 less than the maximum. Claims from couples are counted as one.

Social Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) of 26 February, Official Report, columns 56-58, if he will give for each of the social security offices listed (a) their single payment expenditure in 1987-88, (b) their social fund expenditure on loans and grants for 1988-89, (c) their social fund expenditure on loans and grants for the first nine months of 1989-90, (d) their current refusal rate for social fund applications and (e) the extra allocation of social fund money they have received.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is either in the Library or can be derived from that information.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the expenditure during the current financial year to date, and in the previous financial year, by way of (a) social fund loans and (b) grants for each social security area office in Wales.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the Library.

Disability

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure deaf students will continue to be eligible for (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) unemployment benefit following the introduction of top-up loans for students.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We propose that those deaf students who meet the criteria for the disability premium will continue to be eligible for income support and housing benefit. This will include any deaf student in receipt of attendance allowance, mobility allowance, invalidity pension or severe disablement allowance, and those who are also registered blind. Students whose sole disability is deafness are among the least likely to have additional weekly living expenses because of their disability of the kind that income support and housing benefit are intended to meet. Deaf students who face additional costs in connection with their course of study will continue to be eligible for the disabled students allowance under the mandatory award arrangements. We also propose that all full-time students will be excluded from unemployment benefit since students have removed themselves from the labour market and are not unemployed.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure that all disabled students will continue to be eligible for (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) unemployment benefit following the introduction of top-up loans for students.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We propose that students who meet the criteria for the disability premium will continue to be eligible for income support and housing benefit. This will include any student in receipt of attendance allowance, mobility allowance, invalidity pension or severe disablement allowance and students who are registered blind. We also propose that all full-time students will be excluded from unemployment benefit since students have removed themselves from the labour market and are not unemployed.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the European Community's programme to assist handicapped people has been apportioned between the individual states; and how the United Kingdom's allocation is to be used.

Mr. Scott: The amount allocated to the programme, called HELIOS, was not divided between member states but assigned to the various aspects of the programme, the majority going towards the development of HANDYNET, the multilingual computerised database of information on disability questions.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department of Social Security currently employs 159 internal auditors at an annual cost of £3·08 million. A total of 94 internal audit reports were produced in 1989. None was drawn to the attention of Ministers.

No social security internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms.

Children in Hospital (Parental Visits)

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the travel expenses as detailed in his most recent annual report of the number of requests his Department's offices received from parents to visit children in hospital, a profile of the amounts granted and refused and a breakdown by region, county or district.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 29 January 1990 at column 34.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people currently receive invalid care allowance; and how many of them are on income support.

Mr. Scott: The estimated average number receiving invalid care allowance in 1989-90 is 110,000. The latest information is that at May 1988 there were some 8,000 income support recipients where invalid care allowance was also in payment to themselves or their partner.

Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he gave to the constitutional implications before he laid regulation 72, Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations, S.I., 1986 No. 2218; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Prior to the introduction of regulation 72 of the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1986, arrears of social security benefits payable as a result of the review of a decision were generally restricted to 12 months, even though the decision was erroneous because of official error, including an error of law by the adjudication officer.

Regulation 72, which came into force on 6 April 1987, was designed to enable the statutory payment of arrears of benefit in full where there had been an underpayment of benefit that was solely attributable to a mistake on the part of an official, including an adjudication officer. However, legal advice revealed that regulation 72 had an unintended side effect in that where a social security commissioner, or higher judicial authority, overturned the prevailing interpretation of the law, adjudication officers' decisions given prior to that new interpretation fell to be described as errors of law, even though they were made in good faith and in accordance with the interpretation of the law at the time.

As a result, with effect from 1 September 1987, the 12-month limitation on arrears was reimposed where adjudication officers reviewed decisions in consequence of a reinterpretation of the law by a commissioner or higher appellate body.

Relocation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the criteria used in deciding (a) to relocate offices of his Department and (b) where to relocate offices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 21 February 1990]: The decision to relocate some processing work from 21 inner London local social security offices to three social security centres in Glasgow, Makerfield and Belfast was announced to the House by the former Secretary of State on 16 January 1989 at columns 46–47. None of the 21 local offices is to be closed and the whole project is driven by our desire to improve the quality of our service to our customers.

The local offices were selected using the systematic application of the following criteria:

where the service to the public was most likely to be improved where staff recruitment or retention problems were particularly severe where working conditions for staff were poor which combination of offices would produce a sensible pattern of service on the ground.

The selection of the locations for the three social security centres was the result of the systematic analysis of the 335 travel-to-work areas in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, against the following criteria:

a work force big enough to sustain 500 clerical jobs;

good educational standards;

assisted area status;

recent Department of Social Security experience that recruitment and retention was good; availability of suitable buildings or sites suitable for a fast build;

where we could make the best contribution to offering alternative posts to our staff who would otherwise be surplus to requirements when our computerisation programme is complete.

SCOTLAND

Home Security

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what portion of local authorities' housing budgets are devoted to improving security of homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. It is for individual authorities to determine their own policies and priorities within the resources available.

Housing (Glasgow)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the last discussion between a Minister and Glasgow district council on the matter of housing capital programmes; and what decisions have been taken by him since then which affect the capital programme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I paid a housing visit to Glasgow district council on 2 February. Since then I have announced a supplementary capital allocation of £3·5 million to Glasgow district council to support work in the public and private sectors in the current financial year.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and those for which the Lord Advocate is responsible and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At 2 March 1990 28 staff and five staff were employed on internal audit duties in the Scottish Office and in my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Advocate's Departments, at a total cost of about £800,000 and £85,000 respectively. A total of 69 reports were produced in the Scottish Office in 1989, none of which required to be referred to my right hon. and learned Friend or other ministerial colleagues. A total of 22 reports were produced in my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Advocate's Departments, one of which was drawn to the attention of the Minister. No internal audit work is undertaken by private sector firms.

Farming

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers, partners, directors and farm workers were employed in each county in Scotland in (a) June and (b) December 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish counties ceased to be used for agricultural statistics purposes after 1975 following local government reform. The number of farmers and farm workers in June 1989, by local authority region, is shown in the table; partners and directors are not separately enumerated in the June agricultural census but are included either as farmers or farm workers:

Region	Number of farmers	Number of farmworkers
Islands	2,166	901
Highland	2,817	1,901
Grampian	4,689	5,095
Tayside	2,073	3,036

Strathclyde	4,288	5,458
Dumfries and Galloway	2,352	3,938

The December survey is based on returns from only a sample of farmers and is not designed to produce statistics of the agricultural labour force at regional level.

Job Clubs

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest job entry rates for people in job clubs in Scotland, broken down by regional area.

Mr. Lang: The information sought is not available in the form requested as it is possible to provide a breakdown only by employment service areas. On 26 January 1990 for these areas of Scotland the cumulative job entry rates for people in job clubs were as set out in the table:

Area	Jobclub job entry rate per cent.

Training Schemes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many providers of employment training and youth training schemes in Scotland have attained approved training organisation status broken down by regional area.

Mr. Lang: To date, no employment training agent or training manager in Scotland has attained full approved training organisation status.

Information about the number of youth training scheme managing agents in Scotland who have attained approved training organisation status is available only by Training Agency area as set out in the table:

Bellsdyke Hospital

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Scottish hospital advisory service on Bellsdyke hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library today.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take urgent action to deal with the inadequate standards of staffing, accommodation and other resources, referred to in the report of the Scottish hospital advisory service on Bellsdyke hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish hospital advisory service (SHAS) is a Government-funded "watchdog" service with an independent remit. Its report on Bellsdyke hospital contains both criticism and praise and has been sent to Forth Valley health board to consider the findings and recommendations in the normal way. The board will advise the Scottish Home and Health Department of its proposals for follow-up action shortly. The board's strategic plans already address problems at the hospital and the recent SHAS report helps focus the attention of both the Department and the board upon the most pressing areas for action.

Further Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid out in non-recurrent grants under the Further Education (Approved Associations) (Scotland) Grant Regulations 1989; and to which bodies.

Mr. Lang: The information for 1989-90 for each education authority area is set out in the table. The figures include estimates, where appropriate, of grant still to be claimed before 31 March 1990.

Takare plc

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is now in a position to announce when Greater Glasgow health board expects to complete the contract with Takare plc.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 February 1990]: I have today given Greater Glasgow health board approval to finalise contractual arrangements with Takare plc for the provision of 120 beds for the elderly and elderly with dementia in Rutherglen. This is to be welcomed as an innovative collaboration between Greater Glasgow health board and Takare. It will provide a modern appropriate environment with the highest standards of care for the elderly. This will be achieved more rapidly than the board could otherwise guarantee. The costs will be lower than the board's present costs with savings being reinvested in further improvements in health care for patients in the Greater Glasgow health board area. I am sure the hon. Gentleman will welcome these improvements in the care of the elderly in his constituency.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has implemented to ensure that recruitment and promotion policy in his Department does not directly or indirectly discriminate against applicants who were mature students or women returning to work following a career break due to child care.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 5 March 1990]: My Department as a matter of course provides guidance for members of recruitment and promotion boards which includes reference to the need to avoid discrimination of this kind. The practice of my Department, subject to certain conditions, is to reinstate all applicants who originally resigned for domestic reasons. Previous service is taken into account for pay and seniority purposes and, in certain circumstances, previous performance assessments count towards eligibility for promotion boards. In addition, plans are in hand to introduce short answer tests as an alternative to formal education qualifications for recruitment at administrative assistant and administrative officer level and to extend special leave arrangements to allow staff breaks in employment of up to five years with automatic right of re-engagement.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

20. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to make a further visit to Hong Kong in the immediate future. I hope to visit in the next few months.

30. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will pay an official visit to Green Island.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to do so.

Estonia

21. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has received a copy of the declaration of the General Assembly in Estonia on independent statehood of 2 February; and whether he sent any message to the Estonian Parliament to coincide with the Estonian national day on 24 February.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received a copy of the declaration. He did not send a message in connection with the Estonian national day.

British Hovercraft Expedition

22. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to give publicity and assistance to the British hovercraft expedition to China from Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The organisers of this expedition have been in close touch with the ODA, as well as the British embassy and British Council in Peking, and the British trade commission in Hong Kong, which have given advice on commercial sponsorship and publicity. The British ambassador in Peking has also donated £1,000 toward the purchase of solar refrigerators for the expedition. The objectives of this expedition are admirable, and I wish it well.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

23. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions his Department has held with the Palestine Liberation Organisation representatives about the abandonment of terrorist attacks against Israeli citizens and others.

Mr. Waldegrave: We take every opportunity to stress to the PLO the importance of its maintaining its commitment to refrain from terrorism. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs did so most recently when he saw Bassam Abu Sharif on 1 March.

35. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have made any representations to the Palestine Liberation Organisation with respect to terrorist attacks undertaken by Fatah against Israeli civilian targets within Israel's 1967 borders, since December 1988.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made clear to both the PLO and Israel that we deplore violence from whatever quarter and look to them to resolve their differences through face-to-face negotiations.

Albania

24. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made recently on Albanian human rights.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 21 February, at the current session of the UN Commission on Human Rights, we and our EC partners expressed our concern at the reports of recurring violations of human rights and particularly religious persecution in Albania.

German Unification

25. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on his policy on the issue of German unification.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have long supported the principle of German unification, to be brought about as the result of the freely expressed choice of the peoples of the two Germanys. Alongside self-determination goes the need for joint determination of external issues. This need will be fulfilled through the framework agreed in Ottawa and through other consultations.

58. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his Federal Republic of Germany counterpart concerning German reunification and the position of existing international boundaries.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has had regular meetings with Mr. Genscher, most recently when he called on the Prime Minister on 15 February. My right hon. Friend shall be seeing him in Bonn on 12 March to discuss a number of subjects of mutual interest, including the external aspects of German unification.

73. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United Kingdom's European Economic Community partners about the reunification of Germany.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last discussed German unification with his EC colleagues at the Foreign Affairs Council on 5 March. We are looking forward to further discussion at the informal EC summit proposed by the Presidency for 28 April.

EC-United States Relationship

26. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to strengthen the relationship between the European Community and the United States.

68. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to strengthen the relationship between the European Community and the United States.

Mr. Maude: We have set out a framework for a strengthened EC-US relationship. We have proposed more frequent ministerial meetings, closer consultation between officials on political co-operation subjects and more regular high-level dialogue on Community issues. We want to create with these elements a new transatlantic consultative partnership. A package on the lines we have proposed has gained wide support within the Community and in the United States.

South Africa

27. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the conditions and prerequisites which he considers that the United Kingdom and its European Community partners should adopt for the abandonment of sanctions against South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Community's ultimate objective is the achievement of a democratic multiracial system in South Africa through peaceful means. As South Africa progresses towards that goal we believe it would be right for the Community to make a measured response by lifting some of its restrictive measures.

29. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: We will maintain our policy of encouragement and pressure on the South African Government to bring about an end to apartheid, giving a measured response to progress.

31. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with whom he hopes to have consultations on his coming visit to southern Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: During any visit to South Africa, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs would hope to have consultations with a wide range of opinion across the political spectrum.

54. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he now proposes to make a visit to the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to visit South Africa soon, perhaps at the time of Namibian independence.

61. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of South Africa regarding Walvis bay.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. It is for the Government of an independent Namibia to decide how they wish to approach negotiations with South Africa on Walvis bay. We remain committed to the principle of UNSCR 432 that Walvis bay should be reintegrated into Namibia. We and our contact group partners have made clear our willingness to offer diplomatic support, if required, to achieve a successful negotiation.

62. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the subject of the Government's policy on sanctions against South Africa since the release of Nelson Mandela.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received representations from members of the public, hon. Members of this House and from certain organisations.

66. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the Government's policy on sanctions against South Africa.

70. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government now propose to take to encourage the end of apartheid within South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: We will maintain our policy of encouragement and pressure on the South African Government to bring about an end to apartheid, giving a measured response to progress.

72. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received with regard to the recent march by Mrs. Winnie Mandela and 50,000 people to present an ultimatum and its implications for Government policy on South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received no representations on this subject.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to be able to make an early visit to India, but has no current plans.

Iraq

32. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have received to their protests, made last year, to the Iraqi authorities over their use of chemical weapons against Iraq's minority Kurdish population.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Iraqi Foreign Minister gave a public undertaking in September 1988 that Iraq would not resort to the use of chemical weapons. He reaffirmed his Government's commitment to this policy at the Paris conference on chemical weapons in January 1989. We take these undertakings seriously and expect the Iraqi Government to honour them.

Nicaragua

33. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to receive the report from David Browning on the conduct of the elections in Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to receive the report from David Browning on the conduct of the elections in Nicaragua; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have already received a preliminary report from Dr. Browning. We expect to receive his definitive report on his return to the United Kingdom. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House at the earliest opportunity.

In this preliminary report, Dr. Browning said that, despite a campaign in which the FSLN made maximum use of the inbuilt bias towards it in the prevailing political system and of its control of the state apparatus, the evidence of the polls was that the people of Nicaragua were able to make their choice in a secret and properly administered vote.

40. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to meet with the newly elected Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no present plans to meet members of the newly elected Government.

67. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the outcome of the Nicaraguan elections.

Mr. Sainsbury: The election, which all observers judged to be free and fair, gave the people of Nicaragua an opportunity to exercise their right to choose their own Government. We warmly welcome this development, which marks a further strengthening of democracy in the region.

45. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom-Nicaraguan relations following the election in Nicaragua.

69. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to review his policy concerning Nicaragua.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consider changing United Kingdom policy towards Nicaragua.

Mr. Sainsbury: It remains our policy to support the Esquipulas II peace agreement and, in particular, its provisions for the establishment of pluralistic democracies throughout central America. The election of 25 February marked a further welcome development in this process, and we look forward to working with the Government of Mrs. Chamorro.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States on the conduct and outcome of the recent elections in Nicaragua.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to do so.

Jordan

38. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any reports on military co-operation between Jordan and Iraq; and whether he will make a statement on the future of British military assistance to Jordan.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is a long history of military co-operation between Jordan and its Arab friends, including Iraq, although recent reports about the extent of the latter appear exaggerated. Military assistance will remain an important element in our close and friendly relations with Jordan.

Council of Ministers

39. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues he expects to discuss at the next General Affairs Council of Ministers meeting.

Mr. Maude: We expect a range of EC issues to be discussed.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Hurd: The Foreign Affairs Council met on 5 March. The Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations is due to end in December 1990. The European Commission, which negotiates on behalf of member states, will report to the Council on the current status of the negotiations. Ministers are expected to discuss proposals from the Commission on European Community policy on Japanese car imports after 1992. Ministers will adopt the draft negotiating mandate for an EC-Czechoslovakia trade and co-operation agreement and the Commission may seek member states' views on the timing of the conclusion of an EC-GDR trade and co-operation agreement. Ministers are also expected to discuss preparations for the forthcoming inter-governmental conference and to consider proposals for the site of the European Environment Agency. The Commission will report on how it intends to respond to the Council's declaration at Strasbourg that there should be a substantial increase in EC aid to the occupied territories. The Council will endorse the Community's position for the EC-GCC joint council to be held in Muscat on 17 March.

The Agricultural Council met on 5, 6 and possibly 7 March to discuss the annual price fixing and possibly non-food uses of agricultural products, bovine semen, the amendment of regulation 857/84 (milk) and the position on the adoption of agricultural structures regulations. It will also meet on 26 and 27 March to discuss the annual price fixing and possibly non-food uses of agricultural products, medicated feedingstuffs and pesticide residues.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 12 March to discuss the Commission's progress in the fight against fraud as set out in its first annual report, the Court of Auditors' report on the 1988 budget to inform an opinion from the Council to the European Parliament on granting the Commission a discharge in respect of the implementation of the 1988 budget, a revision of the financial perspective with an aim for agreement on Commission proposals for a substantive revision of the financial perspective for 1991 and 1992, the proposed revised Council decisions on economic convergence and co-operation between central banks, economic surveillance procedures during stage I of economic and monetary union, and a proposal to increase the borrowing limit for loans made by EURATOM. Ministers are also expected to discuss the need for early production of the Commission's revised VAT technical proposals and the need for rapid decisions thereafter.

At the Industry Council on 13 March, the Commission is expected to introduce a proposal for a Council directive on the creation of a restoration certificate. The certificate would in effect extend the term of patent protection of a pharmaceutical product from the present 20 years in most EC states, to a maximum of 30 years. The Commission will argue that such a measure is necessary to compensate for the increasing time taken for new drugs to obtain the safety approval without which they cannot be placed on the market. The Council will consider Commission reports on the future of the EC textiles and clothing industry, the trade barriers operated by other countries against EC textiles and clothing exports, and the possibility of establishing a central body ("observatory") to provide statistics in this sector. The Council will also consider a Commission report on the Community footwear industry. The report outlines measures the Commission believes the industry needs to adopt to take full advantage of the opportunities offered by the completion of the single market. It lays much stress on increased EC collaboration in R and D, the development of profession training, and improvements in production process by means of technical innovation and modernisation. A discussion will take place on the need for a regulatory framework for biotechnology in the Community.

At the Environment Council on 22 March Ministers may discuss further the proposed Environment Agency. It is hoped that the proposal to establish a committee to facilitate amendment of directives on drinking water, bathing water and surface water will be adopted. The Council is hoping for agreement on a resolution on the proposal for a Community strategy on waste management, and there is likely to be detailed discussion and the possible adoption of the proposal to guarantee the public freedom of access to data on the environment. A detailed discussion is expected leading to the possible adoption of the proposal to protect waters from pollution by nitrates. An early exchange of views is expected on the proposal to consolidate European anti-pollution standards for all categories of vehicles; EC member states are required to introduce tighter gaseous emission standards for cars over 1400 cc by 31 December 1992. There is likely to be a discussion on a Community position on the adoption of severe measures to protect the ozone layer in the light of the forthcoming renegotiation of the Montreal protocol.

The Transport Council will meet on 29 March. Further discussion will take place on the detail of proposals for a second stage of air transport liberalisation, for increasing the Community road haulage quotas by 40 per cent. for 1990, 1991 and 1992 and for fixing maximum authorised dimensions for road trains. There will also be some discussion of the Commission's railway policy proposals, centering on combined transport and possibly leading to discussion of transport infrastructure and the problems of transit through third countries. There may be some discussion of EUROS and of the liberalisation of shipping, of passenger transport by coach and bus and an exchange of views on fiscal harmonisation in the road haulage sector.

Drugs

41. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international measures are in hand to combat the drugs trade.

Mr. Sainsbury: Some 90 states, including the United Kingdom, have now signed the 1988 United Nations convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs recently addressed a United Nations special session on drugs in New York, which adopted a political declaration and a global programme of action. We will host a world ministerial summit in London in April to look at ways of reducing the demand for drugs and combating the cocaine threat. Within Europe, anti-drugs co-operation takes place in a number of fora, notably with our European Community partners and within the Pompidou group, which the United Kingdom chairs. The United Kingdom has played an active part in the work of the financial action task force set up by the Paris economic summit to consider measures to combat money laundering.

56. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part Britain is playing in international efforts to defeat the drugs trade.

Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs addressed a United Nations special session on drugs in New York. The United Kingdom is one of some 90 states to have signed the United Nations convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. We have signed bilateral agreements or arrangements to trace, freeze and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking with 13 countries. We co-operate closely with our European neighbours in a number of fora, and have played an active part in the work of the financial action task force set up by the Paris economic summit to consider measures to combat money laundering.

On 8 February he had meetings with HRH the Prince of Wales, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and several Cabinet colleagues. During conversations which covered trade, the environment, debt and many other bilateral and international matters, Senor Collor impressed us with his grasp of a wide range of issues and his determination to tackle Brazil's economic and social problems. 76. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met a representative of the Soviet Government; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Shevardnadze in Ottawa on 13 February. Their discussions focused on developments in Europe.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for a regular bulletin relating to visa requirements to be posted in British consulates in eastern Europe for the benefit of intending travellers to the United Kingdom.

We will also continue to implement the special measures for the poorest debtors agreed at the 1988 Toronto economic summit. For middle-income debtors, specific support for commercial bank debt reduction operations will continue to be available through the IMF and World Bank.

Sri Lanka

47. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to the Government of Sri Lanka concerning that country's human rights record; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have made clear to the Sri Lankan Government our concerns about human rights abuses in Sri Lanka. Our High Commissioner discussed the matter with President Premadasa on 28 February. We welcome the positive measures which the President has taken recently.

Namibia

48. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government will make available to Namibia following independence.

European Commission

52. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the President of the European Commission.

Mr. Hurd: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Brussels on 5 March. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed progress and prospects for the GATT Uruguay round, reffirmed its commitment to a successful outcome and agreed on the need for EC initiatives, particularly on the settlement of disputes. The United Kingdom stressed the importance of making progress on agriculture.

The Council accepted that the Commission on its own responsibility should begin discussion with the Japanese on the future regime for imports of Japanese cars. The United Kingdom pressed for a liberal approach, arguing that there should be no restrictions on cars produced by Japanese-owned firms in the United Kingdom.

In a brief discussion of eastern Europe, the Council approved the Commission's negotiating mandate for a trade and commercial and economic co-operation agreement with Czechoslovakia. The Commission also reported on the recent fact-finding mission to Belgrade. The United Kingdom suggested that for purposes of future EC aid Yugoslavia should be treated primarily as an east European rather than a Mediterranean country. Herr Genscher briefed his colleagues on the latest developments over German unification and its external consequences, which Ministers then discussed.

The Council approved a Commission report on future EC assistance to the occupied territories following the commitment at the Strasbourg European Council to double the volume of EC aid to the territories.

Ministers discussed preparations for the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union, initiated the formal procedure for consulting the European Parliament and agreed to consider arrangements for informal dialogue with the Parliament.

There was also discussion of the siting of the European Environment Agency, the European bank for reconstruction and development (EBRD) and other Community institutions. The United Kingdom pressed the merits of Cambridge and London to host the Environment Agency and EBRD respectively.

Lebanon (Hostages)

57. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps have been taken by his Department to seek to secure the release of British hostages held in the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister of 30 January to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Brown), Vol. 166, column 125.

Czechoslovakia

59. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government are currently giving to Czechoslovakia.

NATO

60. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Secretary-General of NATO and what will be discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had a very useful meeting with Dr. Woerner in Brussels on 5 March. 71. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to support the European Economic Community decision to review scientific agreements with Israel because of its treatment of Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Romania

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to provide further aid for handicapped children in Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the light of recent reports about the inadequacy of all forms of health care in Romania, we have sent emergency medical and food relief both directly and through the European Community. The total value of all aid sent so far by both routes, or now in the pipeline, is over £6 million. We are now considering what more can be done.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of people killed (a) before or (b) since the coup d'etat in Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Romanian authorities have told us that no reliable figures can yet be provided of the number of people injured during the revolution. But we are sceptical of reports that it ran into thousands.

Vietnam

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the United Nations to press the United States Government to permit access to its proceedings in New York for Palestinian political leaders.

Mr. Waldegrave: The question of access to proceedings in New York is for the United Nations to resolve in consultation with the United States Government in accordance with the headquarters agreement. There is an observer mission of Palestine at the United Nations and the head of the PLO political department visits the United Nations regularly.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the United States Secretary of State to remove restrictions on Palestinian political leaders entering the United States of America to address meetings and engage in political dialogue.

Mr. Waldegrave: It must be for the United States Government to decide who should or should not be allowed to enter the United States. A number of leading Palestinians have visited the United States and addressed meetings there. We welcome this and the official US-PLO dialogue in Tunis.

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in respect of how many directives under the 1992 programme the United Kingdom is in default of implementing in due time.

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in respect of how many European Community directives the United Kingdom is the subject of complaint by the Commission for failure to implement correctly.

Mr. Maude: The Commission issued 22 preliminary requests for information from the United Kingdom in 1989 about possible failures to implement EC directives. Twelve have already been clarified satisfactorily. On a further eight, we have provided the Commission with details of implementation; and shall do likewise for the remaining two.

The United Kingdom's implementation record is among the best in the Community.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Sainsbury: The joint internal audit unit of the FCO, which serves both wings, employs 21 internal auditors at an estimated total cost of approximately £845,000 (excluding superannuation) for 1989-90. In 1989 the joint internal audit unit issued 64 audit reports; one of these was brought to the attention of a Minister in the FCO.

None of the work of the joint internal audit unit is subcontracted out, although the FCO has used private consultants on internal audit work on four occasions in the last five years, and once in the last year sought unsuccessfully to negotiate a consultancy.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn, Official Report, 28 February, column 210, on the communications with the European proliferation information centre (i) what recent letter he has received from the centre, (ii) what reply has been sent and (iii) what are the reasons for the proposed meeting between his Department and the centre, to which he made earlier reference, not taking place.

Mr. Waldegrave: The most recent correspondence received from the European proliferation information centre (EPIC) is a letter from Dr. David Lowry dated 23 February, our reply to which will be sent shortly. The offer to hold a meeting between this Department and EPIC was made in reply to EPIC's letter of 31 October, and we hope it will soon be possible to arrange a meeting.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received a copy of the European Parliament's resolution about amending the treaties, Community legislation and institutional reform of 23 November 1989 which the President was instructed to forward to all national Governments; and whether he will state Her Majesty's Government's policy towards it.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received a copy of the European Parliament's resolution to which my hon. Friend refers. We do not believe that treaty changes are necessary at this stage. The Foreign Affairs Council on 5 March discussed preparations for the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union, initiated the formal procedure for consulting the European Parliament and agreed to consider arrangements for informal dialogue with the Parliament.

Chile

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Chile after 11 March.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to visit Chile; but my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord President will represent Her Majesty the Queen at the inauguration of President Aylwin.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the reasons for the delay in reaching a decision on the visa application of Mr. Vorng Ky of Cambodia; when a decision is to be expected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I understand that the Home Office wrote to the hon. Member on 5 March 1990, in response to her letter of 20 February 1990, requesting further details of Mr. Ky in order to trace his visa application. On receipt of this information I will also make appropriate inquiries of the overseas post concerned.

Helsinki Final Act

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation by the Soviet Union and eastern European countries of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act during the period 1 July to 31 December 1989.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have recently prepared a report on the implementation by the Soviet Union and eastern European countries of their CSCE commitments for this period. Copies will be deposited in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

RAF Bentwaters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) at what stage in the decision-making proposals are to station F-15E aircraft of the United States Air Force at RAF Bentwaters in Suffolk;

(2) how many F-15E aircraft would be supported by (a) the proposed field training facility and (b) the proposed conventional munitions shop at RAF Bentwaters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 6 February 1990, column 604. No decisions have been taken to station F-15E aircraft at RAF Bentwaters.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the deactivation of the 527 aggressor squadron at RAF Bentwaters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States Government recently announced their intention to withdraw the squadron of F-16 aircraft—the "aggressor squadron"—from RAF Bentwaters as part of a series of proposed changes in United States force levels in Europe. I understand that the aircraft are being placed in reserve at bases in Germany. The withdrawal of the aircraft themselves is now complete.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much will be the contribution by (a) the United States in fiscal year 1991 and (b) the United Kingdom in fiscal year 1990-91 towards construction of facilities announced by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, Official Report, 11 January, columns 691-92, at Royal Air Force Molesworth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All costs for the development of the joint analysis centre at RAF Molesworth will be borne by the United States Government. I understand that the request for funding authorisation in United States' fiscal year 1991 amounts to some $17·25 million.

United States Military Construction Projects

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military construction projects in the United Kingdom for support of United States forces funded from the NATO infrastructure fund currently under construction, giving for each project its location, the nature of the facilities to be constructed, the date that construction started and the scheduled date of completion.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to publish information of this kind.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United States military construction projects in the United Kingdom for which funding approval was given in fiscal year 1990, giving for each project its location, the nature of the facilities to be constructed and the scheduled dates for the start and completion of the construction.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the US authorities have received US congressional funding approval for fiscal year 1990 for the following military construction projects in the United Kingdom. The detailed start and completion dates for these projects are a matter for the US authorities, although it should be noted that Her Majesty's Government have not yet given approval for all these projects to be carried out.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the United States military construction projects in the United Kingdom for which funding approval is being sought for the United States fiscal years 1991 and 1992, giving for each project its location, the nature of the facilities to be constructed and the scheduled dates for the start and completion of the construction;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew), Official Report, 6 February, columns 603-4, whether he has now been informed by his United States counterpart of any United States military construction projects additional to those listed in that answer for which funding is being sought for the fiscal year 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My answer to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 6 February (columns 603-4) listed projects in the United Kingdom for which the United States Air Force had sought funding in fiscal year 1991. In addition, funding approval is being sought for a Department of Defense dependants' school at Harrogate, and by the United States Navy for a dental clinic at RAF Edzell and for a fleet hospital facility at RAF Lanark. I understand that the United States authorities have not yet sought funding approval for military construction projects for their fiscal year 1992.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future use of RAF Greenham Common by United States forces including details of what functions will be continued on the base, how many personnel will remain on base, and whether there will be any regular flying activity from the base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 6 February, columns 591-92. I understand that current United States plans are for around 400 personnel to be retained at the station.

RAF Wethersfield

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future use of RAF Wethersfield by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decisions have yet been taken concerning the future of RAF Wethersfield after it is handed back to the Ministry of Defence in June 1991.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of the United States forces units or equipment currently based at RAF Wethersfield will be moved to other locations within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand from the United States authorities that about a quarter of the 400 personnel of the 819 civil engineering squadron will remain in the United Kingdom, dispersed among the United States' main operating bases. The squadron's equipment will remain in the United Kingdom in storage.

Radiation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the upper quartile range of maximum radiation doses rates sustained by workers at (a) the Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston, (b) Plymouth, Devonport and (c) Rosyth for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures requested are given in tables 1 and 2, based on the interpretation of upper quartile as the range of doses to which the most highly exposed 25 per cent. of the workers are subjected. The lowest dose of the upper quartile range cannot be readily identified for the royal dockyards (table 1) due to the way the figures are compiled. Both for AWE and the royal dockyards, however, the vast majority of exposures are much less than 15mSv.

Table 1

Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of notified accidents at the Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Neubert: The numbers of abnormal occurrences notified by Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston to regulatory and environmental authorities, under the criteria in force at the time, for each of the past five years are:

	Number
1985	3
1986	26
1987	46
1988	47
1989	46

The apparent increase between 1985 and 1987 was a result of changed reporting arrangements and criteria.

Almost all these occurrences were industrial injuries or other events unconnected with radioactive substances. None involved exposure to radiation above one thousandth of a milliSeivert.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the Royal Air Force will not introduce a computerised logging system for military low-flying aircraft sorties before 1992 at the earliest.

Mr. Neubert: The intention to introduce a computerised notification and warning system in the United Kingdom low-flying system was announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 20 October 1988, at column 1101. It is planned to bring the system into use in 1992. This is a complex system and it will take this period to develop the appropriate software and instal terminals in all low-flying units.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department will establish an exclusion zone of a radius of 20 miles around the sites of major open air festivals in low-flying training areas.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken by his Department to brief other NATO aircrew of the need to avoid disturbance to major open air festivals in low-flying areas.

Mr. Neubert: Relevant notices to airmen (NOTAMs) are brought to the attention of all military aircrews planning low-flying sorties in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the aerodrome at Netherthorpe lies within a military low-flying transit area.

Mr. Neubert: Yes.

Nerve Gas

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tonnes of nerve gas are stockpiled on United Kingdom soil by NATO forces; and if he will show in his answer the amount for each member country.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by location, the sites of NATO nerve gas stockpiles in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is none.

Royal Navy (Vessel Location)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to publish regular updates of the global location of (a) Royal Navy surface ships, (b) Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships, (c) Royal Navy diesel-powered submarines and (d) Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Military Personnel (Radiation)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he will review the relevance to his Department of the research conducted by Professor Martin Gardner for the Medical Research Council into the correlation between childhood leukaemia and fathers working at Sellafield; and whether he will commission a report into radiation and submariners by Professor Gardner;

(2) if he will commission research into the health of submariners with (a) abnormalities in the offspring of submariners working on nuclear submarines and (b) abnormalities in the offspring of groups regularly working in closest proximity to the nuclear reactors of submarines;

(3) what research studies have been undertaken into the health of the offspring of and individuals (a) working with nuclear materials in the armed forces and (b) working in the nuclear defence industry;

(4) whether he will commission studies into abnormalities in the offspring of those working around (a) military nuclear power stations, (b) sites involved in the manufacture of nuclear reactors, (c) sites involved in the manufacture of nuclear arms, (d) sites where military nuclear waste is stored, (e) nuclear weapons storage facilities and (f) naval dockyards working with nuclear material.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 28 February 1990, Official Report, column 246.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to re-evaluate the current programme of seeking Z-berths for reserve use by nuclear submarines in the light of the Gardner report on radiation risks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy to charge facility fees when journalists or radio or television crews are carried in search and rescue helicopters engaged in flying operations;

(2) if he will make it his policy to recover landing charges incurred by search and rescue helicopters when these are caused by the picking up and setting down of journalists or radio or television crews.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is already the policy to charge for the costs of providing facilities for journalists and radio or television crews, except where the provision of the facilities is judged to be in the interests of the Department, when no charge is made. Each case will continue to be judged on its merits.

Anti-tank Helicopters

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards United Kingdom participation in the Franco-German PAH-2 anti-tank helicopter programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The PAH-2 Tiger is one of several options being studied to replace the Army's anti-armour helicopters.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many internal auditors are employed in his Department and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Neubert: There are 113 internal auditors employed in MOD at an annual cost of £2·07 million. In 1989 736 internal audit reports were produced. None was drawn to the attention of a Minister in the Department. No internal audit work in MOD is subcontracted to private firms.

Ballistic Missiles (Iraq)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will initiate an investigation into the role of the British-registered firm Matrix Churchill in supplying consultancy services to Iraq for the development of ballistic missile technology.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to comment on specific defence export cases.

Harrier GR5

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what modifications were carried out to the Harrier GR5 ejector seat after October 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following the crash of Harrier GR5 ZD325 a total of 21 modifications were identified as being necessary to the ejection seat. Five of these were declared mandatory before flying could recommence: two to the seat itself, two to the emergency oxygen selector valve and the fifth to remove a cockpit wander lamp thought to be a potential loose object hazard. All have been carried out. Three further modifications to the oxygen system mounted on the seat were declared mandatory before aircraft could fly at heights above 10,000 ft and are in the process of being embodied. Aircraft not yet modified are required to fly below 10,000 ft. The remaining modifications are not safety critical and are being made on an opportunity basis.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) of 26 February, Official Report, column 73, he will place a transcript of the conversation between his officials and General Sir Peter Leng of 17 February, in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Coastal Protection

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken by his Ministry to ensure co-ordination in coastal protection work between Departments, along the lines of the steps being taken by the standing conference on the problems associated with the coastline to co-ordinate coastal protection works between neighbouring local authorities on the south coast.

Mr. Maclean: The Departments involved in policy matters relating to coastal defence work are my Department in England and the respective territorial Departments.

It is recognised that there are other associated issues such as those relating to nature conservation, tourism, aggregate extraction and so on. Many of these matters will be addressed in submissions of proposed coast protection work or through the existing system of consultation. In addition, any such issues which might have more general implications for the defence of the coastline are kept under regular review.

It is encouraging that groups of authorities concerned with both coast protection and sea defence are discussing these matters together. Such groups, and the standing conference is a good example, have the advantage of a wider perspective of the coastal environment than is possible for the individual authorities. My regional engineers also have a co-ordinating role when discussing potential coast protection and sea defence schemes with the authorities and my Department is grant-aiding research studies of coastal processes with a view to identifying appropriate solutions for defence of stretches of the coastline.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the sources of grant aid available from his Ministry for work on coastal protection and sea defences including details of the amounts to be paid during 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Maclean: The Department makes available grant aid for the construction of capital works of coast protection and sea defence. In 1989-90 the total grant available for coastal protection and sea defence work is £28 million. In 1990-91 the total available is expected to be over £33 million.

Further increases in grant are planned for 1991-92 and 1992-93. The needs of authorities undertaking coast protection and sea defence works are kept regularly under review.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to streamline the procedures in respect of the statutory consultations required under the Coast Protection Act 1949 for grant-aiding coast protection work and sea defences.

Mr. Maclean: Under the Coast Protection (Notices) Regulations 1950, a coast protection authority must publish notice of proposed coast protection schemes and serve like notice on interested parties such as the county council, fisheries organisations and neighbouring coast protection authorities. In addition, my Department consults a small number of other bodies, such as the Nature Conservancy Council. Such representations or objections as may be made are already handled as quickly as possible, but our procedures are nevertheless under continuous review.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, 26 February, Official Report, column 71, if he will identify the slaughterhouses and markets at which bovine spongiform encephalopathy-suspect cattle were identified; and if he will list them in the Official Report.

Mr. Maclean: It has been the Ministry's long-established practice not to disclose details of premises from which notifiable diseases have been reported.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the welfare of animals during transit.

Mr Maclean: It is most important that people involved in transporting animals plan journeys properly and conduct them with full consideration for the living creatures in their care.

There is comprehensive legislation covering the welfare of animals in transit to, from and within this country. Responsibility for enforcement lies with county and metropolitan local authorities. The Ministry is also prepared to prosecute offenders and this was done successfully over the tragic deaths of beagles being exported to Sweden. Specific statutory controls ensure that all food animals leave these shores rested, fed and watered and inspected for fitness to travel at approved export lairages. Compliance with existing EC directives outside our jurisdiction is of course a matter for other member states. We are currently seeking the best possible welfare safeguards during negotiations on proposals for new Community rules on the protection of animals during transport.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Brussels Agriculture Council held on 5-6 March.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting accompanied by my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

The Council completed its first consideration of the 1990 farm price proposals. Discussion will resume at the next meeting beginning on 26 March, when the Presidency is expected to put forward a compromise proposal.

Liquid Egg

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to whether salmonella enteritidis PT4 can multiply in bulk liquid egg in a frozen state.

Mr. Maclean: Information is not available on whether salmonella enteritidis PT4 specifically is able to multiply in bulk liquid egg in the frozen state. It is expected to behave like most bacteria, which are unable to multiply at temperatures below 0 deg C.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many internal auditors are employed in his Ministry and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Curry: Currently 36½ staff are employed at a direct cost in 1989-90 of £889,000. One hundred and twenty-four reports were issued in 1989. All audit reports are summarised in a bimonthly report I receive. During 1989 the audit of staff restaurants was contracted out at a cost of £8,000.

Farm Employees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers, partners, directors and farm workers were employed in each county in England in (a) June and (b) December 1989.

Mr. Maclean: County results from the June 1989 agricultural census have recently become available and are shown in the table. County figures are not available from the December agricultural sample surveys.

ADAS

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been employed in the ADAS research and development service for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The research and development service of ADAS was established in 1987. The number of staff, including industrials and adminstrative support, employed in the research and development service for each year since then at the dates indicated was as follows:

	Number
1 March 1987	987·0
1 March 1988	995·0
1 March 1989	926·5
1 March 1990	798·0

Each individual employed for fewer than conditioned hours (37 hours per week outside London) has been counted as 0·5 of a post in the figures.

Laboratories

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations of his food science laboratories, and give the number of people employed in each laboratory in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: During the past 10 years the food science laboratory has occupied premises at Romney street, London, and two locations in Norwich (Colney lane and Queen street); these have been operated as a single scientific laboratory and information about staff numbers on each site is not available in the form requested.

The total number of staff employed in each year is given in the table and excludes administration support staff:

Year	Numbers Employed at[1] Food Science Laboratory
1980-81	45
1981-82	48
1982-83	46
1983-84	52
1984-85	49
1985-86	49
1986-87	48
1987-88	50
1988-89	55
1989-90	59

[1]excludes administrative staff.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) veterinary laboratories, (b) ADAS farm, countryside science laboratories, excluding facilities for milk testing etc., (c) ADAS research and development science laboratories, (d) fisheries laboratories and (e) food science laboratories, which are currently operating; what are his estimates for the number operating in 1990 and 1991 in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: On present assumptions, the number of laboratory sites will be as follows at the end of the current financial year and of 1990-91 and 1991-92 respectively:

	Financial year ending 31 March 1990	1991	1992
(a) Veterinary Laboratories (including the Central Veterinary Laboratory, outstations and Veterinary Investigation Centres)	22	21	21

On 1 August 1990 the cattle-breeding centre at Shinfield will be closed as already announced. From 1 April 1990 the central veterinary laboratory, including its outstation at Lasswade, will become an executive agency. A review of the structure of the veterinary investigation service to look for ways of improving the quality, efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the services was announced on 19 October 1989. I have yet to consider the report.

(b) ADAS—Farm and Countryside Service (excluding minor facilities for milk testing, testing etc)	9	7	7

As announced on 21 March 1989 regional laboratories are being rationalised in order to improve cost-effectiveness.

(c) ADAS—Research and Development Services	6	6	6

The six individual laboratory sites are managed as a single central science laboratory pending collocation expected in 1993.

(d) Fisheries Laboratories	6	6	6

Of the above, five sites form the directorate of fisheries research, while the sixth is Torry research station, Aberdeen.

(e) Food Science Laboratories	1	1	1

The food science laboratory, formerly on three sites, was collocated at one site in Norwich from 5 February 1990.

I am satisfied that the restructuring and collocation of the Ministry's laboratories already carried out or in prospect has maintained and will maintain the necessary facilities for R and D and analytical work in support of policy objectives.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of man hours of people employed in (a) the central veterinary laboratory and (b) the state veterinary service on (i) bovine spongiform encephalopathy, (ii) salmonella, (iii) listeria and (iv) campylobacter on 1 October 1988, 1 April 1989, 1 October 1989 and 1 March 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The number of hours of the people employed by the SVS (including the VIS) and the CVL (scientific staff) on BSE and zoonoses for the periods stated are as follows:

	SVS BSE	CVL BSE	SVS Zoonoses	CVL Zoonoses
1 April 1988 to 30 September 1988	6,746	3,747	15,318	8,229
1 October 1988 to 31 March 1989	18,292	6,405	28,207	9,254
1 April 1989 to 30 September 1989	34,575	9,893	37,186	9,266
1 October 1989 to 1 February 1990 (4 months)	28,287	7,877	32,479	8,998

Notes:
1. The zoonoses figures do not include sampling of imported proteins.
2. The figures do not include work carried out in VI centres on a chargeable basis for bacteriological monitoring of salmonella in poultry, or the diagnosis of disease caused by these other organisms on material submitted by veterinary surgeons.
3. Separate figures for salmonella, listeria and campylobacter are not available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the numbers employed in the central veterinary laboratory, giving a separate figure for the number of scientists, for each year since 1979, and including the current figure.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

	Permanent Staff in Post in the CVL	Scientific Staff
1990	503	272
1989	536	285
1988	534	287
1987	535	291
1986	568	307
1985	585	313
1984	584	306
1983	592	306
1982	620	311
1981	647	327
1980	667	327
1979	659	321

Notes:

Taken from January figures for each year in respect of the central veterinary laboratory at Weybridge; the separate laboratories of the Reading cattle breeding centre and Lasswade (Scotland) are excluded.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the roles of and the current relationship between the state veterinary service and the central veterinary laboratory; and how he expects this to change in the future.

Mr. Maclean: The objectives of the state veterinary service are published in "Animal Health 1988, The Report of the Chief Veterinary Officer", (page 2). The central veterinary laboratory is currently part of the state veterinary service and contributes to meeting these objectives by providing specialised diagnostic, research, advisory services and products.

On 2 April the central veterinary laboratory will become an executive agency within MAFF. It will continue to deliver those services required by the state veterinary service in pursuit of its objectives on a more formalised contractual basis.

THE OBJECTIVES OF THE STATE VETERINARY SERVICE

The prevention control of animal diseases

To prevent the importation of animal diseases, particularly exotic diseases, through national and EC measures. To control and/or eradicate all notifiable diseases. To assist the industry in the control of non-notifiable diseases.

Farm animal welfare

To encourage high standards of animal welfare on farms, during transport, at markets, in abattoirs and, as far as possible, on export. To explain government policies on farm animal welfare. To provide support for the Farm Animal Welfare Council (FAWC) and act as appropriate on its recommendations.

Livestock protection

To improve the health status and genetic quality of farm livestock by the establishment of voluntary disease control schemes and regulatory control over artificial insemination and embryo transplant. To support the export trade by the establishment of herds and flocks of known health status.

Veterinary medicines

To ensure the safety, quality and efficacy of all veterinary medicines produced, imported, sold and supplied in the United Kingdom. To encourage the proper use of medicines.

Veterinary public health and export promotion

To provide safeguards for public health in the production and import of meat. To facilitate exports of live animals, meat and other animal products by doing everything possible to ensure that the animal health and public health requirements of importing countries are met.

To meet these objectives the veterinary service consists of a regulatory force (the Veterinary Field Service), a surveillance network (the Veterinary Investigation Service), and a research and development facility (the Central Veterinary Laboratories).

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to co-locate his three food science laboratories; where the new food science laboratory will be located; and how many scientists he will employ there.

Mr. Maclean: New accommodation for the food science laboratory has recently been completed in Colney lane, Norwich and staff from the three existing sites were transferred to the new building on 5 February 1990. A total of 83 laboratory posts are approved for 1990-91 and of these 63 will be for qualified scientists.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries in which the irradiation of poultry meat is legal.

Mr. Maclean: According to information provided by the international consultative group on food irradiation, the following countries have approved the process for the treatment of poultry meat:

Bangladesh
Brazil
Chile
France
Hungary
Israel
Netherlands
South Africa
Sierrean Arab Republic
Thailand
Taiwan.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries in which irradiation is used as a method of preservation of poultry meat.

Mr. Maclean: Of the countries submitting returns for the information of the international consultative group on food irradiation, irradiation of poultry meat has been reported from France and the Netherlands.

ENVIRONMENT

Populations

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest available population figures for each of the district council areas in Essex, Surrey, Kent, Hampshire, Cheshire, Lancashire and Durham.

Mr. Chope: The latest available information on resident population for the areas requested is given in the table. It is that estimated by the registrar-general as at 30 June 1988. Information on adult population calculated in accordance with the population report (England) was placed in the Library on 11 January.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many P and T staff the Property Services Agency plans to have in (a) projects, (b) special services and (c) international and building management on 1 April.

Mr. Chope: Property Services Agency plans to have the following distribution of P and T non-industrial staff in its businesses on 1 April:

	Number
Projects	1,305
Building management	5,200
Specialist services	352
Property Services Agency International	425

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff from grade 5 to executive officer and support staff the Property Services Agency plans to have in (a) projects, (b) special services and (c) international and building management on 1 April.

Mr. Chope: Property Services Agency plans to have the following distribution of staff in its businesses on 1 April:

Community Charge

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities in East Sussex, on the information currently available to him, are planning budgets which will lead to community charge levels above those indicated in his Department's projections.

Mr. Chope: The Department has received returns from East Sussex county council and Wealden borough council. Both authorities are planning budgets above the levels assumed in the settlement.

Councillors

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the regulation he is to bring forward consequent on part V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 will include provision to ensure that councillors who are employees of companies that will be deemed to be controlled by the local authority in which they are a member may see out their term of office.

Mr. David Hunt: The disqualification of employees of companies under the control of a single local authority arises directly from paragraph 21 of schedule 11 to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989: an order under part V of the Act could not modify this provision.

Tenants' Choice

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the tenants' choice promotion campaign starts.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 2 March 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) Official Report, Volume 168, column 388.

Carers

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to take steps to ensure that volunteer care workers providing care for a disabled person who are not employed by a charitable body but by an individual disabled person are not liable to pay the community charge.

Mr. Chope: The current exemption does not require the care worker to be employed by a charitable body. An individual may be exempt if he or she is employed by the person receiving care, provided that he or she has been introduced to that person by a body established for charitable purposes, receives a wage or salary of less than £25 a week, is required to work for at least 24 hours a week and is ordinarily resident in premises provided by or on behalf of the employer for the better performance of his or her duties.

Red list Substances

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many substances appear on the red list as drawn up by each country within the European Community; if he has any plans to increase the number of chemicals on the red list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The red list is a United Kingdom initiative: a list of chemicals which are particularly dangerous to the aquatic environment. Not all other Community countries have such lists and I do not have details of those which do exist.

The Commission of the European Communities has recently proposed to the Council that most of the substances on the red list which have not already been dealt with as list I substances should receive priority treatment for the setting of limit values and quality objectives. A list of agreed hazardous substances, which includes many of the red list substances, is likely to be agreed at the North sea conference this week.

The Department is starting to assess new candidates for the red list, but it is unlikely that any will be given red list status before the end of next year.

Carbon Canister Technology

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government will support the proposals contained in the European Community draft directive COM (89) 662 to reduce evaporative emissions from cars by the fitting of carbon canister technology; whether the Government will support the further "stage 1" controls; and what the likely costs of such measures will be.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 March 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

I am preparing an explanatory memorandum on the COM (89) 662 proposals (Council document No. 4704/90). It will be submitted to the House shortly. The Commission has yet to make proposals concerning stage 1 controls on evaporative emissions in the petrol distribution network from refinery to retail forecourt.

Street Lighting

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to issue local authorities with guidelines regarding street lighting standards.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 5 March 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

No. Local authorities already have such guidelines produced by the British Standards Institution with the participation of the Department and local authorities. A copy of the current edition, BS 5489, is in the Library.

Waste Control Policy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implication for waste control policy of European Community draft directive 88/C295/03.

Mr. Trippier: The Department of the Environment submitted an explanatory memorandum to Parliament on 25 October 1988 setting out the Government's view on the implications of the Commission's proposal for revision of the 1975 directive on waste (88/C295/03) and submitted a further explanatory memorandum on 10 January 1990 on the Commission's amended proposal. The Government also expressed their view in the debate held in the First Standing Committee on European Committee Documents on 20 July 1989 (Official Report, First Standing Committee on European Community Document, 20 July 1989).

Halon Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to eliminate atmospheric emissions of (a) halon 1211, (b) halon 1301 and (c) halon 2402; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In the negotiations to revise the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer we are seeking international agreement to phase out these chemicals by 2005.

House Conditions

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the number of houses identified in 1971, 1976, 1981 and 1986 by the English house conditions survey as (a) being unfit for human habitation, (b) lacking basic amenities and (c) being in a state of serious disrepair.

Mr. Chope: The numbers are as follows:

	1971	1976	1981	1986
Unfit dwellings	1,216,000	1,162,000	1,116,000	1,053,000
Dwellings lacking basic amenities	2,815,000	1,531,000	863,000	543,000
Dwellings in serious disrepair	1,104,000	1,097,000	1,178,000	1,113,000

Rateable Values

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list by location, and by year for the last 10 years, the rateable values of property that have been reduced, because the letting value has been affected due to the risk of nuclear contamination;

(2) if he will list by location, and by year for the last 10 years, the rateable value appeals of property that have been heard, due to the claim that the letting value has been affected due to the risk of nuclear contamination.

Mr. Chope: No information is held centrally from which to establish whether there have been any such reductions or appeals.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the community charge increase over rates for the village of Eriswell; what contribution the United States air force personnel will be required to contribute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I cannot say what the difference between the community charge and the rates paid by the residents of the village of Eriswell will be. It depends on the level of the community charge, which Forest Heath district council has yet to set, and on the present rateable value of each home. My Department does not have information on individual rateable values. United States air force personnel are exempt from the community charge and will make no contribution. Local authorities are compensated for the loss of income arising from these and any other exemptions by the operation of the revenue support grant system. They receive enough grant to enable them to spend at the level of the standard spending assessment and set a charge of £278, before transitional arrangements, on the assumption that it is collected only from those who are subject to the charge.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why an owner of an hotel is eligible for phased transitional relief on the original building but not on any extensions carried out;

(2) what arrangements his Department is making to make phased transitional relief on commercial rating for the hotel and guesthouse trade available to new owners after 1 April.

Mr. Chope: Transitional relief is intended to phase in the new business rate to protect existing ratepayers from large overnight increases in their rate bills. A person who extends his property, or takes on a different property, on or after 1 April 1990, will know what his liability will be before doing so. Transitional relief could be made available in these circumstances only by reducing the limits on rate reductions at the expense of many businesses in northern England, including those in south Yorkshire, where average rate bills would fall by 26·7 per cent. in 1990-91 without transition.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reason the scaling factor for children's personal social services in table C of the calculations for Humberside's standard spending assessment is specified to 14 decimal places; what the figure represents; and what the effect of this scaling factor is on the standard spending assessment for Grimsby.

Mr. Chope: The scaling factor for children's personal social services ensures that the sum of the SSA elements for individual authorities is equal to the total of SSA available for children's social services for England of £1,275·1 million in 1990-91.

It is specified to 14 decimal places to ensure that this exact total is achieved. It has no effect on the standard spending assessment for Grimsby since Grimsby, as a non-metropolitan district, is not responsible for social services.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how, with reference to paragraph 3.29 of his Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England), poll tax payers and council officials may check the validity of the figure of £1·37.

Mr. Chope: The figure referred to in paragraph 3.29 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report was arrived at after full consultation with local authority representatives, and was approved by the House on 18 January. Local authorities are able to check that this figure has been correctly applied to the circumstances of their particular local authority.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how, with reference to paragraph 3.32 of his Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England), poll tax payers and council officials may check the validity of the figure of (a) £1,928·93 and (b) £13·05.

Mr. Chope: The figures referred to in paragraph 3.32 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) were arrived at after full consultation with local authority representatives, and were approved by this House on 18 January. Local authority officials are able to check that the figures have been properly applied to the circumstances of their particular local authority.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what allowance was made in the standard spending assessment of each English local authority for the use of reserves; and what information he has on the actual figure announced by each authority.

Mr. Chope: The standard spending assessment for an authority is intended to represent the amount of revenue expenditure which it would be appropriate for the authority to incur to provide a standard level of service consistent with the view of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment of the amount of revenue expenditure which it would be appropriate for all local authorities to incur. We considered that it was not appropriate to make any allowance in SSAs for reserves. I have no firm information on the use of reserves announced by each authority.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate was made of the number of second homes in each local authority area in fixing the standard spending assessment for that area; and what is the ratio of each estimate to the total population or the poll tax register.

Mr. Chope: The number of second homes is not an indicator used in calculating standard spending assessments. I do not have any estimate of the number of second homes in each local authority area.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment with reference to paragraph 3.29 of his Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England), what effect the choice of the figure of (a) £7·11 and (b) £1·37 has on the standard spending assessment arrived at for Humberside.

Mr. Chope: The figure of £7·11 in paragraph 3.29 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) when applied to the resident population of Humberside contributes £9 per relevant adult to Humberside's SSA. The figure of £1·37 when applied to the ward-weighted density for Humberside accounts for £5 per relevant adult of the SSA for Humberside.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment with reference to paragraph 3.32 of his Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England), what effect the choice of the figure of (a) £1,928·93 and (b) £13·05 has on the standard spending assessment arrived at for Humberside.

Mr. Chope: The figures referred to in paragraph 3.32 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) contribute £28 and £2 per relevant adult, respectively, to the SSA for Humberside.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 19 February, Official Report, column 474, concerning the amount of rates and poll tax in inner and outer London, whether he will publish in the Official Report the information placed in the Library on 11 January.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 23 February, Official Report, Vol. 167, column 929.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 14 February, Official Report, column 222, concerning the amount of poll tax payable in 1990-91 per adult for each region etc., whether in each case the proposed reduction or increase in the local tax and ratepayer's contribution to local expenditure assumes an increase or decrease in the per adult contribution made by central Government; and whether he will publish in the Official Report the per adult figures for the central Government contribution in each case together with figures showing that contribution as a percentage of the local tax and ratepayer's contribution.

Mr. Chope: The Government have not proposed specific increases in local contributions to expenditure in 1990-91. The Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) sets out the basis of distribution of revenue support grant for 1990-91. The Revenue Support Grant Transition Report (England) sets out the adjustments to that basis of distribution and the Special Grant Report specifies two special grants for 1990-91. The distribution of business rates will be in accordance with the Local Government Finance Act 1988. I have today placed in the Library a table which shows the aggregate of these amounts (known as "external support") for each area, as amounts per adult and as percentages of the average assumed personal community charge or 1989-90 rate bill per adult.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimated public expenditure cost to central Government in 1990-91 of the community charge transitional relief scheme for individuals.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 2 March 1990]: My latest estimate is that about £350 million of transitional relief will be distributed in 1990-91 and that this will benefit about 7·5 million charge payers. This estimate is consistent with the figures on the distributional effect of the community charge placed in the Library on 15 February.

The figures for later years are £260 million in 1991-92 and £200 million in 1992-93. The total amount of relief over the three years is therefore about £810 million.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer on 28 February, Official Report, column 208, that he is responsible for monitoring all extra costs imposed on local authorities by (a) Act of Parliament, (b) statutory instruments and (c) departmental circulars, he will list by Department the notifications under each of these headings, by quantum, for each of the next three years, of the new costs to be borne by local authorities since the rate support grant quantum was agreed with the Treasury in July 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: It is not yet possible to provide a comprehensive list of all the extra costs that will fall to local authorities in the next three years as many of the new pressures and new savings on local authority expenditure for 1991-92 and future years have not yet been quantified.

We will shortly be entering into discussions with the local authority associations before deciding what would be appropriate for local authorities to spend in 1991-92. These discussions will provide the opportunity to identify new burdens on local authorities across the whole range of local authority functions.

Countryside Premium

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will ask the Countryside Commission to consider extending the countryside premium designed to secure environmental benefits from set-aside land from the counties of eastern England to Hampshire.

Mr. Trippier: The countryside premium scheme was launched last June and initially covers only seven counties in eastern England. Arrangements are in hand for monitoring the effectiveness of the scheme in these counties. It is too early yet to consider extending the scheme to other areas. The scope of the scheme will be reviewed in the light of the results of monitoring.

Beaches

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the beaches which are designated under the EC directive of 1975 which were not monitored for salmonella and enteriditis in 1989.

Mr. Trippier: On 25 January I announced that a detailed summary of the results of the 1989 survey of United Kingdom bathing waters identified under the European Economic Community bathing water directive would be placed in the Library, Official Report, 25 January 1990, column 785. This includes numbers of samples taken for the salmonella and enterovirus parameters and the number of these which failed to meet the directive's mandatory standards, at each bathing water.

Downing Street (Gates)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what alternative opening and closing arrangements are under consideration for the newly erected gates at the entrance of Downing street.

Mr. Chope: None.

Home Ownership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to table 6.2 of the general household survey for 1986, whether he will publish in the Official Report the figures for each country in 1986 with the relevant base together with an estimate for the years 1987, 1988 and 1989 together with a forecast for 1990.

Mr. Chope: The information from the 1986 and 1987 general household surveys is as follows:

	England per cent.	Wales per cent.	Scotland per cent.
(a) 1986

Sample sizes for Wales and Scotland are small and, in those two countries, changes in the percentages between the two years are not statistically significant.

Results are not yet available from more recent surveys and the Department does not make such forecasts.

Mortgages

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the figures in table 5.11 of "Regional Trends 1989" for 1988 and a forecast for 1989, together with figures showing the average dwelling price for mortgages taken out by sitting tenants of local authorities in each year.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is listed in the table:

Mr. Chope: The information is listed in the table. In Great Britain the proportions of owner-occupier households with mortgages in 1983 and 1988 were 58 per cent. and 63 per cent., respectively. Estimates for 1989 are not yet available.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many potential sites of special scientific interest are awaiting notification or renotification;

(2) if he will list the total number of sites of special scientific interest notified under section 23 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949;

(3) if he will list the total number of sites of special scientific interest notified under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Trippier: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that 4,043 SSSIs were notified to local planning authorities under the 1949 Act. By December 1989 the NCC had renotified 3,251 of these and in addition had identified a further 3,091 new sites, of which 1,853 had been notified under the 1981 Act.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest have been damaged in each of the last five years as a result of operations which were granted planning permission.

Mr. Trippier: Full information on the numbers of SSSIs damaged since April 1984 is set out in the NCC's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list all sites of special scientific interest currently the subject of (a) planning applications, (b) appeals and (c) inquiries;

(2) if he will list those sites of special scientific interest in respect of which planning applications were made but were not objected to by the Nature Conservancy Council;

(3) if he will list those sites of special scientific interest where the Nature Conservancy Council objected to a planning application in 1988-89;

(4) if he will list those sites of special scientific interest which have been notified with existing planning permissions in place.

Mr. Trippier: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial resources are available to local authorities for compensation payments in respect of revocation or discontinuance orders made under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

Mr. Moynihan: Decisions on revocation and discontinuance orders are no different from other local authority decisions which may result in expenditure being incurred. In making any such decision an authority will need to have regard to its available resources and its priorities for expenditure.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to reduce the 40-year period of planning permission granted for mineral and peat extraction which relates to a site of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Mineral planning authorities have the power to impose conditions on a planning consent which specify the limit of duration of planning permission for mineral sites. Where they do not specify a time limit, the development must cease not later than 60 years from the date of the permission. Where planning permission was already in existence at the time this provision came into effect, development must cease by the year 2042. Mineral planning authorities which wish to limit existing developments can make orders revoking or modifying the planning permission or requiring the use of land to be discontinued or continued subject to conditions. We have no proposals to alter these provisions.

Peat

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions since 1981 revocations or discontinuance orders have been made in respect of planning permissions granted for the extraction of peat.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth's letters dated 26 June 1989 and 2 January 1990, acknowledged by card on 29 June 1989 and by letter on 18 December 1989, referring to Mr. A. S. Johnson of Rugby.

Mr. Chope: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 5 March.

North Sea Dumping

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that the ministerial declaration made at the second international North sea conference concerning the reduction of inputs of dangerous substances to rivers and estuaries is achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have today placed in the Library copies of the United Kingdom North sea action plan which is being presented at the third North sea conference today in The Hague. This document reports considerable progress being made by the Government, the regulatory authorities and industry in ensuring that significant reductions are achieved for those substances which pose the most serious threat to the aquatic environment.

"Action for Cities"

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of spending is planned under the "Action for Cities" initiative for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Spending under the "Action for Cities" initiative is planned to be about £4 billion in 1990-91, compared with just over £3 billion in 1988-89 and just under £3·5 billion in 1989-90. The Government are determined to build on the real progress being made in reviving our inner cities and this increase will help speed the pace of renewal still further. A breakdown of the planned spending on "Action for Cities" in 1990-91 is given in the table:

Action for cities expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 6 March 1990]: The results obtained over the course of the 1989 bathing season are as follows:

The mandatory standards set in directive 76/160/EEC are 10,000 per 100 mls for total coliforms and 2,000 per 100 mls for faecal coliforms. Northumbrian Water plc has plans to improve the bathing waters at Seaton Carew to ensure that they consistently meet the coliform standards.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether his Department has received any representations on the effects of the community charge on the provision of bed-and-breakfast accommodation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether his Department will consider modifying the application of the community charge towards bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 March 1990]: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this matter. He has no plans to modify the proposals for the treatment of bed-and-breakfast accommodation for the purposes of the community charge and the new business rate which were given effect by the Standard Community Charge and Non-Domestic Rating (Definition of Domestic Property) Order 1990 [SI No. 162], which came into force on 2 March.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the provision made in his Department's expenditure plans for grant aid to local authorities for work in coastal protection and sea defence.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Preventable Loss

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will list the number of professionally qualified loss prevention staff employed by his Department and the qualifications held by such staff, excluding qualifications obtained during police or military service.

Mr. Cope: The Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office are aware of the need to prevent loss and rely on a series of control mechanisms, systems and procedures which are undertaken by various groups of staff, including internal auditors.

Currently within the Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Office and the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, there are 31 fully qualified members of the Institute of Internal Auditors, (MIIA) and 23 more are under training.

Thirty one other members of staff hold professional accountancy and auditing qualifications.

Sewage Discharges

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will introduce the necessary legislation to prohibit the discharge of inadequately treated sewage into coastal waters, rivers and inland waterways and to require that full treatment plants are provided in future for dealing with sewage in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A proposal for a European Council directive on municipal waste water treatment is at present being considered. Among other matters, the proposed directive lays down minimum requirements for the collection and treatment of domestic, industrial and drainage waters entering the sewerage system. The Government are carrying out a study of the environmental implications and the likely costs associated with this directive. If the directive is adopted, any legislation necessary to implement its requirements will be introduced.

Computers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the number of persons employed by his Department in systems, programming and computer operation, including the major operations carried out.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The number of computer staff employed on information technology in Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Office and Police Authority for Northern Ireland is as follows:

	Numbers
Senior systems analyst	71
Systems analysts	144
Programmer analysts	133
Programmers	129
Operations and data processing	116
Total	593

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure parity in valuation for rating purposes throughout the district council areas in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 March 1990]: Parity of treatment in valuation for rating purposes throughout district council areas in Northern Ireland is long established. Parity is achieved through periodic general revaluations which establish for the Province as a whole, patterns and levels of valuations—a tone, which is preserved throughout the life of the valuation list. Revisions of valuation which arise between revaluations are performed within the comprehensive and detailed provisions of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 by the valuation and lands office. The Commissioner of Valuation, by the direction of policy and its application through a district valuer office network across Northern Ireland, ensures consistent treatment under this order. A comprehensive system of appeal exists for aggrieved ratepayers with first appeals to the Commissioner of Valuation and thereafter to the Lands Tribunal for Northern Ireland and, if appropriate, Court of Appeal and House of Lords.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing (a) increases in regional rate levied in cash and percentage terms, (b) each district council rate increase in cash and percentage terms and (c) domestic and non-domestic rates charged to ratepayers in each district council area in cash percentage charge terms, in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The information is as follows:

(a) The regional rate increases were:

	1985-86 (pence)	1986-87 (pence)	1987-88 (pence)	1988-89 (pence)	1989-90 (pence)

TRANSPORT

Kilkiel Harbour

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on which dates, during the past six months, boats registered in the Republic of Ireland have entered Kilkiel harbour; and whether these boats have now paid light dues to the Commissioners of Irish Lights.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a management matter for the Commissioners of Irish Lights as the collecting authority for light dues.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to improve the lateral stability of heavy goods vehicles with particular reference to loading and wind impact.

Mr. Atkins: We are aware of the problems caused by wind impact on heavy goods vehicles. That is why warnings are issued to all drivers of high-sided vehicles in windy conditions. It is up to the drivers and operators to heed these warnings, to load their vehicles appropriately, to drive carefully, to avoid particularly dangerous sections of road and, if necessary, to stop in a suitable place until conditions improve.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the specifications for technical performance of the docklands light railway that were laid down when the original finance was approved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him yesterday at column 665.

Graffiti

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has (a) on the annual cost of cleaning off graffiti from London Underground premises and (b) on the extra annual cost of policing relating to the prevention of graffiti in each of the last five years for which statistics are available;

(2) whether he will publish a table showing the cost of removing graffiti on each of the London Underground lines.

Mr. Portillo: The cost to London Underground Ltd. of cleaning graffiti from trains and stations has increased substantially over the past five years to an estimated £2·5 million in 1989. Figures for individual Underground lines are not readily available since depot and cleaning facilities are often shared between lines. The cost to London Buses Ltd. of cleaning graffiti from buses and garages has increased from about £1·5 million in 1986 to over £2 million in 1989.

A special British Transport police graffiti squad has been set up to combat graffiti vandalism on the Underground. This is estimated to have cost about £250,000 in 1989. British Transport police officers are also expected to prevent graffiti vandalism as part of their normal duties. Crime on London Buses, including vandalism and graffiti, is dealt with by the Metropolitan police.

Coastal Rescue Services

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce additional measures to improve the efficiency of the coastguard and other search and rescue services along the north Devon coast and Bristol channel.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am satisfied that the current facilities for co-ordinating and actioning maritime search and rescue operations in this area are fully adequate.

THE ARTS

"Allée à Chantilly"

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has yet decided where the Cézanne work of art, "Allée à Chantilly", received by his Department in lieu of Inland Revenue debts for the year 1988-89 is to be displayed.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 14 February 1990, Official Report, column 239.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in rank order the total revenue raised from the 21 different forms of taxation for each year from 1979 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: Recent years' figures can be found in tables 3.13, 3.14 and 3.15 in "Financial Statistics", published by the Central Statistical Office. Earlier years' figures can be found using the CSO database and the identifiers given in the tables. The database can be accessed on line by the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax in pounds per week at 1989-90 prices a married couple with one earner on average earnings, with two children paid, treating child benefit as negative income, in 1978-79 and in 1989-90.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross earnings a couple with one earner on average earnings, with two children, paid in tax, treating child benefit as negative income tax, in 1978-79 and in 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: Figures for 1978-79 have been placed in the Library of the House, as noted in the Official Report, 13 April 1989, column 624, and estimates for 1989-90 were given in reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 8 January 1990 at column 559.

Rented Property

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of revenue forgone by the Exchequer through the tax incentives to landlords investing in the business expansion scheme since April 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The cost of BES tax relief on residential property in 1988-89 is provisionally estimated as £110 million. Information for 1989-90 is not yet available.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of manufacturing investment made each year since 1979 by (a) foreign direct investors in the United Kingdom and (b) indigenous manufacturers; and what are the percentage annual changes these figures represent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Comparable information relates to capital expenditure on fixed assets by foreign owned manufacturing businesses and by United Kingdom-owned manufacturing businesses. It is available, on the current definition of manufacturing in the 1980 standard industrial classification, only from 1981. Information on foreign ownership is available biennially up to 1985 and annually up to 1987. The data are given from 1981 in the table.

Net capital expenditure of manufacturing[1] private sector businesses in the United Kingdom

	Foreign owned businesses[2]	United Kingdom owned businesses[3]	Total
	£ million	£ million	£ million
1981	1,402	4,091	5,493

[2] Foreign owned businesses are defined as those controlled or owned by companies incorporated overseas.

[3] Includes privatised businesses from the year of privatisation.

Fiscal Incentives (Women)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the need for fiscal incentives to enable more women to return to work.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has received a number of representations on this subject.

Budget

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about his forthcoming financial statement and budget report.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has received a variety of representations from a number of individuals and organisations.

Bank of England

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet the Governor of the Bank of England; and what he expects to discuss.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer meets the Governor of the Bank of England from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Company Dividends

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what proportion dividend distribution by companies increased between 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Lilley: The latest estimates of dividend payments on ordinary and preference shares may be obtained from the CSO databank—a collection of macro-economic time series in computer readable form to which the House of Commons Library has direct access. Data are currently available for the period up to third quarter 1989.

Investment

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by what proportion investment in manufacturing industry fell in the second half of 1988 and in the first half of 1989; and if he is able to provide an estimate of the change in investment in the second half of 1989;

(2) what was the level of investment in manufacturing industry in 1989 and 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Expressed at 1985 prices, investment by manufacturing industry in fixed assets including leasing, is estimated to have been £12 billion in 1989, compared to £11·2 billion in 1979.

Such investment seasonally adjusted barely changed between the first and second halves of 1988. The first half of 1989 showed an increase of 6 per cent. followed by a fall in the second half provisionally estimated to be 1 per cent.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the proportion of capital investment in the service sector which has been devoted to the importation of goods and materials.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest year for which it is possible to compile estimates of the import content of investment is 1985, the last year for which comprehensive input-output tables exist.

The import content of purchases calculated in the process of compiling the input-output tables is based upon approximate commodity flow methods—there is no statistical inquiry which establishes the import content of capital investment directly. The cases of goods and materials including and excluding vehicles, ships and aircraft (VSA), and capital investment including and excluding investment in new buildings and works (NBW), are given in the table.

Capital investment of the Services sector including NBW Per cent.	excluding NBW Per cent.

Import content from goods and materials (including VSA)	18	47
Import content from goods and materials (excluding VSA)	13	35

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in what sectors of commerce and industry investment was higher in 1989 than 10 years earlier;

(2) what was the level of investment between 1979 and 1989 in those areas of industry and commerce in which there is or was public involvement and in those which are wholly within the private sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimates of gross domestic fixed capital formation, by industry (other than manufacturing), may be obtained from the CSO databank—a collection of macroeconomic time series in computer readable form to which the House of Commons Library has direct access. For manufacturing, figures up to end 1989 were published by the CSO in a press notice "Capital Expenditure: Provisional Estimates for Q4 1989" on 15 February. The latest estimates of investment by other industries cover the period up to end 1987 or, where possible, 1988. The estimates cover investment by the private sector, and, where appropriate, include investment by public sector bodies. The CSO's "United Kingdom National Accounts", 1989 edition, shows which industry estimates are available.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of companies investing in the United Kingdom are wholly owned by Japan or the United States of America; and what is the ratio of investment by these companies to that by companies which are in United Kingdom ownership.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information relates to capital expenditure on fixed assets by manufacturing companies based within the United Kingdom. The annual census of production provides such an analysis by country of ownership. The latest follows:

Net capital expenditure by manufacturing companies[2] in the United Kingdom by country of ownership[1]

Country of ownership	Number of businesses	Net capital expenditure in 1987 £ million	as percentage of United Kingdom
United States of America	1,161	1,180·1	16
Japan	34	86·7	1
All other foreign owned businesses	1,088	722·3	10
United Kingdom owned business	143,210	7,339·7	100
Total	145,493	9,328·8

[1] Foreign owned business are defined as those controlled or owned by companies incorporated overseas.
[2] Divisions 2-4: Standard Industrial Classification, Revised 1980.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1990-91, assuming no change in company behaviour and assuming a 50 per cent. increase in investment in plant and machinery (a) the capital allowances claimable by companies in respect of plant and machinery assuming that first year allowances of: (i) 50 per cent., (ii) 40 per cent., (iii) 35 per cent. and (iv) 30 per cent. were available, (b) corporation tax payments forgone in 1991-92 as a result of such claims and (c) the increase in the rate of corporation tax which would be required to replace the revenue foregone under (b).

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 March 1990]: I regret that the requested estimates could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a breakdown for table 8.7 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1989 of capital allowances described as other, giving figures separately for each type of allowance subsumed in this heading.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 March 1990]: The only breakdown of these capital allowances that can be reliably estimated is provided in tables 8.8 and 8.9 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1989" and in similar tables in earlier editions.

Interest Rates

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the current levels of interest rates in each member state of the European Community and in Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Ryder: Following is the information requested:

Short term nominal interest rates in the EC, United States and Japan

	Latest figures[1]
United Kingdom	15·3
United States	8·3
Japan	7·3
Germany	8·6
France	10·8
Italy	13·3
Belgium	10·6
Denmark	12·0
Greece	17·0
Ireland	12·0
Luxembourg	10·6
Netherlands	9·0
Portugal	13·8
Spain	15·6

[1] Interest rates refer to close 5 March, except Denmark (8 March), Ireland and Portugal (January), and Greece (December)

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many internal auditors are employed in those departments for which he is responsible and at what cost; how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is subcontracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 7 March 1990]: A total of 180 internal auditors are employed in departments for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor is responsible. Their direct costs amount to £3·767 million per annum. A total of 272 reports were produced in 1989 or in the nearest convenient accounting period. One of these was drawn to the attention of a Minister.

Internal audit work in three departments was sub-contracted to private firms. In two of these, the whole internal audit function was contracted out; in the other department specialist expertise was obtained. The total cost of these sub-contracts amounted to £65,000.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Rothamsted Experimental Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the reasons for Mrs. Clark's dismissal from her post at Rothamsted experimental station, Hertfordshire.

Mr. Jackson: Mrs. Clark was an employee of the Lawes Agricultural Trust, the governing body of the Rothamsted experimental station which is grant-aided by the agricultural and food research council (AFRC). The staff of the Rothamsted experimental station are employed on terms and conditions of service laid down by the AFRC.

I understand that Mrs. Clark was dismissed following a disciplinary hearing conducted in accordance with the council's rules and procedures. An appeal to the Civil Service Appeal Board is pending and therefore I am unable to comment further.

Avon County Council

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be meeting Councillor Maureen Wheadon of Avon county council; and what is the purpose of the meeting.

Mr. MacGregor: No such meeting has been arranged.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Hutchinson concerning his decisions in respect of Beechen Cliff school, Bath and the proposals of Avon county council; and if he will make a statement about that judgment.

Mr. MacGregor: I propose to reconsider the application from Beechen Cliff school, Bath and the statutory proposals from the Avon county council in the light of Mr. Justice Hutchinson's judgment. The judgment concerned the handling of a particular set of proposals. The principle of the grant-maintained option being available to schools is not in question.

Discretionary Grants

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide the statistics relating to discretionary grants made by local education authorities for full-time and sandwich courses, broken down for each individual local education authority in England and Wales by monetary amount and for the last five years.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The data requested are listed in the table:

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a table of full-time teacher vacancies in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools for (a) January 1987, (b) January 1988 and (c) January 1989, broken down by school type and subject area for (i) England and Wales, (ii) the regions and (iii) individual local education authorities, in a manner consistent with the answer given to the hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack), Official Report, 15 February, column 318.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 26 February 1990]: The information is given in the tables. Data on primary vacancies were not collected prior to 1988. ENERGY

Atomic Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with officials of the European Atomic Energy Agency in advance of the setting of the safeguards budget set out in chapter 71 of the Official Journal of the European Communities, volume 33.

Mr. Baldry: The established procedures involving both the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament provide ample opportunity for consultation on all aspects of the EC budget, including safeguards.

Nuclear Electric

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the reason for the allocation to Nuclear Electric of sites at Pembroke, Druridge bay, Denver, and the Maentwrog hydroelectric station in north Wales.

Mr. Baldry: Under section 66 of the Electricity Act 1989, the CEGB is required to make a scheme for the allocation of all its assets to its successor companies. The scheme, presently being prepared by the CEGB, will include unused sites.

I am advised that only part of the site at Pembroke is to be allocated to Nuclear Electric. Maentwrog hydro-electric station is to be allocated to Nuclear Electric for operational reasons associated with the use of cooling water from the adjacent reservoir of Trawsfynydd power station.

Nuclear Waste Transport

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that no foreign nuclear waste or spent fuel is transported through Leeds; and if he will make it his policy to prohibit the import of foreign nuclear waste or spent fuel into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: The movement of all radioactive materials must be made in compliance with national and international regulations which require safety both in normal operations and in the event of any transport accident. Safety does not depend on the choice of route used, which is a matter for the carrier.

Nuclear wastes are not imported into the United Kingdom. As regards the import of spent fuel, I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 26 February 1990 at column 98.

Energy Conservation

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what amount of the energy conservation budget he allocates to the promotion of competition in the market for production of methods of conserving energy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The market in energy efficiency goods and services is already highly competitive. Hence the Energy Efficiency Office does not allocate funds for the specific purpose of promoting competition.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras of 5 February, Official Report, column 457, when he wrote to the Electricity Council and the Central Electricity Generating Board drawing the question to their attention.

Mr. Wakeham: An official from my Department wrote to the Electricity Council and the CEGB on 5 February 1990.

Power Stations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which stations have been fitted with low-sulphur electrostatic precipitators and for what reasons.

Mr. Wakeham: I am advised that all National Power and PowerGen coal fired power stations have electrostatic precipitators fitted which enable their plant to burn a proportion of low-sulphur coal.

The CEGB have been working for many years with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on a programme to enhance the performance of their precipitators. This programme is being continued by National Power and PowerGen.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin), Official Report, 26 February, column 96, he will publish the dates and places for the planned regional CHP marketing to which he refers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following is a preliminary and provisional list of planned CHP marketing events.

Year 1990-91

Month	Region
May	Yorkshire and North West
June	Scotland and West Midlands
July	South East
September	Scotland and South West
October	South West and Not Decided
November	Yorkshire and Not Decided
December	West Midlands
January	Wales
February	South East

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total in megawatts capacity of renewable sources of energy, under the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Baldry: Bids from sponsors of renewables-sourced generating projects for contracting under the non-fossil fuel obligation amount to between 1 and 2 GW of capacity. However, the level of the obligation in respect of renewables will not be determined until it is clear, in the light of consultations, how many of these projects are ready to go forward.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land (Access Rights)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General how many representations he has received on the issue of the non-existence of general rights of access to neighbouring land.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor receives approximately 40 representations each year from the public and members of Parliament on the subject of rights of access to neighbouring land.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he intends to implement the findings of the Law Commission published in December 1985 on the rights of access to neighbouring land in Law Commission paper No. 151.

The Attorney-General: The Government have accepted the recommendations of the Law Commission in its report on rights of access to neighbouring land. It is intended to implement them when resources and parliamentary time allow.

Law Commission

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the reports published by the Law Commission for each year since 1979, indicating whether any recommendations in each report have been implemented.

The Attorney-General: Appendix 3 to the "Law Commission's Twenty-fourth Annual Report for 1989" (Law Com. No. 190), published on 28 February 1990, contains a complete list of all the commission's reports, including those published since 1979 to date. The right-hand column of appendix 3 shows the extent to which the recommendations in each report have been implemented by legislation.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish in the Official Report the costs incurred by the Law Commission for each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: The figures for the cost of the Law Commission prior to November 1982 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Law Commission has published a table showing the cost of the commission in each annual report since its 18th annual report for 1982-83. The figures are as follows:

1982-1983	1,819,600
1983-1984	1,889,800
1984-1985	1,886,200
1985-1986	1,986,600
1986-1987	2,062,300
1987-1988	2,034,600
1988	2,123,500
1989	2,248,200

Notes:

1. The first six of these figures relate to the period from 1st November in one year to 31st October in the following year. The figures for 1988 and 1989 are for the calendar years.
2. Each of these figures includes an element for the cost incurred by the Lord Chancellor's Department in the administration of the Law Commission.
3. These figures do not include the salary of the chairman of the Law Commission who, as a High Court judge, is paid directly out of the Consolidated Fund.
4. The cost for 1984-85 is the amended figure given in the annual report for 1985-86, and excludes the pensions of former Law Commissioners. They are also excluded from the figures for subsequent years. They are however included in the figures for 1982-83 and 1983-84.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Africa

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the flow of gains and losses in income for Africa, taking account of development assistance, private lending, debt service payments and commodity price changes, for each year since 1985 to the current year.

Mr. Waldegrave: Figures for the whole of Africa are not available, as north Africa and the middle east are treated as a single region by the main organisations compiling such data. Figures for sub-Saharan Africa are as follows:

A. Net resource flows[1]

	$ billion
	1985	1986	1987	1988
Official development finance[2]	12·1	15·4	18·1	20·4

[1] Total gross resource flows less capital repayments.

[2] Bilateral and multilateral official development assistance (ODA), plus other official development finance.

[3] International bank lending, direct investment, grants by non-governmental organisations, plus other private investment.

[4] Interest payments on long- and short-term credit (but not including capital repayments).

[5] Includes intra-regional trade.

All figures exclude South Africa which is not regarded by OECD as a developing country.

COCOM

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent COCOM meeting.

Mr. Waldegrave: The COCOM executive committee met on 14 and 15 February. It noted that the political and military environment for which the COCOM controls were devised is changing, and agreed to adapt COCOM's procedures and to accelerate streamlining of the controls, particularly in the sectors of machine tools, telecommunications and computers.

The executive committee agreed that the time limits for consideration of cases submitted to COCOM should be reduced from 12 weeks to eight weeks; that working groups should prepare recommendations for liberalisation of the controls on machine tools, telecommunications and computers to be ready by the next COCOM policy meeting in June 1990; that that meeting would consider further priority sectors for changes to the controls; and that, separately, considerations would be given to whether relaxation could be introduced in return for reassurances against the diversion of strategically sensitive goods and technologies.

Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Overseas Development Administration's future funding of the Liverpool school of tropical medicine.

Mr. Waldegrave: As the authorities of the Liverpool school have been told, we are prepared to make a substantial increase in the level of financial support which the school receives from the aid programme. Its provision is subject to an agreement with the school on a set of work programmes to replace the present system of providing aid finance to cover the costs of the salaries of specific individuals and of specific units in the school.

The work programmes are being designed by the school and will aim to make maximum use of their capacity to help address key health issues and problems in developing countries.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn, Official Report, 28 February, column 210, he will set out the dates on which the European Political Co-operation Committee's working group on nuclear non-proliferation met in each year since 1985.

9-10 May 1985
15-16 October 1985
7-8 November 1985

15 December 1989

31 January-1 February 1990

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn, Official Report, 28 February, column 210, on grant in aid provision for non-proliferation matters, he will set out the specific purposes to which he refers for which funding has been made available to the programme for promoting nuclear non-proliferation.

Mr. Waldegrave: Funding has been made available to the programme for promoting nuclear non-proliferation (PPNN) to meet part of the cost of a conference on issues likely to arise during the 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference, and to assist with the production of documentation on the non-proliferation regime.

UN Fund (Women)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Kingdom contribution to the United Nations development fund for women in real and monetary terms, for every year since 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The information is as follows:

Women Staff

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply on 13 February, Official Report, column 131, if he will give a breakdown of the jobs held by the 18 per cent. of overseas Overseas Development Administration staff who are women; and what percentage of technical specialists working for the Overseas Development Administration overseas, and what percentage of agriculturalists, are women.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development's reply of 13 February noted that currently there are nine women members of the ODA serving overseas. They occupy the following positions:

British Development Division in the Caribbean:
Senior Economic Assistant
Executive Officer

British Development Division in Eastern Africa:
Senior Economic Assistant

British Development Division in Southern Africa:
Head of Division (Grade 5)
Senior Health and Population Adviser
Senior Economic Assistant

British Development Division in the Pacific:
Head of Division (Grade 5)
Executive Officer

South East Asia Development Division:
Higher Executive Officer

Twenty-eight of the ODA's own staff overseas are technical specialists of whom four are women (14·3 per cent.). Within this group there are eight ODA agricultural specialists; none are women. One woman natural resources adviser from the ODA is currently on secondment to a technical co-operation assignment in Bangladesh.

Overseas Projects (Women Beneficiaries)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number and percentage of overseas projects supported by the Overseas Development Administration in which 50 per cent. of intended beneficiaries are women.

Mr. Maude: Assuming that the project area has a normal gender balance, about 50 per cent. of the beneficiaries, either directly or indirectly, of most overseas projects are women. The Overseas Development Administration has an integrated policy on women in development which takes account of the role of women in all aid activities.

The ODA will be introducing the new statistical reporting system of OECD for women in development in 1990. This system has rigorous criteria for classifying projects which assist women but even this will not provide the data necessary to give a precise answer to this question.

Training Programmes (Women Participants)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number and percentage of women participating in the Overseas Development Administration training programmes in developing countries, in the United Kingdom, and in total, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Maude: Gender-differentiated statistics on training in the United Kingdom under the aid programme are readily available from 1986 only. They show:

Students and Trainees Financed in United Kingdom 1986-88

	Total	Allocable by sex
		Total	of which women	Per cent. women
Financed During:
1986	11,534	11,070	1,816	16·4
1987	13,144	13,144	2,373	18·1
1988	13,541	13,541	2,480	18·3

Equivalent data are not available for training provided in developing countries. From limited information for 1988-89, the proportion of women receiving in-country training appears to be significantly greater than the proportion receiving training in the United Kingdom under the aid programme.

Ethiopia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the fall of the port of Massawa, Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to use the distribution network of the Relief Society of Tigray to distribute famine relief in those areas of Ethiopia under rebel control.

Mr. Waldegrave: The fall of the port of Massawa is a serious blow to the relief effort and donors, including ourselves, are urgently considering the scope for maintaining and increasing the flow of relief supplies through all available channels.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 2 February, Official Report, column 404, if he will provide a breakdown by country, type and quantity of the ivory exported from Hong Kong since 1 June 1989.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 22 February 1990]: Between 1 June 1989 and 14 January 1990 the Hong Kong authorities issued licences for the export of ivory as follows:

Country	Raw ivory (tonnes)	Worked ivory (tonnes)
China	12·56	—
Macau	0·42	—
India	0·06	—
Taiwan	5·12	0·87
Singapore	6·11	0·11
Japan	26·36	—
Korea	—	0·02
Spain	—	3·56
Mexico	—	0·17
TOTAL	50·63	4·73

Licences were also granted for exports to the Federal Republic of Germany and Thailand but have not yet been used. They have therefore been deleted from the above summary.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 1 February, Official Report, column 308, how much ivory has now been exported from Hong Kong since he announced the six-month exemption.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 22 February 1990]: Two hundred and twenty-five kilogrammes of worked ivory have been exported between 17 January and 26 February. Destinations were South Korea (208 kg) and Taiwan (17 kg).

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 15 February, Official Report, column 326, when he expects the entire commercial stocks of ivory in Hong Kong to be entered into the computer system.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 22 February 1990]: Mid-March 1990.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 2 February, Official Report, column 404, if he will provide a breakdown by country of origin of the seizures made by the Hong Kong authorities of elephant ivory and rhino horn.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 22 February 1990]: The Hong Kong authorities have not been able to determine the countries of origin of confiscated ivory and rhino horn. The only indication from shipping documentation is of the immediately previous country of export from which consignments have arrived in Hong Kong. On this basis the Hong Kong authorities have compiled the following list of figures in the six months to 22 January 1990:

Country of export to Hong Kong	Quantity in Kilogrammes
Elephant Ivory, 27 seizures
Japan	13·25
Taiwan	12·8
India	3·4
Thailand	16·65
Korea	11
China	1,231·15
Philippines	2·4
United States of America	105·7
Spain	55
France	4
Dubai	1·6
Singapore	702
Total	2,158·95
Rhino Horn, two seizures
Singapore	21·2

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 2 February, Official Report, column 404, if he will state the last recorded date of ivory export covered by the reply.

Mr. Waldegrave [Holding answer 22 February 1990]: 14 January 1990.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 2 February, Official Report, column 404, what access is being given by the Hong Kong authorities to those organisations involved in animal welfare and conservation to enable them to monitor the trade in ivory during the six-month exemption period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: [holding answer 22 February 1990]: The Hong Kong Management Authority maintain close and regular contact with organisations involved in animal welfare and conservation, particularly with the Hong Kong branch of the World Wide Fund for Nature. The authority is arranging for relevant statistical material to be supplied to these organisations.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

German Democratic Republic

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to encourage the expansion of trade with the German Democratic Republic.

Mr. Redwood: My Department continues to encourage the expansion of trade with the GDR and to make available the full range of its assistance to British exporters. We are taking particular care to ensure that up to date information is available to British industry about the economic changes in the market and about opportunities for business and investment. Recent and future events include: (i) an important seminar on 6 February organised with the CBI, at which the GDR deputy Trade Minister outlined the proposed legislative changes to enable the country to move towards a free economy. This was attended by over 60 British business men, who also had the opportunity of discussions with representatives of 10 industrial enterprises accompanying their Minister; (ii) participation by 100 companies in the Leipzig spring fair, which my noble Friend the Minister for Trade will visit; (iii) substantial participation of British companies in the annual meeting of the United Kingdom-GDR joint commission, which will take place in the GDR.

Rechar

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the European Commission to decide on his application to give Bulwell East, Bulwell

West and Byron wards in the Nottingham, North constituency objective 2 area status under the Rechar scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The whole of the city of Nottingham is already eligible for general "Objective 2" grants from the European Community structural funds. The Government's recent proposal to the European Commission was that Bulwell East, Bulwell West and Byron wards should be included among the coal-mining areas to benefit also from grants from the funds under the Rechar initiative.

The Commission has stated that it will determine and publish a list of eligible coal-mining areas for the purpose of Rechar by 27 April 1990.

Programmes of Rechar measures for the areas selected by the Commission will then be prepared, and I hope the Commission's decisions on these programmes, and on the amounts of Rechar grants, will be reached before the end of this year. The Commission's decisions on general "Objective 2" grants, for Nottingham city and other areas, will be taken separately.

Mail Order Catalogues

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will initiate a campaign to encourage companies issuing mail order catalogues to include the country of origin in their descriptions of the products offered for sale;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to require companies publishing and with responsibility for mail order catalogues to include the country of origin in the description of products.

Mr. Ridley: No. Such action would not be consistent with our obligations under the treaty of Rome. But catalogue issuers are free to include country of origin information if they wish.

Regional Development

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of financial support he is offering to the regional development organisations in England for 1990-91.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have offered the five English regional development organisations £4 million in grant in support of their inward investment promotion activities for 1990-91, nearly £1 million more than in 1989-90: an increase of 33 per cent.

This increase in funding is to enable the United Kingdom to remain competitive in promoting its locational advantages in the face of increasing competition from the rest of Europe for mobile inward investment in the single European market.

In addition, I am pleased to announce that 1990-91 is the first year of a revised funding policy. In future the Department will fund up to 100 per cent. of qualifying United Kingdom-based inward investment activity and up to 50 per cent. of overseas-based activity.

As well as giving greater certainty to the longer term planning of inward investment promotion, it also means that regional development organisations will be able to spend any additional locally raised funds on non-inward investment activities, like regional regeneration or intra-United Kingdom promotion.

The allocation of grant is as follows:

	1990-91 grant	Increase on 1989-90
Northern Development Company (in the North East)	1,180·0	198·3
Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association	850·0*	190·0
INWARD Ltd. (in the North West)	840·0	299·0
West Midlands Development Agency	620·0	220·0
Devon and Cornwall Development Bureau	510·0	88·0

Less Developed Countries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to assess the implications for United Kingdom trade policy and relations with the less developed countries from the introduction of arrangements for traded imports or raw materials and finished goods from less developed countries not to be fixed by the futures markets.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 March 1990]: The futures markets are of benefit to producers and to those who supply or process raw materials by providing the opportunity for them to reduce the risks associated with future price volatility due to market conditions. Developing countries do not have to deal in these markets if they choose not to. Futures markets themselves do not establish commodity prices. Rather, they provide an estimate of likely future prices which may or may not subsequently turn out to be correct. Prices should be determined by supply and demand in the market. I therefore see no need for the assessment called for by the hon. Member.

I would also refer the hon. Member to a statement on United Kingdom commodity policy made by my hon. Friend the then Minister for Trade, on 21 July 1988, Official Report, columns 781-82.

Vehicle Write-offs

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the laws governing the subsequent refurbishment and sale of vehicles which have been written off by insurance companies.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Road traffic law is reviewed regularly with vehicle safety in mind. Many vehicles that are written off by insurance companies are capable of satisfactory repair. If they are not repaired properly, there are offences of using and of selling an unroadworthy vehicle. A prospective purchaser should consider having a vehicle inspected by an expert before buying it.

PRIME MINISTER

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Q44. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to make an official visit to St. George's hospital, Tooting.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

German Unification

Q55. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on her most recent discussions with the three other former victorious allied powers, and also with the governments of West and East Germany, regarding German unification.

The Prime Minister: I have had separate discussions recently with senior representatives of all our major allies, and of the Soviet Union, on various aspects of German unification. The framework for discussion agreed at Ottawa last month is welcome and will allow for further close consultation among those concerned.

Social Fund

Q176. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to alter the Social Security Act 1986 as a result of the judgment, made in the High Court on Wednesday 21 February, on the administration of the social fund; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the replies from my right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 26 February 1990 at column 58 and on 1 March 1990 at column 319.

Bed and Breakfast Hotels

Q199. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit any of London's bed and breakfast hotels.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 13 February 1990 at column 136.

Homelessness

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on homelessness in London.

The Prime Minister: I have received a wide range of representations on aspects of homelessness in London. Following our review of the homelessness legislation, the measures announced in November by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment include the allocation of additional resources to relieve and reduce homelessness pressures in London. We are now looking at the way in which the responsibilities of different Government Departments work in the prevention and relief of homelessness among single people. Further announcements will be made in due course.

Women

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister what official activities she has undertaken in the past year in her capacity as honorary president of Women in the World; and if she will make a statement on the achievements of Women in the World in raising funds for projects administered by United Nations development fund for women.

The Prime Minister: The hon. Lady may be referring to the "Women of the World Campaign" administered by the NGO, Women Aid. I have no connection with the organisation, nor am I its honorary president.

Engagements

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 8 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. After my duties in the House, I shall depart for a visit to Scotland.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Services Agency

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the planned manpower levels for each of the next three years from 1 April for (a) Property Holdings and (b) for Property Services Agency services; and what were the manpower levels for the Property Services Agency over each of the previous three years.

Mr. Chope: Manpower in Property Holdings is currently planned to remain at the present level of 670 non-industrial and 1,060 industrial posts in the coming year, unless its responsibilities are altered. Future manpower levels in PSA Services will depend on the success of its component businesses.

The manpower levels in the agency in the last three years were as follows:

	Non-industrials	Industrials
1 April 1987	14,621	9,852
1 April 1988	14,339	9,210
1 April 1989	13,555	7,902

Figures exclude staff in the Crown Suppliers and include staff on work for United States forces.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conditions apply to the setting-up of the Property Services Agency as a Government-owned company; and what is the earliest date that such a company could be formed.

Mr. Chope: The establishment of a Government-owned company is an important step in the process of PSA privatisation. No decision has been taken on the timing of the establishment of such a company.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost of employing Price Waterhouse to advise on the commercialisation and privatisation of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: The total cost of employing Price Waterhouse since it was commissioned in August 1988 has been £7·41 million.

Algae

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 17 January, Official Report, column 246, concerning blue-green algae, if he is yet in a position to list (a) the 53 locations, (b) the water companies and (c) the results of any successful prosecutions; and if he will make a statement in respect of the investigations carried out by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 53 sites at which toxic algae blooms were identified by the NRA during 1989 are as follows:

Anglian
*Blickling Lake
*Fritton Lake (Lound Run)
*Barton Broad
Cadney Reservoir
Covenham Reservoir
*Cransley Reservoir

Prosecutions are not being considered at this stage as there is no evidence that these were a consequence of specific polluting incidents. The National Rivers Authority is currently carrying out a thorough investigation into the subject; its report will be completed this summer.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the final recommendations from the Boundary Commission over the future of county boundaries, and when he expects to legislate on any recommended changes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Local Government Boundary Commission for England is under a statutory duty to complete its review of county boundaries by 31 March 1992. Within this overall requirement, the timetable is a matter for the commission. My right hon. Friend may not make any order within six weeks of receiving a report (to permit time for further representations) but aims to complete his consideration within a reasonable period after that. Orders to give effect to recommendations are usually made to take effect on 1 April after my right hon. Friend reaches his decision.

Building Maintenance Contracts

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the percentage of local authority contracts for day-to-day building maintenance which (a) are currently let to private contractors and (b) were let to private contractors in 1985.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: For the 342 local authorities required to report to the Secretary of State for the financial year 1985-86, the reported value of building maintenance work let to private contractors amounted to 45 per cent. of the total expenditure on building maintenance work by those authorities.

Information for 1989-90 is not available at present. The relevant annual reports are due to be submitted by 31 October of this year. Since the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 however, the proportion of work undertaken by private contractors has increased on average by about 1 per cent. per year. Recent changes in the legislation mean that more authorities with small direct labour organisations will come within scope of the Act, which may have the effect of increasing the proportion of work reported as allocated to private contractors.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate his Department has of the number of people employed in the assessment and collection of (a) the domestic rates in 1988-89 and (b) the community charge in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: Information on the number of people employed on domestic rates is not separately distinguishable in the available statistics. An assessment by Price Waterhouse in June 1988 commissioned by the Department suggested local authorities in England might employ between 10,500 and 13,100 staff on the community charge in 1990-91. Actual figures are not yet known.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will modify the administrative arrangement for the community charge so that individual local authorities collect only that part of the charge which relates to their own expenditure.

Mr. Chope: No. Apportioning collection to each of district, county, fire and police authorities could only increase bureaucracy and costs.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is taking action to ensure that the levying of the poll tax is ratified by the Cornish Stannary Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No, because such action is unnecessary.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish all poll tax figures known to his Department throughout the United Kingdom where local authorities have to date settled the level for their area; and by how much each figure diverges from the Government's proposed level.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 21 February, Official Report, column 741.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the answer about the relationship of rates and community charge to net household income given to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) of 12 January 1989, Official Report, column 732-34.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not at present available.

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department issues as to whether people who choose to pay their community charge by monthly instalments and are themselves paid at the end of each month are able to opt to pay the community charge at the end of the month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Advice to charging authorities on the collection of the community charge is contained in practice note No. 12, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Section 4 of that note deals with the exercise of the charging authority's discretion to enter into flexible payment arrangements for chargepayers. There is nothing to prevent charging authorities and chargepayers entering into agreements to pay in the way suggested by my hon. Friend.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will assist local government authorities in England and Wales to issue their final and authoritative accounts for community charge payments by listing his decisions for and against community charge capping for each precepting authority.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he will not hesitate to cap any authorities in England budgeting excessively for 1990-91. We are now looking at the precepts authorities have issued, but it would not be right for me to speculate on which authorities would be capped were we to introduce such a scheme. Welsh authorities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what level of current rate payment will a pensioner couple residing in Birmingham be eligible for transitional protection on a community charge of £406 per adult.

Mr. Chope: In a property occupied by two chargepayers the community charge transitional relief scheme provides assistance where two assumed community charges are more than £156 above the current rates bill (defined as the rateable value multiplied by the average poundage). In Birmingham the assumed community charge is £248·14. This means that in a property occupied by two chargepayers transitional relief is payable where the current rates bill is less than £340·36. If a pensioner couple has not previously paid rates or rent, transitional relief is payable on the difference between the threshold of £156 and the assumed community charge.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 5 March, Official Report, column 440, he will list the small minority of authorities for which he has information about the level of personal community charges.

Mr. Chope: Over two thirds of the 366 charging authorities in England have yet to provide this information to the Department. I intend to place a summary of the information returned in the Library of the House when information has been received from all authorities.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to amend the transitional arrangements for the community charge to take account of the actual charge set; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The community charge transitional scheme provides protection against increases in bills which would otherwise arise as a result of the structural change from the domestic rating system to the community charge. It is not designed to protect people from changes arising from individual authorities' spending decisions for which they are accountable to their electorates. The scheme therefore uses as a reference for the calculation of relief assumed community charges which are consistent with total standard spending of £32·8 billion in 1990-91. I have no plans to amend the scheme.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the 1990-91 standard spending assessment per head of population for the Kent county council.

Mr. David Hunt: The standard spending assessment for Kent county council in 1990-91 is £671 per adult.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make the assumed personal community charge in 1990-91 for each charging authority for the purposes of the community charge transitional relief scheme the same as its standard spending assessment figure per head where this is currently higher.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 7 March 1990]: I have already set out the assumed community charges to be used in the transitional relief scheme in the community charge transitional relief report (England) laid before the House on 15 February.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters he has received in support of the principle that appellants should meet the costs of planning appeals and how many in opposition to this proposal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department's consultation paper "Efficient Planning", issued last July, included a proposal to introduce fees for planning appeals. This proposal attracted 127 responses in favour and 185 against. We are now considering all the responses to the paper.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth's letter of 25 January referring to Mr. Dennis Haylock of Rugby.

Mr. Chope: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Water Companies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the water companies that have hon. Members on their boards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for individual companies and individual hon. Members.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if women's refuges are exempted from collective community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Any building may be designated for the purposes of the collective community charge if, in the opinion of the registration officer, it is used wholly or mainly as the sole or main residence of individuals most of whom stay for shot periods, and it would, accordingly, be difficult to register them individually. Whether a women's refuge could be designated, therefore, would depend on whether the majority of residents were considered to have changed their sole or main residence on moving into the refuge, or whether, in most cases, they had a sole or main residence elsewhere, from which they were only temporarily absent while in the refuge. It is for individual registration officers to take decisions on designation in the light of the facts of each case.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) Official Report, 28 February, column 194, what are the reasons why low-level radioactive waste from outside the nuclear industry is stored for interim periods at Harwell; what storage charges per kilogramme of waste are made; and whether these vary over time of store.

Mr. Trippier: Low-level radioactive waste is currently stored at Harwell as part of the commercial activities of AEA Technology. Such storage is not subject to regulation by this Department. Questions relating to storage costs at Harwell are matters for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), Official Report, 28 February, column 194, whether the data received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the volume of wastes accumulated are publicly available; and what plans there are to update the 1987 United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory to which he refers.

Mr. Trippier: This Department does not maintain a central record of local accumulations of radioactive waste authorised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Records of such accumulations are kept by individual operators and are subject to scrutiny by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution inspectors but are not publicly available.

The 1989 United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory is in preparation and expected to be issued in about three months. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Commercial Development, Avebury

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of the public inquiries into the proposed commercial development at Avebury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The payroll cost to the Department of providing an inspector to hold a public inquiry into various appeals against planning and listed building enforcement notices served by Kennet district council and involving land at Avebury Manor was £2,094. There were also costs incurred by the Department on administration and by other public bodies that were involved in the inquiry.

City of London Heliport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 21 December 1989, Official Report, column 437, what progress he has made in considering the implications of the planning application for the proposed City of London heliport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: There has been no change in my position since my answer of 21 December, Official Report, column 437. The application is being considered by the Corporation of the City of London.

Drinking Water

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the EEC countries which add artificial fluorides to drinking water.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that fluoridation of public water supplies is permissible in a number of European Community countries and is mandatory in Ireland. It is also currently carried out in the United Kingdom and Spain.

Benzene

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to reduce the emission of benzene from industrial sources along the lines of the rules introduced by the United States Environmental Protection Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The major potential industrial sources of benzene are already tightly controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974; as and when more effective controls become available British industry is required to use them. In this regard, we are co-operating closely with our partners in the European Community to identify the best available techniques not entailing excessive costs to minimise benzene emissions from a number of industrial sectors.

Earth Day 1990

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what preparations Her Majesty's Government propose to undertake to celebrate and publicise the Earth Day 1990 campaign on 22 April.

Mr. Trippier: Organisation of events relating to Earth Day in this country is being handled by a range of environmental groups, including Friends of the Earth. We welcome all genuine efforts to improve public understanding of environmental issues, but we have no plans for direct Government involvement in Earth Day events.

Water Supplies

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the grant payment from central Government was under the Rural Water Supplies and Sewerage Acts 1944 to 1970 and the Industrial Development Act 1982 for water supplies to England in the last and current financial years.

Mr. Trippier: The amounts paid under the Rural Water Supplies and Sewerage Acts in respect of water supply schemes are as follows:

1988-89 £	[1] 1989-90 £
215,403	84,989

[1] to 5 March 1990

The majority of schemes supported by the Department under the Industrial Development Act 1982 contain both water supply and sewerage works and it is not possible to separate out the amounts paid in respect of water supply. The total amounts paid by the Department under the Act are as follows:

1988-89 £	[1] 1989-90 £
1,245,864	1,713,972

[1] to 5 March 1990

Customer Services Committees

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is the chairman of the customer services committee for the area of the West Kent company; and what is the address at which he can be contacted in that capacity.

Mr. Trippier: The Director General of Water Services has announced that he has allocated the West Kent Water Company to the Southern customer services committee and has appointed Professor Judith Rees to be chairman of this committee. She can be contacted at the offices of the committee at the following address:

Fourth Floor,
30-34 Albert Embankment,
London SE1 7TL

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he decided not to direct the Director General of Water Services to establish customer services committees under the Water Act 1989 prior to his announcing his proposals for the K factors for the statutory water companies on 7 February.

Mr. Trippier: I have no powers to direct the director general in such matters.

Nature Conservation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what criteria are used when deciding whether or not revocation or discontinuance orders should be made in respect of planning permissions which give rise to conflict with national policy on nature conservation;

(2) what guidance is available to local planning authorities on the use of revocation or discontinuance powers in cases where planning permission affects important nature conservation interests.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 7 March 1990]: The Government's policy on the use of powers to revoke planning permission was given in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), then Minister for Housing and Planning, on 20 December 1989, Official Report, columns 329-30.

Guidance on the use of discontinuance orders is given in planning policy guidance note 1 (PPG1), "General Policy and Principles", a copy of which is in the Library. Discontinuance orders and opposed revocation orders require the confirmation of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for limiting the timescale between revised planning applications relating to planning applications previously refused and which relate to a site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 7 March 1990]: The Department's consultation paper "Efficient Planning", issued last July, included a proposal to give local planning authorities the right to refuse to determine any application on the grounds that it was made within two years following an unsuccessful appeal and there had been no material change in circumstances. The responses to the consultation paper are being considered.

Internal Audit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many internal auditors are employed in those departments for which he is responsible and at what cost, how many internal audit reports were produced in 1989; how many of these were drawn to the attention of a Minister in his Department; and what internal audit work is sub-contracted to private firms and at what cost.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 7 March 1990]: In 1989 there were 17 internal auditors in DoE (Central) together with three other staff at a cost of £356,000. The internal audit unit produced 28 reports, none of which was drawn to the attention of Ministers. No internal audit work was sub-contracted to private firms.

During the same period there were 72 auditors in the Property Services Agency and four support staff at a cost of £1,481,000. The internal audit unit produced 253 reports, none of which was drawn to the attention of Ministers. The PSA employed consultants for 244 days at a cost of £46,000.

North Sea Dumping

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent communications he has received from his Danish counterpart concerning United Kingdom policies over the disposal of industrial toxic waste in the North sea.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 7 March 1990]: I received a letter from the Danish Environment Minister last week. The points raised by Ms. Dybkjaer have been covered in recent Government announcements which have been conveyed to her.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to meet the objective that, by the end of 1992, no young person should be employed in a job without training.

Mr. Nicholls: Training and enterprise councils will be able to use youth training funding to develop partnerships between local businesses, education and training providers with the aim of ensuring that no young person should be employed in a job without training.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that by the end of 1992, two thirds of young people have achieved National Council for Vocational Qualifications level 2 and one quarter have reached National Council for Vocational Qualifications level 3.

Mr. Nicholls: The new youth training arrangements to be introduced in May offer all young people in the labour market the opportunity to achieve qualifications which at a minimum are at or equivalent to level 2 in the framework established by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications. Targets will be agreed annually for progressive increases in the skills attainment of young people.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the objectives stated in the speech by his predecessor of 6 December 1989 remain the policy of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Howard: My predecessor offered a framework of objectives for the development of training in the 1990s. Progress on meeting the objectives depends primarily on action by organisations outside Government; they cannot be specific Government targets. I will be considering with those concerned the steps that need to be taken. With falling numbers of young people and increasing international competition, training is a key priority for the 1990s. That is why we are establishing training and enterprise councils across the country to improve our training effort and our competitive position.

Bellwin Scheme

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider widening the current provisions of the Bellwin scheme in respect of flood damage to reimburse local authorities for essential repairs and maintenance work in addition to that required to safeguard lives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Bellwin scheme already encompasses work to safeguard property or prevent severe inconvenience in addition to work required to safeguard lives. It is not, however, our practice to include losses which are normally insurable.

Disabled People

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with his European Community counterparts about forms of assistance provided to encourage the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: Officials are in regular contact with their European counterparts in the disability field and have access to information about provision in all EC countries. In addition, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment, has recently had informal discussions with Belgian Secrétaire d'Etat for Public Health and Disablement Policy Mr. Roger Delizée.

Training Vouchers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received about training vouchers.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has received various representations on this subject.

TEC (West Lancashire)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken to establish a training and enterprise council in west Lancashire.

Mr. Eggar: Development funding has been approved to establish a training and enterprise council in west Lancashire.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the rate of unemployment and the number of unfilled vacancies in Southend-on-Sea at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: In January 1990 the unemployment rate for the Southend travel-to-work area was 4·7 per cent. and the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres was 2,090. Vacancies at jobcentres do not represent the total number of vacancies in the economy. The latest research shows that nationally only about one third of vacancies are notified to jobcentres.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his minimum and maximum estimates of the percentage of the British work force that is engaged in more than one job and is subsequently counted twice in the employment totals.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 13 February 1990, Official Report, column 203. No further information on persons counted twice in the employment totals is available.

Work Placements

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures for the number of action credit work placements which have been completed for each of the three pilot sites of Chatham, Sunderland and Bristol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested will not be available until after the end of the action credit scheme pilot, which is due to finish at the end of August 1990.

Action Credit

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why he decided to launch the action credit scheme before the three pilot schemes have finished; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No decision has been taken to launch an action credit scheme nationally. At present the Training Agency is running a small pilot in three areas of the country for ET leavers.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what factors he considered in deciding to continue to make it compulsory for construction firms to participate in the operations of the construction industry training board.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to her on 22 November 1989.

Benefit Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by standard region of Great Britain, including Greater London, what is the current average length of time between a claimant's referral for adjudication and an adjudication officer's decision on grounds of restricted availability and non-availability for work.

Mr. Eggar: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the speed with which adjudication officers make decisions—the time between their receiving a referral and reaching a decision—is monitored in a 5 per cent. sample of cases. The sample shows that for the three month period ending 31 December 1989, the percentage of restricted availability and availability questions decided within four weeks of referral to an adjudication officer, for each employment service region, was as follows:

	Availability Percentage	Restricted availability Percentage
Southern	90·9	81·1
Eastern	98·1	91·2
Western	79·2	68·8
West Midlands	96·7	97·3
Yorkshire and Humberside	87·1	79·3
South West	85·2	81·5
Northern	95·8	100·0
East Midlands	83·8	78·9
Wales	96·1	100·0
Scotland	89·2	87·8
North West	80·7	76·0

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for the three-month period to the end of (a) September 1989 and (b) December 1989, if he will give the decisions of adjudication officers on doubtful fresh claims, renewal claims and reviewed claims for unemployment benefit showing the numbers allowed, disallowed, referred to a local tribunal, revised in favour of claimants, revised adversely to claimants and not revised in the following categories of questions: (a) employed to full normal extent, (b) engaged in employment, (c) availability, (d) restricted availability, (e) leaving voluntarily, (f) for misconduct, (g) neglecting to avail of employment, (h) refusal of employment, (i) refusal or premature termination of training, (j) refusal to carry out written recommendations and (k) restart.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the letter I sent her on 29 December 1989 enclosing details of the various decisions requested for the three month period ending 30 September 1989.

Figures for the period ending 31 December 1989 are not yet available but I will write to the hon. Member when they are to hand.

Analysis of adjudication officer's decisions are published quarterly by the Department of Social Security, under the title "Unemployment Statistics, Quarterly Analysis of Decisions of Adjudication Officers". This shows the number of adjudication officer's decisions in each category of question of doubt together with the number of cases allowed, disallowed, or disqualified. These publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by standard region of Great Britain, including Greater London, what is the current average length of time between an unemployed claimant receiving an adjudication officer's decision on grounds of restricted availability and non-availability for work and a subsequent appeal.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 23 October 1989, Official Report, column 326.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants have gained a bridging allowance; and, of these, how many have been awarded to pregnant claimants under 18 years.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 277,769 young people have made successful applications for bridging allowance from its introduction on 11 September 1988 to 8 February 1990. Information on the number of awards made to pregnant claimants is not available.

Earnings

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the proportion of female part-time workers in Great Britain, in April 1989, whose hourly earnings, exclusive of overtime, fell below (a) £2·80, (b) £3·00, (c) £3·20, (d) £3·60, (e) £4·00 and (f) £4·50.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimated percentages of part-time adult female employees earnings below specified amounts in the new earnings survey sample in April 1989 were:

Hourly earnings less than £	Percentage
2·80	39
3·00	48
3·20	57
3·60	69
4·00	77
4·50	83

Hourly earnings excluding overtime; earnings not affected by absence.

Greece (Exhibition)

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to traditional settlements in Greece to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 26 to 30 March.

WALES

Official Visits

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those parliamentary constituencies in Wales that he has visited in an official capacity since being appointed to his present post.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information on constituencies visited is not collected centrally, but I have, of course, visited all the main areas of the Principality since taking up office as Secretary of State for Wales.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of public expenditure is spent (a) by his Department, (b) by Welsh county councils, in total and separately and (c) by Welsh district councils, in total and separately.

Mr. Peter Walker: The total of the Department's central Government expenditure was £1,730 million in 1988-89 compared with £1,546 million in 1987-88. The full information requested for county councils and district councils in Wales is only available for 1987-88 because a small number of authorities have yet to make complete returns to the Department for 1988-89. The information for 1987-88 is shown in the table:

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an assessment of the pollution effects of eutrophication on Bosherton Lakes in Pembroke.

Mr. Grist: It is for the National Rivers Authority to consider what action may be necessary.

Leukaemia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute a study to make recommendations as to whether workers at nuclear power stations in Wales run any risk of passing leukaemia on to their offspring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 5 March 1990]: In its second and third reports, the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) recommended that studies of the health of the offspring of radiation workers should be instigated. The Government have accepted these recommendations in full and are urgently considering a number of relevant research proposals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Block allocations have been issued in respect of housing capital expenditure only since 1978-79. Gross allocations issued to Glasgow district council, incorporating the estimate of capital receipts made at the start of each year and any supplementary allocations made during the year, are set out in the table, expressed in 1989-90 prices.

Policing (Strathclyde)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what financial resources were available for policing in Strathclyde region in each year since its inception; and what was the proportion of central and local government expenditure in each year;

(2) what is his estimate of the financial resources available to Strathclyde regional council for police services in each financial year since its inception; and if he will express the figures in each year from the second year onwards as a percentage increase or decrease on the previous year and also show against each year the annual rate of inflation;

(3) what policies the Government intend to pursue to offset shortfall in the Strathclyde police force;

(4) what recent representations he has received from Strathclyde regional council about the need to direct more resources to filling the shortfall in police officers;

(5) when was the latest assessment made of manpower level needs for Strathclyde police.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Assessment of the manpower needs of Strathclyde police is a matter for Strathclyde regional council, subject to the establishment of the force authorised by the Secretary of State in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary. The police establishment of the force was last determined in 1982. The allocation of resources to eliminate the current shortfall of actual strength as compared with authorised establishment is the responsibility of the regional council. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has received no recent representations in this matter but he stands ready to pay police grant on all approved net expenditure on the police. Since 1986-87 grant has been at the rate of 51 per cent. of net approved expenditure; previously the rate was 50 per cent.

Net approved expenditure on Strathclyde police from 1975-76 is given in the table, together with information about percentage increases and the rate of inflation.

Criminal Law

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Law Commission last examined the criminal law and the protection it offers to people aged over 60 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission has not examined this issue.

Housing

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the housing developments in the Highlands and Islands Development Board area which have been given approval by Scottish Homes since its inception on 1 April 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Such information is not held by the Scottish Development Department as approval of individual housing developments is a matter for Scottish Homes itself. I have asked that body to forward the information requested directly to the hon. Member.

Schools (Safety)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the safety laws and regulations which apply to schools in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Education (Scotland) Act 1980 requires education authorities to ensure that the premises and equipment of all educational establishments under their management are maintained in a condition conducive to the good health and safety of everyone on the premises. The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 also applies in schools. In addition, there is an extensive range of regulations relating to safety considerations which could apply to schools as to other institutions in particular circumstances.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether schools in Scotland are exempted from fire regulations requiring buildings to have a fire certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Schools are not required to have fire certificates. Only a limited number of types of premises is designated as requiring fire certificates under section 1 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971. The Government have no plans to extend the range of designation. The question of fire safety in schools is the subject of guidance to education authorities issued in 1982.

Crossroads Scheme

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about funding of Crossroads by the Greater Glasgow health board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials of the Scottish Office met the chairman of Crossroads (Scotland) care attendant schemes on 8 December 1989 when the funding of a number of local Crossroads schemes, including schemes in Strathclyde, was discussed. It is for the Greater Glasgow health board to decide whether and to what extent it wishes to support Crossroads.

Water Authorities

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current amount of debt owed to the Exchequer by Scottish water authorities; and what the amount was in the previous year.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on the source of local authority borrowing for specific services is not readily available. Figures on the total outstanding debt of Scottish water authorities at 31 March 1989 were given on 13 February 1990, Official Report, column 189. Corresponding figures for 31 March 1988 are given in the table.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if all United Kingdom ballistic missile nuclear submarines have now been checked, in home port, for possible cracks in reactor coolant pipes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Members for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden) and for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on Tuesday 6 March, Official Report, columns 614-15.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a special safety plan for areas adjoining a Z-berth would be introduced in cases where local councils refuse to co-operate in establishing such a plan.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role and actions would be required of a local council in the event of an incident requiring activation of a special safety plan in the vicinity of a Z-berth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the event of an incident requiring activation of a special safety plan in the vicinity of a Z-berth, as in any other civil emergency, the local authorities would act in support of the emergency services and carry out their normal functions in the light of the situation and of technical advice from the Ministry of Defence and the National Radiological Protection Board.

Trident

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all outside contracts issued by the Atomic Weapons Establishment managment in connection with the Trident programme, including dates and costs.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information that the hon. Member requests is classified.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which establishments work on the Trident programme has been transferred from the Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston.

Mr. Alan Clark: AWE Cardiff is undertaking some non-fissile manufacturing work transferred from AWE Aldermaston.

Combat Body Armour

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a full description of combat body armour; and which units of the armed services have been provided with it.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Combat body armour is a lightweight vest covering the torso, designed to protect the wearer against fragmenting munitions. It is a front-opening garment with side vents and adjustable straps to ensure a proper fit. It will be available in six sizes, the medium size weighing 2·5 kg.

No combat body armour has yet been issued, but it will be supplied to service men as an item of personal equipment as supplies become available.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost in both cash and in man hours to his Department in providing alternative civilian cover during the ambulance dispute (a) to the most recent convenient date and (b) projected for the period from the commencement and termination of the period of cover.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Up to 31 January 1990, extra costs in the region of £3·5 million arising from service participation in the provision of accident and emergency cover during the ambulance dispute have been identified for recovery from the Department of Health, the Scottish Home and Health Department and the Welsh Office. Up to 6 March 1990 a total of about 1·1 million service man hours had been deployed.

It would not be practicable to make projections either of extra costs or of man hours because the timing of the final withdrawal of service assistance will depend on the outcome of the ballot of ambulance staff and, if the decision is to accept the management offer, the arrangements which are made in different areas for a return to normal working.

Ammunition Contracts

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions are placed upon manufacturers of ammunition in the United Kingdom that wish to bid for Her Majesty's Government ammunition contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No restrictions are placed on manufacturers in the United Kingdom who wish to bid for ammunition contracts offered in open competition. Certain natures of ammunition for delivery up to 31 March 1993 are procured under the agreement with Royal Ordnance plc which was announced to the House on 27 July 1988 by my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury), the former Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement. In addition, there may be restrictions when a nature of ammunition is procured under collaborative arrangements or is a proprietary item.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions are placed upon manufacturers of ammunition in the United States that wish to bid for Her Majesty's Government ammunition contracts.

Mr. Alan Clark: No restrictions are placed upon manufacturers in the United States who wish to bid for ammunition contracts offered in open competition. Certain natures of ammunition for delivery up to 31 March 1993 are procured under the agreement with Royal Ordnance plc which was announced to the House on 27 July 1988 by my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury), the former Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement. In addition, there may be restrictions when a nature of ammunition is procured under collaborative arrangements or is a proprietary item.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wandsworth Prison Gallows

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the name and address of the company contracted to maintain the gallows that are kept at Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The gallows are maintained by the prison's works department.

Civil Defence

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations his Department has received calling for the repeal of existing legislation imposing specific civil defence duties on local authorities; and if he will list them.

Mr. John Patten: During the las six months the Home Office has received 16 representations from Members of Parliament, local authorities and other organisations calling specifically for the repeal of existing legislation imposing civil defence duties on local authorities.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations his Department has received calling for the preparation of a new Act of Parliament which would impose duties upon appropriate public and private sector organisations to undertake comprehensive emergency planning for peacetime disasters and accidents; and if he will list them.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the civil emergencies adviser to assess local authority requirements for effective peacetime emergency planning. I understand that the adviser has received a number of representations, which are being treated in confidence.

Detainees' Medical Records

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures exist for passing medical information on detained persons from the police to the prison service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The relevant procedures are set out in paragraph 4.33 and appendix 13 of the consolidated circular to the police on crime and kindred matters. They require the police to complete a form (POL/1) in respect of every prisoner handed over to prison custody or transferred between police forces who is considered to present special risks, including physical illness or mental disturbance.

Motorists (Video Evidence)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces in the United Kingdom are currently using video equipment to monitor the driving habits of motorists in order to furnish the courts with specific evidence for the prosecution of offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Nine forces in England and Wales and five in Scotland are using in-car video equipment to record evidence of motorists' poor driving behaviour. Recordings are used either to educate the motorist or may be presented in court to support a police officer's evidence that an offence has been committed. I understand that a further four forces in England and Wales are shortly to acquire similar equipment.

Prison Inmates

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which London prisons have an inmates committee.

Mr. Mellor: Brixton, Downview, Feltham, Holloway and Wormwood Scrubs have inmate committees.

Forensic Pathology

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give, in respect of the report on the working party on forensic pathology (a) the date on which he announced the setting up of the working party, (b) the date on which the report was published, (c) the period of consultation on the report's proposals, (d) the date when he received Mr. Wasserman's comments and (e) the expected date when he will announce his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The establishment of the working party on forensic pathology was announced on 17 July 1984 and its report published on 25 July 1989. A period until 31 October 1989 was allowed for comments but this was later extended until the end of the year. These are now being considered and we expect to announce our response shortly.

Cable Television

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cable television systems are operating at present in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Cable Authority that 15 broadband cable systems are operational. In addition, I understand there are 58 licensed upgrade systems and 153 licensed satellite master antenna television (SMATV) systems operational.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by district, the companies that have applied for cable television franchise in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Cable Authority that three franchises have been advertised in South Yorkshire covering Rotherham and Doncaster; Sheffield; and Barnsley. The following seven companies applied for the Rotherham and Doncaster franchise:

(i) Britannia Cable Systems South Yorkshire;
(ii) Cable Communications (Rotherham and Doncaster) Ltd.;
(iii) Comment Cable Vision South Yorkshire Ltd.;
(iv) Doncaster Telecommunications Complex Ltd. and Rotherham Telecommunications Complex Ltd.;
(v) Don River Cable Teleplus Ltd.;
(vi) South Yorkshire Cablevision Ltd.; and
(vii) South Yorkshire Cablevision (UK) Ltd.

The Cable Authority hopes to award the franchise in mid-May.

The following eight companies have applied for the Sheffield franchise:

(i) Britannia Cable Systems Sheffield;
(ii) Cable Communications (Sheffield) Ltd;
(iii) General Cable Ltd;
(iv) Sheffield Cable Teleplus Plc;
(v) Sheffield Cable Media Ltd;
(vi) Sheffield Cablevision Ltd;
(vii) Sheffield Television and Communications Ltd; and (viii) Telecable of Sheffield Ltd.

The Cable Authority hopes to award the franchise in early June. Applications for the Barnsley franchise close on 16 March.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his earliest estimate of the date at which all of the United Kingdom has access to cable television coverage.

Mr. Mellor: The Cable Authority has awarded or advertised franchises potentially covering 14·5 million homes, which is approximately two thirds of the total number of homes in the United Kingdom. It has always been recognised it was unlikely that all homes would ever be cabled.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the initial application fee charge requested by the Cable Authority for a cable television franchise; what proportion is returnable to unsuccessful applicants; and if he will make a statement as to what the application fee charge is used for.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Cable Authority that application fees are charged according to the following tariff:

Number of homes in franchise area	Application fee £
Up to 50,000	5,500
50,001 to 150,000	12,000
150,001 to 250,000	18,000
250,001 to 350,000	25,000
Over 350,000	30,000

Application fees are not returnable to unsuccessful applicants.

This application fee is levied in accordance with section 6(1) of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. Under section 18(1) of that Act the authority is under a duty to ensure that its revenues are sufficient to enable them to meet their obligations and to discharge its functions under the Act. A copy of the Cable Authority's annual report and accounts is available in the Library.

Electoral Registration

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much is to be spent by central Government in 1989-90 and 1990-91 on advertising campaigns in connection with electoral registration in (a) Great Britain and (b) overseas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

	1989-90 £	1990-91 £
Great Britain	486,000	486,000
Overseas	—	760,000

Drink Driving

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) fatalities and (b) injuries have resulted from drink-driving offences for which there were convictions each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for drink-driving offences there have been in each year since 1979; and how many of these resulted in a custodial sentence.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published under offence group 3 in tables 10 and 15 of the Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 34/89. A copy of the bulletin is in the Library.

West Midlands Police Force

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands police force as to what action was taken against former Detective Inspector Paul Matthews regarding his activities on behalf of Amway International while a serving member of the West Midlands police force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that in 1984-85 an internal inquiry was carried out by officers from the West Midlands police into allegations that Mr. Matthews was engaged in business activities involving the company Amway United Kingdom. There was no evidence to justify disciplinary proceedings, but following the inquiry Mr. Matthews was seen by the deputy chief constable and given words of advice.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Police Complaints Authority as to what steps they have taken to interview former Detective Inspector Paul Matthews in connection with the authority's investigation into allegations made by Martin Foran.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The course of any investigation which is being supervised by the Police Complaints Authority is a matter for them to arrange with the officer appointed to conduct the investigation. Home Office Ministers have no authority to intervene in the process, although I have no doubt that all relevant steps will be taken to ensure that Mr. Foran's allegations are fully investigated.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours of police manpower time were expended by Britain's police forces in providing alternative emergency cover during the ambulance dispute; and what are his projected probable costs for the exercise both in cash and in man-hours (a) to the most recent convenient date and (b) projected for the period from the initial commencement to the final withdrawal of cover.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the total number of man-hours which forces have provided in assisting ambulance services in England and Wales up to and including 5 March has been about 1·5 million.

As police authority, my right hon. and learned Friend is aware that up to 4 February the Metropolitan police have charged the South West Thames regional health authority £5·8 million for police assistance during the ambulance dispute. I am unaware of the charges which other forces have made of their relevant health authorities.

To make projections is not practicable because the timing of the final withdrawal of police assistance will depend on the outcome of the ballot of ambulance staff and, if the decision is to accept the management offer, the arrangements which are made in different areas for a return to normal working.

Police Consultative Groups

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss means to ensure that police consultative groups continue to receive up-to-date information in the detail that has been available in the Metropolitan police divisional reports;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that copies of each Metropolitan Police division's annual management report are made available to the relevant police consultative groups;

(3) what consultation was undertaken with police consultative committees and others prior to the Metropolitan police replacing divisional reports with the document entitled "Policing."

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that a different format is to be adopted for the divisional reports available to police consultative groups this year, with the aim of making them more accessible and readable and thus reach a wider audience. The change is being made after consultation with every consultative group in the Metropolitan area, and a pilot project in Wandsworth. Any information previously contained in a divisional report which is absent from this year's report will be available on request from the division concerned. The divisional management report is an internal working document concerned with the management of the division itself, and there is no intention to make it available publicly.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the latest date available, what percentage of parole applications from (a) white and (b) black prisoners were successful in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The present central computer system on parole does not hold information on the ethnic origin of prisoners and it is not, therefore, possible to produce the figures requested. However, a new system is scheduled for 1991 which will make such analyses possible and these are planned.

Parole Board

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parole dossiers the Parole Board dealt with in each year from 1985; and what percentages of prisoners were granted parole.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested, taken from the most recently published report of the Parole Board, is as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988
Board caseload	6,401	7,655	7,508	7,703
Percentage of Board caseload granted parole	51	46	47	48

Status of Women

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is representing Her Majesty's Government at the current review of forward-looking strategies held by the United Nations Commission in Vienna on the status of women.

Mr. John Patten: Dr. Susan Atkins of the Home Office and Mr. Robin Gwynn of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

War Crimes Inquiry

Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have for responding to the war crimes inquiry.

Mr. Waddington: The Government have now had the opportunity to consider the implications of the parliamentary debates held last December, and have concluded that legislation should be introduced to enable war crimes trials to be held in this country. I am introducing the Bill today. It gives effect to the principal recommendation of the war crimes inquiry that British courts should be given jurisdiction over offences of murder, culpable homicide and manslaughter committed as war crimes in Germany or German-occupied territory during the period of the Second World War, by persons who are now British citizens or resident in the United Kingdom. The Bill also provides, as the inquiry recommended in paragraph 9.43, for the use in war crimes trials of the procedure for transfer to the Crown Court without committal proceedings, which is already available in respect of serious fraud cases; the Bill mirrors the provisions for fraud trials by providing for the Crown Court to dismiss a charge prior to trial, where it appears to the judge that there would be insufficient evidence to convict. Finally, the Bill provides authority for central government to meet the costs of war crimes investigations in England and Wales.

The War Crimes Bill contains no other provisions. In respect of the other procedural recommendations in the war crimes report, the Government have reached the following conclusions:

(i) Live Television Evidence (paragraph 9.34). Section 32 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 already provides for the admissibility of live television evidence from abroad in proceedings in England and Wales. The Government intend to bring the provision into effect in the first instance in respect of homicide trials and trials of serious and complex fraud with further areas becoming covered as resources allow. No provision for live television evidence from abroad yet exists in Scottish law: appropriate amendments are to be tabled in the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Bill.

(ii) Powers to request evidence to be taken on commission abroad and the admissibility of video recordings of evidence taken abroad by letters of request (paragraphs 9.37 and 9.38). Clause 3 of the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Bill, now before Parliament, provides for the issuing of letters of request seeking the taking of evidence abroad. This will include a facility by which evidence can be taken on commission. The admissibility of documentary evidence, subject to appropriate safeguards as to the circumstances in which the evidence was taken and the fairness of its use in trials, was provided for in England and Wales by Part II of, and Schedule 2 to, the Criminal Justice Act 1988. This would mean, for example, that video recordings of evidence taken as a result of a letter of request could be introduced where it would be safe to do so. The position in Scottish law concerning the admissibility of documentary evidence is to be clarified by amendments to the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Bill.

(iii) Admissibility of evidence from persons now dead (paragraph 9.41). The Government believe that the courts can admit such evidence (where it is safe to do so) and that no change in the law is required in this respect.

(iv) Authentication of archives without oral testimony (paragraph 9.42). The Government have decided that no change to the law should be made to accommodate this proposal.

Young Offenders

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of males under the age of 17 years remanded in custody in remand centres from Welsh courts during 1988;

(2) what was the total number of males under the age of 17 years who were made subject to an unruly certificate from Welsh courts during 1988.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1990]: Information on certificates of unruliness is not recorded centrally. The information available relates to 15 and 16-year-old boys initially received on remand into prison service establishments. A certificate is required for such boys received as untried and for some of those received as convicted unsentenced; it is not required for those committed in custody to the Crown Court for sentence under section 37 of the Magistrates Courts Act 1980. In 1988, it is estimated that about 50 boys aged under 17 were initially remanded by courts in Wales to prison service establishments.

HEALTH

Food Poisoning

82. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning were recorded in England in each year from 1984 to 1989.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table:

Food poisoning

Year	OPCS formally notified	OPCS otherwise ascertained	Totals
1984	13,247	7,455	20,702
1985	13,143	6,099	19,242
1986	16,502	7,446	23,948
1987	20,363	8,968	29,331
1988	27,826	11,887	39,713
1989	39,125	15,588	54,713

Provisional.

The OPCS collates notifications of food poisoning and publishes them weekly for England and Wales. The statutory notifications of food poisoning sent to OPCS are based on clinical diagnosis or suspicion of food poisoning —clinical specimens for laboratory investigation may not have been taken.

Reasons for the increase in 1989 are unclear, but may be explained in part by the unusually long warm summer and in part by greater interest in identifying and reporting infections consequent upon considerable professional and public attention to food safety issues.

Hospital Laundering

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of the successful tender for the laundry contract awarded in each health authority in 1987 and 1988; and what was the actual cost of the service in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not held centrally on the value of successful tenders for laundry contracts awarded by health authorities in 1987 and 1988, nor on the actual cost of these services in 1988 and 1989.

However, the table shows that total expenditure on laundry services in 1988-89 for health authorities that have awarded laundry contracts in 1987 and 1988.

Incontinence

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he plans to take steps to improve the delivery of incontinence advice and supplies across the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what advice he has issued to health authorities on the need to provide a continence service; and how this will be affected by National Health Service and Community Care Bill;

(3) what information he has for each district health authority on (a) any restrictions that apply to the supply of incontinence pads to people living in (i) their own homes and (ii) residential homes (b) how much each district health authority spent on incontinence pads for the previous three years and how much for 1988 and 1989, (c) whether the district health authority has a written policy on continence drawn up in co-operation with the social services department and (d) how many continence advisers are employed by each district health authority;

(4) what training is required for prospective continence advisers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The advice given to health authorities on the provision of services to people suffering from incontinence was given in health notice (88) 26, a copy of which is in the Library. This advised health authorities to agree strategies with social services departments and to appoint continence advisers. This advice is unaffected by the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. Detailed information on local service provision is not held centrally.

Both health authorities and local authorities have discretionary powers to provide incontinence supplies and aids. The extent to which they exercise that discretion varies in the light of local needs and circumstances. There is no formal training requirement for continence advisers. the majority of them are registered general nurses. There is an English National Board training course (No. 978 "An introduction to the promotion of continence and management of incontinence") which a large proportion of continence advisers have taken either before or after taking up appointment.

Health Authorities

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the authorities replacing the district health authorities can be mandated to hold their business in public as currently.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: District health authorities will not be replaced. Our proposals aim to reform their membership. District health authority meetings will continue, as now, to be subject to the provisions of the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960.

North West RHA

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases were dealt with by Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley district health authority from 1979 to 1989 in (a) general medicine, (b) paediatrics, (c) geriatric medicine and (d) general surgery.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table:

Childhood Immunisation

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recent rates of uptake for childhood immunisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to say that the uptake rates for childhood immunisations in England continue to improve. In 1988-89, the overall uptake for measles increased to 80 per cent. (from 76 per cent. in 1987-88), and whooping cough reached 75 per cent. (from 73 per cent.). Uptake for diphtheria, tetanus and polio remained at 87 per cent. We believe that the actual improvement has been better than these figures indicate, because the 1987-88 returns included a small percentage of children above the age of two years, while those for 1988-89 are confined to those under that age.

A total of 85 English districts have now reached an average of 90 per cent. or more for diphtheria, tetanus and polio uptake, and 20 have done so for measles. A total of 56 districts have achieved 80 per cent. or more for whooping cough. Notifications for measles are at their lowest levels since records began, while the peak of the current whooping cough upsurge is likely to be very much lower than its predecessors.

We are planning to maintain this pace of improvement in 1989-90 and subsequent years. Renewed efforts will be made to ensure that immunisation uptake for 1989-90 and 1990-91 (the first two full years in which MMR vaccine has been available) achieves the target of 90 per cent. coverage sought by the World Health Organisation. Ninety per cent. is also the upper target for general practitioners in their new contract, which commences in April.

General Practitioner Contract

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will allow general practitioners to subtract contra-indications from target figures for cervical cytology and immunisation programmes under the new contract arrangements;

(2) if he will allow general practitioners to subtract informed dissenters from target figures for cervical cytology and immunisation programmes under the new contract arrangements;

(3) what consideration he has given to the effect on general practitioner-patient relationships of not allowing general practitioners to subtract informed dissenters and contra-indications from target figures for cervical cytology and immunisation programmes under the new contract arrangements;

(4) what information his Department has on the potential numbers of (a) informed dissenters and (b) contra-indications who will not take part in cervical cytology and immunisation programmes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The prevention of childhood diseases and cancer of the cervix is a high priority for the Government. We believe that the new target payment system will encourage GPs to improve levels of immunisation and screening and thereby reduce the incidence of these distressing diseases. The coverage levels at which target payments will be made have been set below 100 per cent. to allow for patients who, for any reason, do not wish to take advantage of these services. No data are available about the numbers of such patients but the experience of practices with high levels of cover suggests that the numbers are not great and that the higher level targets are achievable. The number of children who show contra-indications is small—less than 2 per cent. overall. The Government are satisfied that the new arrangements will have no deleterious effect on the relationship between patients and general practitioners.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will alter the general practitioner contract to allow a peer group of medical practitioners and not family practitioner committees to scrutinise cervical smear exclusion data.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We see no need for such arrangements. Family practitioner committees have a clearly defined management function in handling payment claims from doctors who are in contract with them.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will anonymise patient data from women who have undergone hysterectomies for the purpose of ensuring confidentiality under the new general practitioner contract target arrangements.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The final details of the information that GPs will need to supply to family practitioner committees (FPCs) when claiming target payments have yet to be settled. No more information than is absolutely necessary for checking and audit purposes will be required by FPCs to approve the appropriate payments. All clinical information is treated on a confidential basis.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will exclude from general practitioner target payment figures nuns, virgins and women who do not wish to undergo a cervical smear.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. To exclude women who do not wish to be screened would not be consistent with the objective of the target payments scheme, which is to encourage GPs to point out the benefits to their patients of screening for cancer of the cervix. We believe it is a sensible precaution to include within the target scheme all women in the vunerable age group who have not had hysterectomies.

RU486 Drug

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any application has yet been received for a product licence in connection with the abortifacient drug RU486.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not usual practice to disclose information about whether or not an application for a product licence has been received or to give information about the progress of any such application.

Cook-Chill Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make public the full report of his Department's audit inquiry into the financial arrangements relating to Wakefield district health authority's cook-chill system of catering;

(2) when he expects his Department's director of audit to complete the audit of Wakefield district health authority's revenue and capital expenditure on the introduction of a cook-chill catering system.

Mr. Freeman: The director of audit expects the preliminary statutory audit visit to Wakefield district health authority, at which the cook-chill catering system is to be reviewed, to be completed in early April 1990.

We do not intend to make public any report that may be made by the Department's statutory auditor.

Wakefield DHA

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require a report from the chairman of Wakefield district health authority as to the reasons for and full cost of the recent meeting held by him, the authority's district general manager and commercial manager with Tillery Valley Foods in south Wales.

Mr. Freeman: This is a local issue for the health authority concerned. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Wakefield health authority, Mr. Hayward, for further information.

Nurses (Training)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have received (a) basic training and (b) post-graduate training in the private sector in (i) 1980, (ii) 1987, (iii) 1988 and (iv) 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

In 1989 representatives from the English National Board, the Department of Health and the independent sector established a working group to identify the extent of the sector's input to pre-registration and post-registration nurse training; and to agree action to increase this input consistent with its demand for staff. The working group should report by the summer.

Preliminary findings by the group are that the independent sector does make a contribution to post-registration nurse training, placing some 200 nurses a year on about 23 different approved courses. In addition, at any one time, around 200 pre-registration NHS nurses are undergoing a short (anything from one to 12 weeks) placement in an independent hospital, generally free of charge.

Most training takes place in the National Health Service.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how often hospital waiting lists are collected; and if he will publish them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about hospital in-patient waiting lists is collected quarterly from health authorities. Booklets summarising the information and bulletins commenting on trends are published for the March and September quarters, maintaining a series of comparable figures back to September 1975.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the hospital in-patient waiting lists for 30 September 1989 will be published within six months of the collection date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We plan to publish the waiting list statistics by early April.

Patients (Treatment)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of in-patients treated immediately by referral and not recorded as waiting for treatment, and give this as a percentage figure of all patients treated.

Mr. Freeman: The information readily available indicates that in 1987-88 some 3 million (54 per cent.) of all acute admissions were not recorded as already waiting for in-patient treatment.

Agency Staff

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the amount spent on (a) agency nurses and (b) agency clerical and administrative staff for the latest available year for each district health authority, special health authority and regional health authority and England as a whole.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the amount spent on agency staff for 1983, 1987, and the latest available year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is derived from the summarised annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in Engand together with those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals:

Total revenue expenditure on non-national health service (agency, etc.) staff

Year	£000 (cash)
1983-84	59,822
1987-88	211,436
[1]1988-89	252,167

[1] Latest available.

Notes:

1. The figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 excludes £2·4 million and £2·9 million respectively being similar costs charged to capital expenditure and which were not specifically identified in the accounts for earlier years.
2. The figure for 1983-84 includes a minor element from the administrative expenses of family practitioner committees (FPCs) which is not separately identifiable but is excluded from the figures for the more recent years.

As a result of various initiatives achieved or pending including: nurse clinical grading and improved London allowances; administrative and clinical local pay flexibility; flexible grading in scientific and professional staff groups and local pay flexibility for other staff groups the amount spent on agency staff should reduce in future.

The expenditure remains predominately in the Thames regions, which together with the London postgraduate SHAs accounted for some 76 per cent. of the national total (£252 million).

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the numbers of agency nurses used on the latest date for which figures are available and on comparable dates for the two preceding years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Number of agency nursing and midwifery staff (whole-time equivalent) in England

	Number
30 September 1988	6,240
30 September 1987	6,130
30 September 1986	5,450

Health and Social Service Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish, for the latest available year, the figures given in table 3.1 of "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics, 1989".

Hepatitis B

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how he seeks to ensure that no member of the hepatitis B high risk group, as defined by the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, or their family, is denied vaccination; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will institute a Government information and monitoring programme on hepatitis B and add hepatitis B to the screening study currently in progress on the incidence of AIDS and HIV; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether the Health Education Authority has any plans to conduct an education campaign on hepatitis B targeted at specific groups and their families as well as prescribing physicians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Health Education Authority is currently reviewing all its publications on sexually transmitted diseases, including information on hepatitis B.

Viral hepatitis B is a notifiable disease and the public health laboratory service continues to monitor its incidence. The Department does not believe additional monitoring or screening procedures are required. Reported cases to the PHLS for the last five years for which figures are available are shown in the table:

Acute hepatitis B; laboratory reports 1985-89

Year	Reported cases
1985	1,785
1986	1,329
1987	785
1988	644
1989	[1]608

[1] Figure provisional.

Note: Acute hepatitis B reported from laboratories in England, Wales and Ireland includes all illnesses with or without jaundice, diagnosed as acute hepatitis and confirmed as type B by positive hepatitis B surface antigen tests or other serological markers of current or recent infection.

These figures show a welcome decline in the incidence of the disease.

A new edition of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation's memorandum, "Immunisation against Infectious Disease", to be issued shortly, will remind doctors of the high risk groups. However, the responsibility for ensuring vaccination is for occupational health services and for individual doctors, as appropriate.

Census

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the proposed forms of questionnaire which people will be required to complete in next year's census of the population.

Mr. Freeman: I have today laid before the House the Census Regulations 1990, which include reduced-size facsimilies of each of the census forms to be completed by the public in England and Wales. The regulations provide for the detailed arrangements necessary for the conduct of the census.

Corresponding Census (Scotland) Regulations 1990 have been laid before the House today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Cancer and Leukaemia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of cancer and leukaemia confirmed in children in Great Britain.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The data cover the years 1980-85, later data for Great Britain as a whole not yet being available.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people in the area of the Pontefract health authority have been diagnosed or treated for cancer or cancer-related diseases including leukaemia over the past five years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people in the area of the Wakefield health authority have been diagnosed or treated for cancer or cancer-related diseases including leukaemia over the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The exact information requested is not available.

The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) publishes annual cancer statistics using data collected by the 11 regional cancer registries and the Welsh cancer registry. Data concerning newly diagnosed cases of (a) malignant neoplasms and (b) leukaemias for Pontefract and Wakefield district health authorities (DHAs) are shown in the table, which covers the years 1982 (when DHAs were established) to 1985 (the latest year available):

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons have benefited from a home responsibilities protection for retirement pension since 1978.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. Records are not kept of the number of persons whose awards of retirement pension had periods of home responsibilities protection taken into account.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will end the transitional payments scheme to people on pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to do so.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on this subject on 12 February at column 89.

Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what specific financial efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for (a) contributory national insurance benefits, (b) non-contributory national insurance benefits, (c) means-tested benefits and (d) the social fund.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In a statement to the House on 17 May 1989, my right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State announced the publication of a definition of the service to be provided to the public and said that the definition would be backed up by specific targets for performance.

Subsequent to the statement on 17 May, national performance targets for the years 1989-90 to 1991-92, in terms of clearance times in working days (unless otherwise indicated) and percentage error rates, were lodged in the Library.

Targets for 1990-91 to 1992-93 are currently being reviewed.

There are no specific financial efficiency targets for individual benefits at present.

Administration Costs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the unit cost of administering (a) contributory national insurance benefits, (b) non-contributory national insurance benefits, (c) means-tested benefits and (d) the social fund.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest information available is for the 1987-88 financial year. The unit cost of administering the following benefits in that year were:

(a) Contributory national insurance benefits	66
(b) Non-contributory non-income-related benefits	14
(c) Income-related benefits	111

The social fund was introduced in a limited way in 1987-88 for funeral and maternity payments only, but no separate figures are available—the costs for 1987-88 are included in the overall income related benefits figure.

The unit costs are calculated by dividing the estimated administrative costs of the benefits involved by the average number of beneficiaries.

Hostels

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had from hon. Members regarding the effects on claimants of different levels of housing benefit payable to residents in Salvation Army hostels in Nottingham, Grimsby and Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Hostel dwellers on income support became eligible for housing benefit from 9 October 1989. Since that date we have received a small number of representations about the level of housing benefit in Salvation Army hostels generally.

Benefit Payments (Part-weeks)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to pay, by direct payment, part-weeks of benefit (a) general and (b) where claimants are resident in hostels and are transient.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Part-week deductions from benefit for direct payment to third parties would be administratively complex and are not generally warranted. However, part-week deductions are available for claimants in night shelters.

Claimants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young claimants have so far gained extensions of benefit in order to prevent severe hardship; and how many who were pregnant.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of awards of income support to 16 and 17-year-olds on grounds of severe hardship for the period 12 September 1988 to 23 February 1990 is 16,206. Figures on the number of severe hardship directions made to those 16 and 17-year-olds who are pregnant have not been collected for this period. However, we are looking more closely at the situation of young pregnant girls.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people depended entirely on state benefits for their income in each of the years 1978 to 1989 (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) in each local Department of Social Security area.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) on 5 March at column 520.

Benefit Changes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, in pursuance of the reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead, Official Report, 20 February, column 675-76, he will detail the number affected by the changes to national insurance benefits over the 1981 to 1988 period and give the cash effect and the cash effect in 1988 prices for each of the changes during 1988 to 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As stated in my reply to the hon. Member of 20 February 1990, details of the numbers affected by changes prior to 1988 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Details of the cash effect of the changes set out in the reply of 20 February are given in the table. All the changes were, in whole or in part, introduced part way through the year and details are therefore given for both the year of introduction and the year following.

Employers' National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what is his estimate of the total which should be collected and which has been collected in employers' national insurance contributions for the latest five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table shows the national insurance fund income expected from class 1 contributions (employees and employers schemes) compared with the contributions received from employers during the financial years from 1984-85 to 1988-89. The estimates were contained in the Government Actuary's reports which were laid before Parliament together with the draft Contributions Re-rating Orders for those years and exclude the SSP, SMP and abatement of contributions on SSP and SMP that employers were expected to recover from the Class 1 contributions they were due to remit.

(£ Thousands)

Year	Estimated income from class 1 contributions	Total contributions received from employers
1984-85	20,291,000	21,380,595
1985-86	22,687,000	22,564,779
1986-87	23,571,000	24,254,179
1987-88	25,577,000	26,522,035
1988-89	28,349,000	29,759,614

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many visits by his Department's national insurance inspectors were planned to employers' premises in each of the last 10 years; how many were made; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: National insurance inspectors conduct several thousand visits to employers each week to resolve inquiries and to investigate recording errors. In addition, inspectors conduct more searching visits in order to ensure compliance with social security legislation. Such visits are part of combined survey which, since 1986, has been undertaken in cooperation with Inland Revenue. No firm target was set for the overall number of visits because the time taken to complete them can vary widely but the expectation was to undertake around 100,000 each year. The actual number of these visits in each of the last three years was as follows:

Year	Number
1986-87	103,630
1987-88	92,034
1988-89	80,568

Figures for comparable visits undertaken in earlier years are not readily available.

Social Security Spending

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the expenditure change in real terms between 1979-80 and 1989-90 for each of the beneficiary groups in table 14.9 of the public expenditure White Paper; and what is the total expenditure change on benefits in real terms during the same period.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 March 1990]:
The information is given in the table.

£ million

	1979-80 cash	1979-80 at 1989-90 prices	1989-90	Percentage increase
Elderly people	10,130	20,411	25,550	25
Sick and disabled people	2,780	5,601	9,520	70
Family	3,570	7,193	9,200	28
Unemployed people	1,470	2,962	4,740	60
Widows and orphans	760	1,531	1,240	−19
Total benefit expenditure	18,780	37,837	50,246	33

Commercial Consultants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department observes a ceiling for charge-out rates for work commissioned from commercial consultants.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The Department of Social Security does not observe a ceiling for charging-out rates for work commissioned from commercial consultants. The Department pays the appropriate commercial rate for the grade and quality of work to be undertaken.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total number of studies and reports commissioned from commercial consultants in each year 1978-79 to 1989-90, giving their total cost for each year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The total number of reports and studies on social security matters commisssioned from commercial consultants from 1986-87 onwards and their cost is in the table:

Year	Number of reports and studies commissioned	Total cost of such work in that year (£ million)
1986-87	12	0·620
1987-88	15	0·853
1988-89	21	1·372
1989-90	40	2·993

Records were not maintained in a form that enables information to be provided prior to 1986-87.

Expenditure up to and including the 1988-89 financial year has been from a joint health and social security budget. When the work involved both social security and health aspects the cost of the report or study has been apportioned accordingly.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants aged under 18 years are claiming income support in their own right; and if he will give details of each month's figures since the 1988 changes in entitlement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham., Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 26 October 1989 at col. 539-40 the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds claiming in their own right ceased to be collected after October 1988 and could now be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Monthly figures are available on the number of awards of income support under the severe hardship provision. These are shown in table A.

Our monitoring of the changes introduced in July 1989 gives monthly figures on the number of awards of income support to 16 and 17-year-olds other than under the severe hardship provisions. These are shown in table B.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Apples and Pears

14. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the new arrangements made by apple and pear growers to organise research into their crops.

Mr. Curry: The new research body for apples and pears, the Apple and Pear Research Council, which came into being at the end of last year, has got off to an energetic start. It has already held an open meeting to which all growers were invited in order to ensure that growers' views are fully taken into account in assessing the council's research priorities.

Farming (New Entrants)

15. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies he is pursuing to encourage new entrants into farming.

23. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions he is taking to assist young farmers wishing to enter agriculture.

74. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist young farmers wishing to enter agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: My Department gives grants to young farmers under the farm and conservation grant regulations at rates 25 per cent. higher than for other farmers.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

16. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new evidence he has on the vertical transmission of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Gummer: There is no evidence so far that maternal, that is dam to calf, transmission can take place. It does of course in sheep but not in any of the other species which may be affected by spongiform encephalopathy. We are conducting a major study, costing over £5 million, to determine the answer to this question.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what precautions his Department has taken relating to the offspring of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-stricken cattle.

Mr. Gummer: Despite the fact that there is no evidence of maternal transmission, as a precautionary measure any suspect animal that is pregnant must be isolated during and for 72 hours after calving and the placenta and other material burnt or buried. The accommodation used must then be cleaned and disinfected. In addition, as part of the comprehensive epidemiological inquiry into every case of BSE, data are collected in relation to calves of BSE-affected cattle.

More generally, the consumer is fully protected because all suspect animals are slaughtered and destroyed and those offals which are most likely to harbour the BSE agent are banned from human consumption even in animals where there is no indication of the presence of BSE.

Fruit

17. Mr. Janman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the contribution of the Kingdom scheme to the marketing of English top fruit.

Mr. Curry: From its formation in 1980 the Kingdom scheme made a valuable contribution to both the promotion and marketing of top fruit.

Agriculture Workers

18. Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest average weekly wage for full-time agriculture workers.

Mr. Curry: Average weekly earnings including benefits for full-time agricultural workers for the 12 months ending in June 1989 were £161·40. These are the latest figures which are available.

58. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time hired workers were employed in agriculture in Worcestershire during 1989.

Mr. Curry: County figures for 1989 are not yet available. The 1988 figures for Hereford and Worcester, taken from the June 1988 agricultural census, are as follows:

Hired workers	Number
Full-time	2,949
Part-time	1,293

Moorland Burning

19. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had about burning of moorland to regenerate heather.

Mr. Curry: We have had a number of discussions on conservation and agricultural practice on moorlands.

Ruminant Rations

20. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what opinions his Department has expressed to other European Community member states concerning the incorporation of meat and bonemeal in ruminant rations.

Mr. Gummer: We have kept our EC partners fully and regularly informed about the probable role of ruminant meat and bonemeal in the development of BSE and the measures we have taken to deal with the problem.

Food Irradiation

21. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received against the introduction of food irradiation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I continue to receive letters about aspects of food irradiation, but no new considerations have arisen that are relevant to the Government's decision. The various issues have been thoroughly analysed and summarised with great clarity in the recent report from the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities.

53. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what major food manufacturers or supermarket chains have approached his Department requesting that the present ban on the sale in this country of irradiated foodstuff be lifted.

Mr. Maclean: I have received no such representations direct from food manufacturers or retailers. However, I am aware that the Food and Drink Federation was among those scientific, health, consumer and trade bodies that commend favourably on the introduction of food irradiation in evidence to the recent inquiry by the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities. The report of this inquiry is in the Library of the House.

79. Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports from independent scientific committees he has received regarding the safety of food irradiation.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin).

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the correspondence on food irradiation he has received has been in favour of its introduction.

Mr. Maclean: The nature of the correspondence does not lend itself to this sort of analysis since many of the letters either raise, or seek information about, particular aspects of the subject.

Green Pound

22. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures are followed to achieve changes in green currency values.

51. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures are followed to achieve changes in green currency values.

Mr. Gummer: Changes to green currencies are proposed by the Commission and agreed by qualified majority in the Council of Ministers.

30. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next be discussing the green pound in the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Gummer: The green pound will next be discussed at the meeting of the Council of Ministers on 26-27 March.

34. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will be taking to secure support in Europe for his proposals on the green pound.

Mr. Gummer: I have made it clear to the Commission and the Council that I am seeking a substantial devaluation of the green pound and I will continue to pursue this objective in future negotiations, both in the Council of Ministers and elsewhere.

44. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with other European Community Ministers concerning the future of green currencies.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with other European Community Ministers concerning the future of green currencies.

Mr. Gummer: I have regular discussions with other Community Agriculture Ministers, in the Council of Ministers and elsewhere. At these meetings I make it clear that I am seeking a substantial devaluation of the green pound at this year's farm price review.

45. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what issues he will raise during his next European Council negotiations on the green pound.

Mr. Gummer: I shall be pressing for a substantial devaluation at the next meeting of the Council of Ministers.

49. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the president of the National Farmers Union on the current state of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The president of the National Farmers Union has made his views on the green pound clear to me on a number of occasions. I have told him that I seek to secure a substantial devaluation of the green pound at this year's farm prices review.

56. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what commitments he has given to the National Farmers Union about his negotiating stance on the green pound.

Mr. Gummer: I have indicated to the House and to the National Farmers Union that I am seeking a substantial devaluation of the green pound at this year's farm price review, and that I am committed to the complete removal of the difference between the green and market rates of exchange of the pound by the end of 1992 at the latest.

80. Mr. Burt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received against Britain being granted a devaluation of the green pound.

Mr. Gummer: I have received representations from various organisations drawing attention to the consequences of a devaluation of the green pound on food prices.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will tabulate, for each month since British accession to the European Community, the amount of divergence between British green pound rates weighted according to the value of production of each commodity group and overall exchange rates and the overall weighted impact to date of each divergence on British producer prices.

Mr. Curry: The information, in the form requested, is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to achieve (a) a devaluation and (b) the abolition of the green pound.

Mr. Gummer: I expect to secure a devaluation of the green pound at this year's farm price review. The Council and Commission are agreed that all monetary gaps, including the gap between the green and market rate for the pound, should be eliminated by 1992 at the latest.

Commercial Whaling

24. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the future of commercial whaling.

Mr. Curry: At present there is a moratorium on commercial whaling. The Department continues to receive many letters about the conservation of whales. We continue to work hard to safeguard this.

Rhizomania

25. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on rhizomania.

Mr. Curry: The Government remain determined to prevent the introduction and spread of rhizomania, which presents a serious threat to the sugar beet industry. We operate a range of import controls and carry out extensive annual surveys of beet fields. The disease was first identified in 1987 at a farm in Suffolk and two further outbreaks were identified last year in Norfolk. These farms are subject to strict control measures designed to prevent the spread of the disease.

Food Inspectorate

26. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to improve the food inspectorate.

Mr. Maclean: In the context of the requirements of the European Community directive on the official control of foodstuffs and of the Food Safety Bill, currently before Parliament, discussions will be held with representatives of enforcement authorities on any changes needed in the present arrangements for the inspection of foodstuffs.

Equine Exports

27. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of his efforts within the European Community to prevent the export of equines below set minimum values after 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Negotiations on the Community's proposals on welfare conditions for animals in transit are still at a preliminary stage.

We have emphasised the importance that we attach to securing proper controls on trade in horses but it is clear that these will be difficult negotiations.

Eggs

28. Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist in the marking of British-produced eggs.

Mr. Gummer: I have informed the industry that it is free to put origin terms on egg packs. As hon. Members will be fully aware, there are comprehensive measures in force in the United Kingdom to combat salmonella. I hope that similar measures will be taken throughout the EEC in the near future. Until then British eggs are subject to the toughest safety regulations in the Community.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any intention of banning the use of melange as a component which is included in raw liquid egg which is pasteurised for industrial use.

Mr. Maclean: Under European Community Council directive 89/437 of 20 June 1989 on hygiene and health problems affecting the production and the placing on the market of egg products, member states are required, before 31 December 1991, to bring into force regulations that, inter alia, will prohibit the use of broken eggs in products intended for human consumption.

Animal Feed

29. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to provide more information concerning the ingredients in animal feed.

Mr. Maclean: A recent amendment to the European Community directive on the marketing of mixed feeds will oblige manufacturers to declare the materials used, though further work is necessary within the Community before this provision can be implemented by the member states.

The present regulations already permit manufacturers to give full information about ingredients and farmers who want this information should seek it from their suppliers.

Salmonella

31. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further measures he is taking to assist egg producers whose flocks are found to be infected with salmonella.

Mr. Maclean: As announced in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 13 February, Official Report, column 200, the scales of values for calculating compensation, where infected flocks are compulsorily slaughtered, have been revised to reflect increases in commercial prices and will be kept under regular review in future.

Eastern Europe

32. Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to visit eastern Europe.

Mr. Gummer: I visited Poland between 25 and 28 February 1990, and plan to go to Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria this month.

33. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives he is taking to assist in increasing food production in eastern European countries.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) and the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 8 February (Official Report, columns 1000-01). I have just returned from a visit to Poland, and shall be visiting Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria next week. Opportunities for visits to other eastern countries are being kept under review.

78. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of ways in which United Kingdom agriculture can respond to the food needs of eastern Europe.

Mr. Gummer: It is clear that British experience and expertise in the agriculture and food sectors can be of great benefit in enabling eastern Europe to meet its food needs. The previous Socialist economies were particularly damaging to food production and I am determined that Britain should play its full part in their transformation into the free market. We are already working closely with Poland and Hungary and I hope to visit Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia shortly with a small specialist team. We are also encouraging British business men and farmers to make the most of the opportunities offered by these welcome changes.

Silage

35. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what efforts he is making to reduce pollution risks from silage.

Mr. Curry: The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service provides free initial advice to farmers on ways to minimise pollution from silage; grants of 50 per cent. are available under the farm and conservation grant scheme for the construction and improvement of silage effluent facilities; and the Government are at present consulting on regulations that would set minimum construction standards for new and substantially reconstructed silage installations and which would provide a power to the National Rivers Authority to require improvements to existing installations; and the Government will shortly be introducing regulations setting minimum standards for new silage installations.

Beef

36. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the present state of the beef industry.

Mr. Curry: The 1989 June agricultural census showed an increase in the beef breeding herd to its highest level for a decade, for the first time fully offsetting the fall in the dairy herd. The December 1989 census showed a continuation of this trend, with a rise of 9 per cent. over the previous year. These figures indicate that producers' expectations remain high.

Consumer Panel

37. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his consumer panel will have its first meeting.

42. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the operation of his consumer panel.

70. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that consumer opinion is fully taken into account in formulating future food safety policy.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent arrangements he has made to improve the representation of consumer interests towards his Department.

Mr. Gummer: Following my announcement of 2 November 1989 (Official Report, columns 317-18) we have established a consumer panel made up of ordinary consumers nominated by the main consumer bodies but appointed in an individual capacity. Its terms of reference are:

"To review matters relating to the implementation of food safety policies and to examine particular issues of concern to consumers".

The first meeting of the panel will take place in London on 12 March 1990. The names of the members are:

Mr. Phillip Bell, Edinburgh
Mrs. Dorothy Craig, Newcastle upon Tyne
Mrs. Harriet Kimbell, Guildford
Mrs. Susan Leather, Exeter
Mr. Patrick McCoy, Armagh
Mr. Gareth Morgan, Llanfairpwll, Gwynedd
Mrs. Wilma Mulliner, Weymouth
Mrs. Susan Payne, Bromley
Mrs. Noelle Whamond, Newton Stewart

I expect the panel to lead to a useful dialogue between consumers and Ministers on food safety issues.

We also wish to initiate periodic meetings in which we can bring together the leaders of consumer groups to consider a wide range of complex policy issues going much wider than the food safety issues on which the consumer panel will be concentrating. I am therefore writing today to 15 consumer bodies inviting them to a meeting in the Ministry next month.

We expect that these arrangements will strengthen contacts and enable Ministers to hear a wide range of consumer views directly. They supplement the well-established arrangements for consulting consumer bodies on particular issues and listening to their views.

Sheep Dip

38. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning organophosphorous sheep dips.

Mr. Maclean: A number of hon. Members and others have sought information from me and my Department about organophosphorous sheep dips.

As I told the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 25 January (Official Report, columns 821-22), my Department will begin this year a review of ectoparasiticide product licences which will include licenced organophosphorous sheep dips.

Bottled Water

39. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on nitrate levels in (a) imported bottled water and (b) home-produced bottled water.

Mr. Maclean: No specific limits for nitrates are laid down under the EC natural mineral waters directive. Information available suggests that levels of nitrates in both imported and home-produced bottled water are below the maximum concentration of 50 mg/l set by the EC drinking water directive.

Animal Welfare

40. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve conditions of animal welfare throughout the European Community.

73. Mr. Day: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to improve conditions of animal welfare throughout the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: In his written answer of 7 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) (Official Report, column 712), my right hon. Friend explained that the community has already taken some action on animal welfare. However, he made it clear that further action is needed in a number of areas so that all countries in the Community operate to the same high standards for the keeping and transport of farm anumals.

61. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on common European standards for animal welfare after 1992.

Mr. Maclean: As explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 7 February, Official Report, column 712, I am determined that high standards of animal welfare should be adopted throughout the European Community.

64. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the single European market for animal welfare.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission has made a number of proposals to harmonise standards of animal welfare in the Community, and will be making further proposals in due course. The implications will depend on the outcome of the negotiations, in which we shall be pressing for improved safeguards for animal welfare in a number of important areas.

Arable Farmers

41. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policy he is adopting towards the European Community price fixing which would be of advantage to arable farmers.

62. Mr. Wood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies he is adopting at European Community price-fixing negotiations which would be of advantage to arable farmers.

Mr. Curry: We are seeking a substantial devaluation of the green pound; we are pressing for the basic cereals co-responsibility levy to be replaced by matching price cuts; and we are strongly supporting the Commission's proposals to maintain the present definition of double-low rapeseed for a further year.

European Community Agriculture Ministers

43. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met with European Community Ministers of Agriculture; and what was discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 7 March.

Dairy Sector

46. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board, and with other industry leaders, to discuss the dairy sector.

Milk Marketing Board

47. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what marketing opportunities he envisages being created by reforming the Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. Curry: It is not for Government to identify marketing opportunities. But I am concerned that the milk marketing arrangements should encourage innovation and enable the industry to take advantage of changing market opportunities. I am encouraging the Milk Marketing Board and the Dairy Trade Federation to pursue their discussions with a view to devising arrangements suited to the 1990s.

Tyrell Committee

48. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to implement any more of the recommendations of the Tyrell committee.

Mr. Gummer: Work is already in hand or planned on all the projects recommended by the Tyrell committee as urgent or of high priority. It is essential to devote expertise and resources to the priority work but we will keep the recommended research of a lower priority under review. In total the Government will be spending over £12 million in the next three years on BSE-related research.

Farmers (Countryside Custodians)

50. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies he is pursuing in order to emphasise to farmers their role as custodians of the countryside.

Mr. Curry: The Department provides a range of incentives including the environmentally sensitive areas, farm and conservation grants and farm woodland schemes, together with general and specialised advice on conservation aimed at encouraging farmers to protect and enhance the countryside.

Overseas Food Fairs

52. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which overseas food fairs and exhibitions his Department has attended since July 1989.

Mr. Curry: Since July 1989, the following fairs and exhibitions have been attended by Ministers and officials of my Department:

16 October 1989—Anuga food fair, Cologne
25 January 1990—Berlin green week
6 February 1990—ISM Sweets and biscuits fair Cologne

I regard it as most important that British companies should receive maximum encouragement in their efforts to penetrate overseas markets.

Herrings

54. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the volume of herrings landed in England and Wales last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Provisional figures for the volume of herrings landed in England and Wales in 1989 are 1,324 tonnes by United Kingdom and foreign vessels.

Veterinary Product Licensing

55. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the average British fees for veterinary product licensing; and what are the comparable level of fees levied in other EC countries.

Mr. Maclean: A wide range of fees is charged for veterinary medicines licensing based on an estimate of the full economic cost of assessing each type of application. I do not have sufficient information to make a useful comparison with fees charged in other EC countries or the basis on which they are set.

Covent Garden Market Authority

57. Miss Hoey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Covent Garden Market Authority; and what was discussed.

Mr. Curry: I last met the chairman of the Covent Garden Market Authority on 1 March when we discussed a number of matters of mutual interest on the present and future operation of the market. I am now able to announce my conclusions following the study commissioned last year into the future of the Covent Garden market.

I have decided that in principle legislation should be presented, at a suitable opportunity, to dispose of the assets of the authority.

As foreshadowed in my reply to the hon. Member's question on 27 February, [Official Report, column 108], I am today arranging for a summary of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

I am also today writing to the chairman of the Market Tenants Association to inform him of this decision and will see that tenants' views are taken into account in framing detailed proposals.

The authority will be shortly opening negotiations with the tenants about new leases to replace those that expire in March 1991.

Horticultural Research

59. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restructuring of horticultural research he has achieved in the last six months.

Mr. Curry: The Department is working closely with the Department of Education and Science and the Agricultural and Food Research Council, in consultation with representatives of the horticulture industry, to set up a new unified organisation for horticultural research based on a reconstituted British Society for Horticultural Research. The new BSHR will be the principal contractor for horticultural research and development in the United Kingdom and will carry out the bulk of Government-funded horticultural research. We believe the new organisation will provide both Government and industry with a more efficient and effective R and D service while maintaining the highest scientific standards.

Poultry Health Regulations

60. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has recently received about the Poultry Health Regulations.

Mr. Maclean: I have received representations on various aspects of the salmonella control measures, including the cost of testing, the effect on rare breed flocks and the level of compensation paid when flocks are compulsorily slaughtered. There has been recognition of the steps which the Government have been able to take in response to these concerns. Representations have also been received on the European Commission proposal for a Council regulation laying down health rules for the production and placing on the market of fresh poultry meat to replace European Community directive 71/118. Most of the representations have expressed concern about the need for the on-farm production of poultry meat and for uneviserated poultry.

Stubble Burning

63. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had about his intention to end stubble burning.

Mr. Curry: There have been discussions with the National Farmers Union and the Country Landowners Association. These consultations, which are continuing, are focused on the scope of the limited exemptions foreseen in my right hon. Friend's statement of 30 November 1989 and on the strengthening of the National Farmers Union's code of practice in the period leading up to the proposed prohibition.

Food Safety

65. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the recommendations in the report of the committee on the microbiological safety of food.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 15 February, Official Report, columns 398-99.

Wheat and Bread

66. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends answering the question from the hon. Member for Leicestershire, North-West put down for answer on 18 January, asking for the comparative prices of wheat and bread over the last five years.

Mr. Curry: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 28 February 1990, Official Report, column 242.

Pesticides

67. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his review of pesticides.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 8 February, Official Report, column 728.

77. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Advisory Committee on Pesticides last met; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides last met on 25 January. The main items discussed were: requests for approval of three new pesticides; reviews of four existing approvals; a draft code of practice for the use of pesticides on farms and holdings and two survey reports on pesticides usage in Scotland.

Beef Exports

68. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the amount of beef being exported to western Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The amount of beef exported from the United Kingdom to western Europe[1] in 1989 was 111,998 tonnes.

[1] EC and EFTA countries, Malta, Cyprus and Gibraltar

Reconstituted Meat

69. Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking with regard to meat reconstituted with blood plasma gel.

Mr. Maclean: Should a company decide to use this technique for the preparation of meat products it would need to ensure that the product was safe and labelled in accordance with the Food Labelling Regulations 1984. This would apply equally to home-produced and imported products. In particular, those regulations require that food labels carry details of any process which the product has undergone where the omission of such detail would mislead the consumer, details of any ingredients used in the product which would include blood enzymes, and a name for the food which would distinguish it from any other foodstuff with which it might be confused.

Misleading labelling of food is an offence under the Food Act 1984. It is not for me to suggest particular forms of words for labels. A company would need to decide what description of this or any similar process would adequately explain to its intended customers the exact nature of the foodstuff. Trading standards officers are responsible for enforcing the law: I expect that they were already aware of the development of this process but my officials have drawn the matter to their attention.

The labelling rules apply equally to catering supplies as they do to retail sales. As part of its current labelling review I have already asked the Food Advisory Committee to look at the difficult matter of information provided to customers in restaurants, cafes or other catering outlets.

I was made aware only recently of the process that has been developed in the Netherlands but I have no indications that it produces a foodstuff which is unsafe.

The process has been developed by a very reputable Dutch institute and the data available so far to my Department do not indicate any need for us to enage in our own research.

It would be a commercial decision for a British company to choose to use this technique in the production of its meat products. I am not aware of any company that has so decided nor is it my understanding that any such products are currently being marketed in the United Kingdom, or in the Netherlands.

However, my Department is monitoring developments closely and I will take any further action that seems appropriate in the interests of either food safety or consumer protection.

National Farmers Union AGM

71. Mr. Michael Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on his recent visit to the annual general meeting of the National Farmers Union at Kensington town hall.

Mr. Gummer: I was very glad to have the opportunity to address the annual general meeting of the National Farmers Union. Copies of my speech are in the Library of the House. I underlined the vital role which farmers play in our national life: as an efficient and competitive industry, as the guarantors of our food supply and as the guardians of our countryside. I also made plain our determination to ensure that United Kingdom farmers have a fair deal in Europe, in particular through a substantial devaluation of the green pound.

Consumers Association

72. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Consumers Association to discuss food-related issues; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend last met the Consumers Association on 15 January 1990. They discussed a wide range of issues including the Food Safety Bill, food irradiation and the Department's consumer panel.

Milk Quota

75. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he will be seeking EC approval for in respect of the distribution of additional milk quota in 1990.

Mr. Gummer: My proposals were that quota should be allocated to producers who received awards from the dairy produce quotas tribunal which were scaled back and have not yet been fully implemented; to smaller producers; to producers in remote areas, principally the islands of Scotland and the Scilly Isles; and to new entrants. The Commission raised a number of points in connection with these proposals. With one exception, which concerns my proposal to loan quota to new entrants rather than grant it outright, all points of difficulty have now been satisfactorily resolved and I am awaiting formal Commission agreement. Regulations will then be laid before Parliament and the majority of the quota issued before the end of the current quota year.

Farmers' Unions

76. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met leaders of the farmers' unions; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: I meet leaders of the farmers' unions frequently to discuss various agricultural matters.

I met the presidents of the National Farmers Union, the Scottish National Farmers Union and the Ulster Farmers Union on 30 January to discuss the state of the agriculture industry and the European Community's farm price proposals.

Set-aside Scheme

81. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much land has been included in the set-aside scheme; and what is the cost to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. Curry: A total of 110,000 hectares of land has so far been set aside in the United Kingdom. The cost of payments in the current financial year is about £11 million.

Industrial Wastes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to require industrial wastes presently being dumped in the North sea to be stored on land until land-based disposal facilities have been developed.

Mr. Curry: No. As my right hon. Friend announced on 22 February, Official Report, column 899, it is our intention that, with two possible short-term exceptions, industrial wastes will not continue to be dumped at sea after 1992. In certain circumstances short-term storage may have a useful part to play in waste management, but in general it is neither practicable nor environmentally desirable for the industrial wastes which are currently dumped at sea.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many licences to dump chemical industrial wastes in the North sea will be terminated by 31 December 1992; and how many will continue to be in force:

(2) what percentage of chemical industrial wastes dumped in the North sea will be terminated by 31 December 1992; and what percentage will continue.

Mr. Curry: It is my intention that all licences to dispose of industrial wastes in the North sea covered by the 1987 North sea declaration will be terminated by 31 December 1992. For two of the wastes, however, involving 77 per cent. of the current total annual licensed tonnage, it might not be technically feasible to meet this deadline. I will extend the licences for these last two wastes into 1993 only if absolutely necessary on technical grounds and for the shortest possible part of that year.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the continued use of organophosphorous sheep dips.

Mr. Maclean: As I told the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 25 January Official Report, column 821 my Department will begin this year a review of ectoparasiticide product licences which will include licensed organophosphorous sheep dips.

Veterinary Surgeons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his Department's future plans for training veterinary surgeons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The arrangement of courses for those wishing to obtain veterinary degrees is a matter for the veterinary colleges. My Department ensures that the veterinary surgeons which it employs are properly trained for their duties. The action which the Government are taking in response to the Page committee's report on the review of veterinary manpower and education was announced in a reply given to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 31 January.

Poultry (Slaughter)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate what the total value of the birds compulsorily slaughtered under the provisions of the Zoonoses Order 1989 and the Animal Health Act 1981 would have been had they been sent to processors for use as cooked poultry meat.

Mr. Maclean: Estimates relating to this hypothetical situation are not available.

Mr. J. J. Cato

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the man hours taken by officials in his Department in their administrative, clerical and legal functions relating to Mr. J. J. Cato's application for a decommissioning grant and the subsequent legal actions and appeals.

Mr. Maclean: The information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total cost of his Department's legal expenses to date in the case of J. J. Cato v. Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Maclean: Payments of stationery costs and counsel's fees in the case brought by Mr. J. J. Cato were £6,058.

Spent Hens

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the typical sale price for a spent hen currently paid to an egg producer by a processor.

Mr. Curry: We estimate that the typical selling price for an end-of-lay hen is currently between 55p and 60p.

Fish Catches

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reasons he ascribes to the substantial drop in volume of fish catches off the Tyneside coast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The fall in landings in the first two months of 1990 at the main north-east coast ports compared with the same period in 1989 largely reflects the recent bad weather. During 1990 as a whole another factor will be that as North sea round fish stocks, in particular of cod and haddock, are lower total allowable catches in 1990 have been reduced to assist the recovery of such stocks.

Food Advisory Committee

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Food Advisory Committee last met; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: The independent Food Advisory Committee last met on 25 January 1990 when it discussed matters concerned with its review of food labelling; the use of the preservative thiabendazole; the presence of tin in canned foods and the second food surveillance group report on plasticisers levels in food contact materials in food. Subsequently it held a joint meeting with the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes to discuss matters of mutual interest.

North Sea Haddock

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are being made to reduce United Kingdom fishing for North sea haddock in 1990.

Mr. Curry: At its meeting last December, the EC Council of Fisheries Ministers and the Commission agreed that, because of the seriously depleted state of the North sea haddock stock, any member state with a quota exceeding 10 per cent. of the Community share of the stock should reduce its fishing for that stock in 1990 by 30 per cent. The United Kingdom's 1990 quota is 87 per cent. of the Community's share of the stock.

Following consultations with fishing industry organisations, we have decided that United Kingdom vessels over 10 m overall length which in 1989 landed more than 40 tonnes of North sea haddock and more than 10 per cent. of whose total landings in 1989 consisted of North sea haddock should either not fish in the North sea on more than 92 days during the remainder of this year or be limited, when fishing for demersal fish in the North sea, to using and carrying gear with 110 mm mesh and of specified conformation designed to ensure that it is substantially more selective than the 90 mm mesh nets normally permitted for demersal fisheries in the North sea.

Landings of North sea haddock by vessels not covered by these new arrangements will be subject to restrictions designed to avoid any increase in effort against this stock. Producer organisations (POs) with sectoral allocations of North sea haddock are also being asked to regulate their members' landings so that they do not take more than 60 per cent of their allocations by 1 July and no more than 85 per cent. by 1 October: fishing by the non sector will be regulated similarly.

To maximise the effectiveness of these arrangements, we are laying before Parliament a statutory instrument to extend licensing to fishing in the North sea for any species by United Kingdom vessels of over 10 m.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I believe that fishermen will accept that these controls are necessary in the longer-term interests of all those who rely on the North sea haddock fishery. The reduction in the 1990 total allowable catch (TAC) and quotas for this stock needs to be supplemented with reductions in effective effort in order to ensure that the intended gains from reducing the TAC are achieved. Without such action there would be a serious risk of a total collapse in the North sea haddock stock. The paramount importance of conserving our fish stocks was supported by both sides of the House in recent debates.

Compound Feedstuffs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he plans he has to require the manufacturers of compound feedingstuffs to show all raw materials used on the labelling of their products;

(2) what requirements control the labelling of the raw materials for compound feedingstuffs; and what substances are permitted under the generic descriptions oil, protein, fibre and ash.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The current Feedingstuffs Regulations 1988 permit manufacturers to give full declaration of raw material ingredients in compound feedingstuffs and farmers who want this information should seek it from their suppliers. A recent amendment to the EC directive on the marketing of mixed feeds will make it obligatory for all manufacturers to declare the materials used. Analytical declarations of protein, oil, fibre and ash are already required for the total feedingstuff regardless of the individual ingredients and provide indications of feeding value (protein), digestible energy content (oil and fibre) mineral or non-assimilable content (ash). Procedures for determining these parameters are laid down in the Feedingstuffs (Sampling and Analysis) Regulations 1982.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make representations to the examining boards to return the start of General Certificate of Secondary Education examinations to the end of May.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has asked for a meeting with the joint council for the General Certificate of Secondary Education to discuss this matter, among others.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations took place with him on the decision of the examining boards to bring forward to mid-May the start of the General Certificate of Secondary Education examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The General Certificate of Secondary Education examining groups, which are independent bodies and collectively set the timetable for examinations, have not so far held discussions with my right hon. Friend about this, though contacts have taken place at official level. My right hon. Friend has made clear to the joint council for the General Certificate of Secondary Education his concerns about the timetable and looks forward to an early discussion with them.

School Places (Bath)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of the High Court judgment in the case of Beechen Cliff school in Avon, he will now reconsider Avon county council's plans for the number of overall places in the Bath area.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Yes.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, under the terms of the model funding agreement for city technology colleges, he is precluded on termination of the agreement from requiring the repayment specified in paragraph 23(iv), so that the college continues to operate on a private fee-paying or any other basis with the characteristics set out in paragraph 4 of the model agreement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 54 to 59 of the model funding agreement which set out the course of action which the Secretary of State shall take in the event, inter alia, of the CTC/CCTA company not meeting the conditions and requirements of payment of grant to the CTC/CCTA by the Secretary of State. If, in these circumstances, the Secretary of State is not satisfied by responses sought and received from the CTC/CCTA company, paragraph 58 of the agreement provides that he shall give 12 months written notice of his termination of the agreement and that "He shall also give notice that the provisions of section 105(5) (of the Education Reform Act 1988) shall apply, and set out how the CTC/CCTA is to comply with them". Section 105(3) of the Education Reform Act provides that the conditions and the requirements in the agreement include that no charge is made for admission to the CTC/CCTA.

Pre-school Education

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will review the availability and quality of pre-school education in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Pre-school education in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. It is for local authorities in England to determine the most appropriate patterns of pre-school provision for their area. A committee of inquiry under my chairmanship is considering the quality of the educational experience offered to three and four-year-olds across various settings.

TRANSPORT

Medway (Dredging)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Medway Ports Authority sought his approval under sections 60 or 73 of the Port of London Authority Act before commissioning dredging and associated works in the Medway approach channel; on what date approval was given; and whether he imposed any conditions or restrictions relating to the deposit or laying down of dredgings and spoil.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Secretary of State's approval has not been sought to dredging in the Medway approach channel. I understand that the Port of London Authority granted a licence for such dredging to the Medway Ports Authority on 18 September 1989 under section 73 of the Port of London Authority Act 1968.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Medway Ports Authority sought his approval, under section 36 of the Medway Ports Authority Act 1975, before dumping dredgings in the area known as Lappel Bank in the Medway approach channel; on what date approval was given; and whether he imposed any conditions or restrictions.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Medway Ports Authority sought the Secretary of State's approval on 6 February 1990 under section 36(2) of the Medway Ports Authority Act 1973 to deposit 26,000 cu m of dredged spoil from within the port below the level of mean high water springs at Lappel Bank, Sheerness.

The authority had already sought the Secretary of State's approval on 5 July 1989 under section 34 of the Coast Protection Act 1949 to reclaim 120·34 acres of the Lappel Bank foreshore, using 2·6 million cu m of spoil dredged from the Medway approach channel.

The authority was advised on 22 September 1989 that there were no navigational objections to the proposed works. Approval under section 36(2) of the 1973 Act was granted to deposit material, as specified in the authority's application of 6 February, on 2 March without any conditions or restrictions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the importance of the Medway approach channel and Lappel Bank for wildlife and its fulfilment of the criteria for protection under the European Community Directive on the Conservation of Wild Birds.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. The responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Transport in relation to the works on these sites were limited to considering their effects on safety of navigation.

National Bus Company

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department received the draft report from the National Audit Office on the sale of the National Bus Company.

Mr. Portillo: The draft report on the sale of the National Bus Company was submitted to the accounting officer by the Comptroller and Auditor-General on 12 February 1990.

Speeding Traffic

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce further measures to curb speeding traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Atkins: As I stated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 5 March, Official Report, column 165, I hope to introduce the new road hump regulations to come into force before Easter. In addition, we shall shortly be consulting on proposals to facilitate the introduction of 20 mph speed-limited zones in residential areas.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list (a) for May 1989 and (b) to date the establishment for the (i) Hereford, (ii) South Yorkshire, (iii) Worcester and (iv) Humberside valuation and community charge tribunals; and if any changes are envisaged for the near future;

(2) if he will list for (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1987 the establishment for the (i) Humberside, (ii) South Yorkshire, (iii) Worcester and (iv) Hereford local valuation panel.

Mr. Chope: The establishments of the three valuation and community charge tribunals are as follows:

	Hereford and Worcester	South Yorkshire	Humberside
1980	6	5	3
1985	6	5	4
1987	6	4	4
May 1989	7	5	7
March 1990	7	5	7

The establishments of all valuation and community charge tribunals are to be kept under review in relation to the volume of appeals that they handle.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he made the Community Charge Transitional Relief Report (England) available in the Vote Office.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 7 March 1990]: The report was laid on 15 February and copies were placed in the Library. I understand that the Vote Office made the normal arrangements to obtain copies of the report and that 500 copies were made available on 17 February.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of capital allocations which have been issued to each class of local authority for the years 1981-82 to 1989-90 for (a) housing, (b) personal social services, (c) education, (d) transport and (e) other services.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today laid tables giving the information requested in the Library.

Blind and Deaf-blind People

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements his Department has made to inform the blind and the deaf-blind about the community charge.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today announced that the Department of the Environment is providing funding of £60,000 to enable the Royal National Institute for the Blind to produce Government information leaflets on the community charge in forms accessible to blind and partially sighted people.

Two key information leaflets will be produced on compact cassette tape and in braille and Moon writing. A further two leaflets will be produced, on tape only.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for Northern Ireland for each year since 1974-75 (i) total National Health Service expenditure, (ii) current expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (iii) capital expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (iv) expenditure on the family practitioner services, (v) expenditure on centrally funded National Health Service services, and (vi) expenditure on personal social services, giving each in (a) cash terms, (b) adjusted using the relevant pay and prices index and (c) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator; and if he will place in the Library details of the methods used to make these adjustments.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is contained in the tables.

Home Help Service

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the annual expenditure incurred by the Eastern health and social services board is accounted for by the home help service.

Mr. Needham: The answer is 2·86 per cent. of the revenue expenditure in the year ended 31 March 1989.

Family Benefits

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many families in Northern Ireland were in receipt of (a) family credit and (b) income support in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham: The available information is as follows:

	1987	1988	1989
(a) family credit	[1]—	[2]14,507	[3]14,909
(b) income support [4]	[5]56,982	[6]51,500	n.y.a.

[1] Family credit was introduced in April 1988.
[2] As at December 1988.
[3] As at December 1989.
[4] Source: 5 per cent. sample.
[5] As at May 1987.
[6] As at May 1988.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of families in Northern Ireland who have claimed family credit; what estimate he has as to what proportion of those eligible this represents; and what proposals he has for improving take-up.

Mr. Needham: The number of families receiving family credit at 21 February 1990 was 14,699. No reliable estimate of the eligible family credit population in Northern Ireland is available, but the position on take-up is being monitored and further publicity to improve it will be arranged as necessary.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of time taken to process claims for family credit in Northern Ireland local social security offices.

Mr. Needham: Family credit is administered centrally by family credit branch, DHSS, and the average time taken to process claims is 14 days for claims by employed persons and 23 days for claims by self-employed persons.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of his Department's consultation papers, "Metrication: Sales of Spirits on Licensed Premises", were sent out last September; to whom were they sent; how many responses he received; and if he will make a statement.

Rail Sleeper Services

Mr. Roy Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representation he has made to BR about the London-Stranraer overnight sleeper service.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have told British Rail of the adverse reaction in Northern Ireland to the decision. I understand that British Rail plans to provide a connecting service between Stranraer and the Glasgow to London sleeper trains.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken, and what action he intends taking, to implement the recommendations within his area of responsibility of the European Commission's childcare network report "Caring for Children—Services and Policies for Childcare and Equal Opportunities in the United Kingdom."

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The report was prepared by the European Community but no proposals have yet been developed. The Government believe that policy on child care is a matter for member states. The United Kingdom policy is that it is for families themselves to determine how their children are to be brought up and how parents who wish to do so can best combine paid work and family responsibilities. The Government through the Department of Health and Social Services and the ministerial group on women's issues have encouraged the development of a range of high quality child care options for both parents and employers in Northern Ireland.

Social Security

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 342-43, and the letter of 12 February, concerning the real terms increase in social security expenditure, what information on the percentage of the real terms increase attributable to an increase in the number of beneficiaries is available to him without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The estimated average numbers of claimants receiving the main social security benefits during the years in question rose or are expected to rise as follows:

	per cent.
1978-79	0·9
1979-80	−1·7
1980-81	4·8
1981-82	4·3
1982-83	2·1
1983-84	7·6
1984-85	2·6
1985-86	−0·2
1986-87	1·7
1987-88	1·8
1988-89	−3·4
1989-90	1·9
1990-91	1·8
1991-92	1·5
1992-93	1·5

Cancer

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish statistical information, in table form, of confirmed incidences of cancer/leukaemia in each constituency in Northern Ireland by age group (a) up to five years, (b) five to 10 years, (c) 10 to 15 years, (d) 15 to 20 years and (e) over 20 years, respectively.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is given in the table:

Notification of leukaemia for Northern Ireland 1988

Notes:
1. 1988 is the latest year for which information is available.
2. The information given includes all types of leukaemia.

Source: Northern Ireland cancer registration scheme

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to identify the cause of cancer/leukaemia in children in Northern Ireland and to protect children where possible from risk of exposure to cancer/leukaemia stimulating factors.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 March 1990]: An investigation by an independent committee into patterns of disease with a possible association with radiation was published in 1989. It found no evidence of higher incidence or increased mortality from leukaemia in coastal compared with inland areas.

Northern Ireland is now involved with other parts of the United Kingdom in epidemiological research on leukaemia. Environmental assessment of ionising radiation is carried out to ensure that the community is not exposed to excess levels.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the incidence of cancer/leukaemia confirmed in children in (a) East Antrim, (b) Northern Ireland and (c) United Kingdom, respectively.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is given in the table:

Notification of leukaemia for Children (0-14 years) in Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom 1984

Northern Ireland	16
United Kingdom	414

Notes:

1. 1984 is the latest year for which it is possible to produce a United Kingdom figure.
2. The information given includes all types of leukaemia.

Waiting Lists

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the current length of waiting lists at each acute hospital in Northern Ireland; and what were the comparable figures in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The tables show for each acute hospital in Northern Ireland the total number of inpatients on waiting lists at 30 September and by time spent on list for 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Information on outpatient waiting lists has not been collected centrally since the introduction of Korner returns on 1 April 1988. Information relating to outpatient lists for earlier years could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

European Community Regional Fund

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the sums given to Northern Ireland by the European Economic Community regional fund in each calendar or financial year since the United Kingdom became a recipient of fund moneys; and what percentage of total Government expenditure this represented in Northern Ireland in each calendar or financial year.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The European regional development fund was established after the United Kingdom's accession to the Community and the first grants were received in 1975-76. Figures for Northern Ireland's receipts, and the percentage they represented of public expenditure in the Northern Ireland block are as follows:

European regional development fund receipts and proportion of Northern Ireland block

Financial year	Total £ million	per cent.
1975-76	2·9	0·2
1976-77	7·2	0·4
1977-78	6·4	0·4
1978-79	4·0	0·2
1979-80	16·0	0·6
1980-81	21·0	0·7
1981-82	16·4	0·5
1982-83	18·0	0·5
1983-84	13·5	0·4
1984-85	16·9	0·4
1985-86	18·4	0·4
1986-87	23·2	0·5
1987-88	45·9	1·0
1988-89	46·7	0·9
Total	[1]256·5	0·6

[1] The figures show total European regional development fund receipts brought to account in Northern Ireland. It should be noted that awards totalling £10·5 million were decommitted by the European Commission on failed industrial projects.

Western Health and Social Services Board

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the reason for the Western health and social services board recently requesting each employee to specify which primary school they had attended; what was the percentage response to the first request; and how many requests were necessary before all employees had answered the question to the satisfaction of management.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 February 1990]: The Western health and social services board requested its employees to specify the primary schools that they attended for the purpose of monitoring the religious composition of its work force.

Forty-five per cent. of staff (excluding home helps) responded to the first request; a further 35 per cent. responded to two subsequent requests and a search of personnel files was carried out on the remaining 20 per cent. Fifty two per cent. of home helps responded to the first request and a search of personnel files was carried out on the remaining 48 per cent.

Security Forces (Shooting)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what circumstances the security forces in Northern Ireland are entitled to shoot on sight.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 12 February 1990]: The law provides, under section 3(1) of the Criminal Law (Northern Ireland) Act 1967, that any person may use such force as is reasonable in the circumstances in the prevention of crime, or in effecting or assisting in the lawful arrest of offenders or suspected offenders. Members of the police and Army are subject to the law in the same way as other citizens. It is ultimately a matter for the courts to decide in individual cases that come before them what is "reasonable" in the particular circumstances of that case.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about procedures for medically examining claimants for mobility allowance, attendance allowance and severe disablement allowance; whether claimants are required to accept examination by a doctor nominated by his Department; and what consideration has been given to allowing the claimant to nominate a doctor or to use his own doctor for such purposes.

Mr. Scott: Mobility allowance and attendance allowance claimants may refuse examination by a doctor nominated by the Department if they so wish. Medical evidence is then obtained, with the claimant's permission, from the general practitioner or from a hospital, where relevant. However, reports from the doctors trained by the Department tend to be more thorough and are more likely to provide the type of information required to decide the claim. No claim can be decided in the absence of medical evidence. In SDA cases there are some instances in which no medical examination is required if there is already sufficient medical evidence for a favourable decision to be made. Usually the claimant is required to attend examination by an adjudicating medical authority consisting of one or two doctors. This is a statutory authority and only doctors who have been formally appointed by the Secretary of State may serve on it. To maintain impartiality a doctor may not serve as an adjudicating medical authority or a member of such an authority considering any case if he has regularly attended the claimant or has provided a report. For these reasons, the claimant may not nominate a doctor or use his own doctor for the purpose, even if the doctor is on the panel of a medical boarding centre.

The information provided applies to Great Britain, although a similar scheme operates in Northern Ireland. Requests for information concerning the Northern Ireland scheme should be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is issued by his Department as to notice given to claimants that they are to be examined by a doctor in connection with claims for social security benefits; and what procedures are adopted for appointing the examining doctor in each area.

Mr. Scott: Claimants for attendance allowance and mobility allowance are contacted by the doctor who will be conducting the examination in order to arrange a time. Guidance both verbally and in guidance notes is provided that the doctor should contact the claimant, preferably in writing, giving the claimant seven days' notice where possible of the proposed date and time. In severe disablement allowance cases lay staff provide 10 days' notice of examination.

Examining medical practitioners are appointed by the senior medical officer of the region. They are usually recruited from among general practitioners within the locality who already have expertise in conducting medical examinations. They are given guidance by the senior medical officer or a regional office medical officer on the backgrounds of, and conditions for the awards for attendance allowance and mobility allowance. The performance of the examining medical practitioners is closely monitored by the senior medical officer to identify any further need for guidance for training. The form such monitoring takes is a matter for the senior medical officer.

The information provided applies to Great Britain, although a similar scheme operates in Northern Ireland. Requests for information concerning the Northern Ireland scheme should be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what tests and criteria are used by physicians when assessing entitlement to (a) mobility allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) severe disablement allowance; and what consideration is given to factors affecting people with AIDS who may not be experiencing obvious symptoms.

Mr. Scott: In attendance allowance the doctors who examine claimants and conduct clinical tests are not the same as the doctors who assess entitlement. The tests carried out by examining doctors are those that they consider necessary in order to complete the examining forms. This also applies in severe disablement allowance although claimants for this benefit are both examined and assessed by an adjudicating medical authority consisting of one or two doctors. The criteria used by doctors assessing entitlement are set out in the appropriate handbooks. These are the handbooks for delegated medical practitioners and the severe disablement allowance handbook for adjudicating medical authorities. The handbooks are available in the Library.

For mobility allowance, the clinical tests are conducted by doctors but the assessment of entitlement is carried out by adjudication officers who may seek the advice of full-time medical officers when necessary.

People with AIDS are treated as all other members of the community in deciding their entitlement to these benefits. The only special treatment within the social security system for people with AIDS is the provision for any payments made to haemophiliacs who are infected with AIDS virus or to their families out of the Macfarlane Trust or the Macfarlane (Special Payments) Trust to be completely disregarded for the purposes of the income-related benefits.

The information provided applies to Great Britain, although a similar scheme operates in Northern Ireland. Requests for information concerning the Northern Ireland scheme should be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the total amount paid in (a) supplementary benefit in 1980 and (b) income support in 1989 to the residents of private residential care homes, by local authority area and by region;

(2) what was the total amount paid in (a) supplementary benefit in 1980 and (b) income support in 1989 to the residents of private nursing homes, by district health authority area and by region.

Mr. Scott: Information in the form requested is not available.

Social Fund

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the position of a claimant paying off a social fund loan at the rate of 5 per cent., 10 per cent., or 15 per cent. of income support in respect of an unpaid community charge.

Mr. Scott: Social fund loans are not available for community charge debts which may be recovered from income support at a rate of £1·85 per week for a single person and £2·90 for a couple from April 1990. This action may be taken only after a court order has been obtained by a local authority.

Where repayments of social fund loans are being made from income support when this action is taken, officials are able to reconsider the rate of repayment of the social fund loan.

WALES

Earnings

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish tables showing the proportion of (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all full-time employees earning less than (a) £160, (b) £150, (c) £170, (d) £120 and (e) £110 for (1) men, (2) women and (3) all full-time employees, excluding overtime pay, in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Due to the extensive amount of information requested, I shall write to the hon. Lady.

School Leavers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to secure a reduction in the number of pupils in Wales who leave school without any qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The aim of the GCSE examination and of our education reforms, including the national curriculum, is to raise education standards and thereby encourage 16-year-olds to take advantage of the various opportunities available for further study.

War Veterans

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the conditions and facilities for war veterans at Rookwood hospital, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The conditions and facilities provided for war veterans at Rookwood hospital are matters for South Glamorgan health authority which has the direct management responsibility for services at the hospital. If the hon. and learned Gentleman has a particular issue with which he is concerned he may like to contact the health authority's general manager or write to me.

Expenditure

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to publish a separate commentary on planned expenditure within his responsibility between 1990-91 and 1992-93.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am pleased to announce that the 1990 Welsh Office commentary is being published today. The commentary, which has been produced bilingually, complements and expands upon the information published in the Wales chapter of the 1990 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1016) at the end of January. It is a valuable source document for anyone with an interest in the Government's expenditure plans for Wales.

I have arranged for copies of the commentary to be made available through the Vote Office.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Leather Tariffs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that after March 1991 Japanese tariffs on leather are reduced to not more than 10 per cent. and their quota system abolished.

Mr. Redwood: The European Community is pressing Japan, directly and through the GATT Uruguay round negotiations, to improve access for our exporters of leather goods when the present EC-Japan agreement expires in 1991. We fully support the Community and have drawn the particular concerns of the British industry to the attention of the European Commission.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest estimate of the cost of supporting the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My hon. Friend will find detailed information about the performance of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's credit insurance activities, which are operated on a trading basis, in the Export Credits Guarantee Department's annual report and trading accounts for 1988-89. Information about the costs of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's public expenditure programmes is contained in chapter 4 of the Government's expenditure plans 1990-91 to 1992-93 (Cm. 1004).

Supply Estimates provision for the net cash costs of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's operations in 1989-90 is as follows:

Class V, vote 5 ECGD Administration £42·7 million
Class V, vote 6 ECGD Trading Operations £473·8 million
Class V, vote 7 ECGD Export Finance Assistance £349·9 million

The figures for votes 6 and 7 reflect revised provision sought in the spring supplementary estimates presented to the House on 13 February.

Euroflame Holdings plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors underlay his decisions on making available his Department's report on Euroflame (a) to Parliament and (b) to certain accountancy firms and professional accountancy organisations.

Mr. Redwood: I have nothing to add to my letters of 22 September, 1 November and 30 January 1990 to the hon. Member.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the accountancy firm of Mr. D. Anton has been criticised by any Department of Trade and Industry inspector or the joint disciplinary scheme.

Mr. Redwood: Not so far as I am aware.

Business Development

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the take-up in Lancashire of his various programmes of assistance to encourage business development.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information provided details of the take-up in Lancashire of current DTI programmes of assistance.

All figures given are from the date in brackets to the end of January 1990:

Enterprise Initiative (January 1988): 1,031 business reviews have been carried out. Of these, 857 have been referred for consultancy advice; 333 of these projects have been completed.

Regional selective assistance (November 1984): in the Blackburn Accrington and Rossendale travel-to-work area and the West Lancashire part of the Liverpool travel-to-work area, 248 offers have been made totalling £27,057,463.

Small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) (October 1988): two offers have been made totalling £74,350.

Zimbabwe (Tobacco Industry)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the contribution made to the gross national product of Zimbabwe by that country's tobacco industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: In 1986 the value of tobacco sold to/through the marketing authorities totalled 365 million Zimbabwe dollars and represented 5·2 per cent. of the GNP at factor cost. In 1988 tobacco sales were valued at 486 million Zimbabwe dollars and represented 5·9 per cent. of the GDP at factor cost. (Source: March 1989 Quarterly Digest of Statistics—CSO HARARE).

Electrical Appliances

Mr. Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward regulations to require all domestic electrical appliances to be fitted with a plug before sale to the public.

Mr. Ridley: No. The question of the fitment of plugs to domestic appliances before sale is one for appliance manufacturers or retailers to decide in the light of consumer demand.

Batteries

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to manufacturers and retailers about the lead content of batteries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Most lead-containing batteries are covered by the scope of a draft EC directive which aims to reduce the amounts of that metal going in spent batteries to landfill or incineration for disposal. Negotiations on the draft directive have recently begun in Brussels. Officials in my Department have been in regular contact with representatives of the lead and battery industries over the past months.

Buy British Campaign

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the Buy British campaign.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no such campaign. A number of private sector organisations draw attention to the advantages of buying United Kingdom goods and services when they are competitive in quality, price and delivery.

Industry Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Minister from his Department will attend the EEC Industry Council on 13 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 8 March 1990]: I shall attend the Industry Council on 13 March on behalf of the United Kingdom.

Trade with Japan

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the achievements and objectives of Her Majesty's Government's policy on trade with Japan.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 7 March 1990]: The Government have three main trade policy objectives with Japan.

The first is to persuade the Japanese authorities to implement structural reforms to sustain the shift in the balance of their economy from export-led growth to domestic demand-led growth. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, during her visit to Japan last year, emphasised the need for action in this area.

The second is to secure the removal of the remaining barriers to market access. Few such barriers remain. Where they do, the Government campaign vigorously for their removal through the appropriate channels: bilaterally, through the European Community and through the GATT.

The Government's approach has achieved significant results. For example, last April the Japanese Government removed discriminatory taxation on imported whisky, with the result that the value of exports of Scotch whisky to Japan (which is the industry's third largest market) has risen by almost 90 per cent. since liberalisation. Also, EC-Japan discussions have led to the removal of barriers to exports of EC motor vehicles to Japan; last year, unit sales of United Kingdom car exports to Japan grew by 48 per cent.

The Government's third objective is to ensure that the British business community is fully aware of the greatly increased opportunities in Japan, and of the strategic importance of the Japanese market. My Department's Opportunity Japan campaign was launched in 1988 to address this need. A target was set of doubling British exports to Japan in three years. The determined efforts of British exporters mean that we are well on the way to doing so: last year United Kingdom exports of goods to Japan increased by £525 million to £2·3 billion, an increase of 30·1 per cent. over 1988.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board; and what will be discussed.

Mr. Redwood: On 13 March I expect to attend a meeting with United States and Japanese regulators on financial services issues at which the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board will be present. Apart from this, no meeting is currently scheduled between the chairman and either my right hon. Friend or myself.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hepatitis B

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners and prison officers have been vaccinated against hepatitis B by prison medical officers in each year since 1984.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners have been diagnosed as infected with the hepatitis B virus while serving a prison sentence or detained in a remand centre;

(2) what information he has as to the number of prisoners who have contacted the hepatitis B virus while serving a prison sentence or detained in a remand centre.

Mr. Mellor: Information about the number of identified cases of hepatitis B infection reported by prison medical officers was given on 2 March in reply to an earlier question by the hon. Member at column 350. Cases in which the infection was thought to have been acquired while the prisoner was in custody are not separately recorded.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the figures for the rate of infection by hepatitis B for (a) prisoners and (b) the general population.

Mr. Mellor: The aggregate of identified acute and chronic (carrier) cases reported by prison medical officers in England and Wales for the year ended 31 March 1989 (the last year for which information is available) was 347. Some of the cases identified may have been counted more than once. This figure represents 0·7 per cent. of the average daily prison population and 0·3 per cent. of the prisoners received during the year.

Information relating to the general population is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines issued by the director of prison medical services concerning vaccination policy against hepatitis B for inmates of prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The guidelines were issued on 22 August 1989 in a letter to prison medical officers. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if inmates of long-term custodial institutions are defined as belonging to a high-risk behaviour group; and how many have been vaccinated against hepatitis B since 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The director of prison medical services has defined the groups who are at high risk of hepatitis B infection as parenteral drug misusers and individuals who frequently change sexual partners. Prison medical officers have been advised to consider offering vaccination to any prisoner identified as belonging to one of these groups who is likely to remain in the prison system long enough to take advantage of the full course of three injections over six months. The offer is not restricted to prisoners in particular types of establishment. The number of vaccinated is not centrally recorded.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures are used in the medical inquiry and examination of prisoners at the reception stages to determine if a prisoner is infected by hepatitis B or is at risk of contracting the disease.

Mr. Mellor: All prisoners on first reception are asked to complete a form which includes questions designed to establish among other things whether they have consulted their doctor recently; are receiving any form of treatment; have ever had a serious illness (hepatitis is given as an example) or been in hospital; or have ever taken drugs. This information is available to the medical officer carrying out the reception medical examination. The procedure followed in the examination is a matter for clinical discretion.

Prison Officers (Assaults)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the figures for the number of assaults on prison officers within Her Majesty's prisons and remand centres, which resulted in injuries sustained by officers or prisoners together with a breakdown of type of injury and their number.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is about prisoners found guilty on adjudication of gross personal violence to a prison officer or of assault or attempted assault on a prison officer. Figures for 1988 were published in table 14 of Statistics of Offences Against Prison Discipline and Punishment, England and Wales 1988 (Cm 929). Data for earlier years appear in chapter 9 of Prison Statistics England and Wales. Copies of both publications are held in the Library.

Details of injuries are not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Concessionary Television Licences

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to correspondence from the hon. Member for Harborough, together with Harborough district council, relating to the intended removal of sheltered residents at Hill court, Bushby, Leicestershire from the concessionary television licence scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have now seen copies of the correspondence and confirm that the Hill court scheme cannot qualify for the concession under the 1988 regulations. The fact that the scheme and adjoining doctor's surgery were built as one structure means the scheme fails to satisfy the common and exclusive boundary criterion.

However, residents who had the concession before the change in the regulations in May 1988 will continue to benefit from it under the preserved rights provision of the 1988 regulations.

Chief Inspector of Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the report of the chief inspector of prisons.

Mr. Mellor: No. I have nothing to add to the commentary on the 1988 report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, placed in the Library on 25 July 1989.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, how many animals were used to test cosmetics and toiletries, the types of animals used and how many died during the course of the test.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of experiments or procedures involving each type of animal is published in table 2 (cosmetics and toiletries) of the annual "Statistics of Experiments on Living Animals, Great Britain" for the years 1979-86 inclusive (Cmnd. 8069, 8301, 8657, 8986, 9311, 9574, 9839, and Cm. 187) and table 3 of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain" for the years 1987-88 inclusive (Cm. 515 and 743). Copies of all these publications are in the Library.

Forensic Pathology

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of the responses that he received to the proposals in the report of the working party on forensic pathology; together with the date that each of those responses was received by his Department.

Homosexual Acts

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in 1988 how many men aged between 16 and 21 years were convicted for consenting homosexual acts with other males in England and Wales; and, in the cases of those convicted and receiving custodial sentences, what were the durations of those sentences in each individual case.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 5 March 1990]: Information is not available centrally on the number of males of 16 or over but under 21 who are convicted for the offences of buggery and attempted buggery with another male with his consent. In England and Wales in 1988 68 males of 16 or over but under 21 were convicted for an act of gross indecency with another male, of whom none received a custodial sentence.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has no plans to do so.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 March 1990]: Information is given in the table.

VAT

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of reducing the value added tax on fitting catalytic converters to (a) zero, (b) 5 per cent. and (c) 10 per cent. on the assumption that the number of catalytic converters fitted (i) stayed at the current rate, (ii) increased by 3 per cent., (iii) increased by 5 per cent. and (iv) increased by 10 per cent.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 8 March 1990]: Information on which to base an estimate is not available.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 8 March 1990]: Information on which to base an estimate is not available.

DEFENCE

Computer Hacking

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many NATO military databases were infiltrated by computer hacking by the three West Germans convicted on 15 February in West Germany of selling the information they obtained to a foreign power; and if he will list each such database located in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is responsible only for the security of the United Kingdom military database. I am not aware of any evidence that the three West Germans convicted by a West German court on 15 February 1990 breached the security of a United Kingdom database.

ICI War Materials Factory

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who currently holds the employment records of those employed by the Ministry of Supply, between 1942 and 1946, at the ICI war materials factory sited at Springfields, Solwick near Preston.

Mr. Neubert: The files of certain former employees of the Ministry of Supply are held in confidence, among other personal records, in Ministry of Defence archives. They are stored by date of birth and not by work areas. Without further details, I cannot confirm whether they include any personnel from the ICI site at Springfields.

Land Forces Pension Scheme

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the considerations behind the requirement on single people to contribute towards a widow's pension under the United Kingdom land forces pension scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Superannuation benefits for eligible personnel of Her Majesty's armed forces are provided through the armed forces pension scheme. That scheme, which includes pension provision for the widows or widowers of deceased members, is non-contributory. The cost of benefits is met from funds allocated to the appropriate defence vote. However, the armed forces pay review body, in determining recommended rates of pay for the armed forces, makes an adjustment which takes into account differences in pension arrangements between those for the armed forces and those of comparator organisations.

Falkland Islands (Forces Deployment)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he proposes to make changes in the composition of the land and sea and air forces presently deployed for the protection of the Falkland Islands in the light of the resumption of diplomatic relations with Argentina.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I welcome the resumption of diplomatic relations with Argentina and the reciprocal consultation system that has been agreed for military movements in the south Atlantic. This agreement does not affect force levels, but will enable us to lift the Falkland Islands protection zone from the end of this month. Force levels are, however, kept under review to ensure that we continue to provide appropriate forces to maintain our commitment to the defence of the Falkland Islands.

HEALTH

Children (Illegal Employment)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is collected on numbers of illegally employed children in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of children illegally employed in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what costs are to be levied on local health authorities towards the cost of Army and police services during the ambulance dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The additional cost of military and police assistance incurred by health authorities during the ambulance dispute are still being assessed. The cost of all non-military assistance is being met by the various health authorities which have contracted for those services and which have been responsible for negotiating locally the terms of such contracts. The cost of military assistance, which stem partly from the training and general preparation needed to achieve a state of readiness across the country, is being apportioned among regional health authorities in line with their share of main revenue allocations.

Food Poisoning

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning in 1989 were associated with the consumption of eggs; and in how many of those the vehicle of infection was suspected or known to have been home-made mayonnaise.

Mr. Freeman: Most cases of food poisoning are sporadic and cannot be linked to a particular food vehicle with any confidence. In 1989, salmonella was the causative organism of 42 outbreaks (involving 549 people) in which eggs, or egg-containing foods, were the suspected vehicle of infection. A further five outbreaks were due to Bacillus cereus. In four of these egg was a component of egg fried rice, and since B. cereus is particularly associated with rice it is likely that rice was the source. In the fifth an omelette was reported as the vehicle; one of the constituents other than the egg may have been the source. In three of the 42 egg-associated outbreaks (involving 96 people) due to salmonella, the food suspected was mayonnaise made from fresh shell eggs.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outbreaks of food poisoning have been associated with eggs in each of the last five years which involved mayonnaise, where human sources of contamination have been implicated.

Mr. Freeman: In no outbreak reported to (or investigated by) the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre in the last five years (1985-89 inclusive) in which mayonnaise was suspected has a human source of contamination been implicated.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outbreaks of food poisoning have been associated with eggs in each of the last five years where the causative organism was not salmonella.

Mr. Freeman: Eggs or egg-containing foods were the suspected vehicle of infection in 10 outbreaks due to organisms other than salmonella in the last five years (1985-89 inclusive). Five of these outbreaks occurred in 1989 and, as described in my previous answer today, in four of these egg fried rice was suspected, with rice the probable source of the infection. In the fifth, an omelette was the vehicle.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any evidence of any cases of food poisoning being caused by the consumption of pasteurised liquid egg within the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: In no outbreak reported to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre in the last five years (1985-89 inclusive) has pasteurised liquid egg been suspected as the vehicle of infection.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take in respect of the Exeter public health laboratory report to the effect that eggs when fresh are unlikely to constitute a significant potential health hazard.

Mr. Freeman: Research carried out by the Exeter public health laboratory showed that eggs laid by two infected flocks were intermittently infected with less than 10 organisms of S. enteritidis phage type 4 per egg at point of lay. However, a substantial number of outbreaks of human salmonellosis where the source of infection was identified have been caused by eggs. In the examination of shell eggs, the numbers of salmonellas are not routinely estimated. This is because the presence of even small numbers is regarded as a potential health hazard. During limited special investigations, two shell eggs containing many hundreds of salmonellas have been found. Research continues to investigate the factors which govern the multiplication of salmonella in shell eggs.

Meanwhile, the chief medical officer continues to advise the public not to eat raw eggs or uncooked foods made with them, and for vulnerable people to consume only eggs which have been cooked until the white and yolk are solid.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the reasons why the number of laboratory-confirmed cases of food poisoning reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre for the first six weeks of the year are at a record level.

Mr. Freeman: Fluctuations in single weekly reports of salmonella isolates to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre are not a guide to long-term trends. Any weekly reporting system will inevitably be subject to short-term anomalies. This occurred during the postal strike of 1988, and was also the case for weeks 2 and 3 of this year when delayed reporting and a backlog of data entry gave rise to an artificial increase. The apparent increase in reports for this year over last is likely to decline as the anomalous weeks 2 and 3 contribute a smaller proportion of the total.

It is to permit analysis of trends that the public health laboratory service and the state veterinary service has introduced recently the quarterly publication "Update on Salmonella Infection". The figures published in this for 1986-89 indicate a recent levelling-off in the incidence of Salmonella enteritidis phage type 4 infections, which account for the greatest number of all human salmonella infections. The volume of laboratory work undertaken by the PHLS division of enteric pathogens for the beginning of this year confirms this trend.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the risk to health from meat birds which have been infected with salmonella enteritidis PT4 being sold to domestic consumers where they might be undercooked, recontaminated after cooking or, in their raw state, provide a source of contamination which might, directly or indirectly, contaminate other foods.

Mr. Freeman: It is well established through microbiological surveys that poultry are frequently contaminated with salmonella. Consumers are well aware of the need for good hygienic handling of poultry meat in the kitchen and of the need for thorough cooking. The current wide circulation of the Government's "Food Safety" leaflet has reinforced these needs.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has issued any specific guidance to caterers for the production of home-made mayonnaise, so as to prevent the multiplication of salmonella or other organisms introduced into the mix by whatever means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: On 26 August 1988 caterers were first advised to use pasteurised egg for uncooked egg dishes since such commercially produced products, manufactured with pasteurised egg, had not been implicated as a source of infection. This was reiterated on 21 November and again by the Chief Medical Officer on 5 December 1988. This advice endorsed the egg industry's own code of practice on the hygienic handling and use of eggs.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has assessed the risk to health from eating poultry meat derived from hens which have been infected with salmonella enteritidis PT4, after the hens have been cooked for three hours at 97 deg C in industrial cooking equipment.

Mr. Freeman: Salmonella enteritidis PT4 can be destroyed by appropriate heat treatment.

North West RHA

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much National Health Service waiting lists have changed between 1979 and 1989 in (a) the North West regional health authority and (b) the Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley district health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table.

In-patient waiting list, North Western and Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley health authorities, 31 March 1979 and 31 March 1989

	1979	1989[1]	Per cent. change
North Western	77,368	67,228	−13·1
Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley	5,512	3,761	−31·8

[1] Less self deferred cases.
Source: 1979 SBH203 return—1989 KH07, KH07a returns.

We are pleased to see that both region and district have considerably fewer patients waiting than in 1979. The North Western region allocated nearly £300,000 to Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley health authority from the waiting list fund over the last three years. The district has also been allocated a new fully funded consultant urologist post from the 100 new consultant posts announced in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Day Care

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional resources are being made available to local authorities to enable them to implement the day care provisions of the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Provision for implementation of the Children Act 1989 in October 1991 will be included in the Government's expenditure plans for 1991-92, to be announced later this year.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase the security of babies and children in hospital by introducing electronic tagging.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Local health authorities determine their own security arrangements.

Family Practitioner Services

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to change the family practitioner services complaints' procedures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government announced their intention to simplify and streamline the complaints procedures in its White Paper, "Promoting Better Health", which was published in 1987.

We consulted widely with the professions, FPCs and consumer groups about the proposed changes.

Regulations are to be laid today which will bring into effect the changes on 2 April 1990. These new regulations will make it easier for patients to file a complaint and will improve the arrangements for ensuring the complaints are fairly and properly resolved.

The changes will allow some people to make oral complaints to FPCs rather than written ones and will also extend the time limit for filing a complaint from eight to 13 weeks.

In future FPCs will be able to decide the outcome of some cases without reference to the Secretary of State. They will also be required to operate an informal conciliation procedure for dealing with complaints against family practitioners.

These changes are a first step which will help patients, including those from ethnic minorities who may feel intimidated by an unfamiliar language and bureaucracy, to lodge a complaint should they feel that their treatment has been unsatisfactory.

The next step, which was also outlined in "Promoting Better Health", is to write the regulations in simpler and plainer language. We hope to achieve this early next year.

Clinical Research Centre, Northwick Park

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the implications for the local health service will be taken into account in the consideration of the Medical Research Council's proposal to close the clinical research centre at Northwick Park.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Medical Research Council (MRC), with the support of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, has agreed that resources invested currently in the clinical research centre (CRC) at Northwick Park should be reinvested in other centres. The MRC and North West Thames and Harrow health authorities have agreed to join a steering group, chaired by my Department, which will keep under review the implications for the local health service with the following terms of reference.

Terms of reference

Provided that satisfactory progress can be made on the issues to be addressed by the Steering Group listed below, the aim is to move towards the closure of the clinical research centre (CRC) and dispersal of its work by December 1994.

The steering group will accordingly oversee the action being taken by the research and health authorities to achieve a withdrawal from the clinical research centre (CRC) facilities at Northwick Park hospital. They will report periodically to Ministers and the chief executive on progress being made to secure —an orderly withdrawal;

—minimum disruption of NHS service;
—the effective continued use of the CRC buildings and ancillary facilities; and —compatibility with national and local service and research strategies.

The steering group would make its first report to Ministers and the chief executive by spring 1990, and aim to make a further report by autumn 1990.

Health Authority Chairmen

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now announce details of the appointment and reappointment of chairmen of district health authorities and of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals from 1 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today placed in the Library a list of the appointments made with effect from 1 April 1990.

Five district chairmen's appointments are still under consideration and announcements on these will be made shortly.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private nursing homes were registered in 1980 and in 1989, by district health authority area and by region.

Mr. Freeman: In 1982, the first year for which the information was collected centrally, there were 1,214 private nursing homes registered in England. At 31 March 1988, the latest date for which this information is held, the number is 2,821. Summarised booklets giving information including the number of registered homes in each region and district health authority for each year from 1982 to 1987-88 have been routinely placed in the Library.

Residential Care

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private residential care homes were registered in 1980 and in 1989 by local authority area.

Mr. Freeman: Information for 1980 and 1988 is in the table; information is not yet available for 31 March 1989.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health after what period of time a person living in a particular local authority area in private residential care becomes the financial responsibility of that authority should they wish to enter residential care directly provided by a different local authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities have a duty to provide services only for people ordinarily resident in their areas. Ordinary residence is decided on the facts of the case, not on any qualifying period and is normally the place where the person has chosen to make his abode.

However, if someone enters a residential care home under arrangements made between a local authority and the home they remain ordinarily resident in the area of the authority making those arrangements whether the home is in that area or not.

Erith and District Hospital

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the development of Erith and district hospital.

Mr. Freeman: Since the previous reply to my hon. Friend on 25 July 1989 at column 672, one letter has been received from him and one from Bexley community health council.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to issue guidelines to parents on the use of cot mattresses as part of his Department's strategy to reduce the number of cot deaths; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Today the Department's chief medical officer, Sir Donald Acheson, announced that he had asked a group of independent experts to investigate a claim that the emission of toxic gases from fungal growth on some soiled cot mattresses is a cause of sudden infant death. Pending the outcome of the investigation, he gave the following advice to parents: keep babies warm but avoid overheating; ensure good ventilation; follow good hygiene by keeping all clothing and bedding fresh and clean; be alert to signs that the infant may be unwell.

Eastbourne Health Authority

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been allocated to the Eastbourne health authority for each of the two years ending on 31 March 1991; and what is the percentage increase, in real terms, of the second figure over the first.

Mr. Freeman: Revenue allocations to Eastbourne health authority for the years requested are:

1989-90—£55,737,000
1990-91—£58,324,000

The allocation for 1990-91 includes a 4·3 per cent. increase in real terms over 1989-90.

General Practitioner Budgets

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance has been given to general practitioners on planning their own practice ancillary staff and premises for the financial year 1990-91; and what is his assessment of the minimum period of notice of the terms of the cash-limited budget issued by family practitioner committees to enable general practitioners to plan effectively;

(2) whether family practitioner committee cash-limited budgets for ancillary staff and premises are to come into operation on 1 April; and when they will be circulated.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Family practitioner committees will shortly receive cash allocations for 1990-91 for general practitioners' practice staff and premises improvements. General practitioners were given detailed information about the new arrangements in "The 1990 Contract" in August and also in the revised statement of fees and allowances in December. In addition, family practitioner committees were issued management guidance on the cash allocations in November. General practitioners will be aware of our undertaking to fund the cost of reimbursements for all posts and schemes accepted by family practitioner committees by 31 March 1990. We are satisfied that general practitioners have the information they need to plan effectively their improved services from 1 April.

General Practitioners (Computers)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether general practitioners whose computer arrangements are with AAH Meditel will be eligible for the 50 per cent. reimbursement of costs for maintenance, lease or upgrading costs due to commence on 1 April.

Mr. Freeman: It is proposed that direct reimbursement will not be made for leasing and maintenance payments where the practitioner receives a payment from the system supplier, whether or not that payment relates to the leasing agreement or is in respect of any other service or information supplied. For other expenses, direct reimbursement will be made to general practitioners who meet the full costs themselves, based on their individual circumstances.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library working paper 11 of "Working for Patients" with the complete number of annexes.

Mr. Freeman: Working paper 11 "Framework for Information Systems: Overview" was placed in the Library on 12 January this year.

Erythropoetin

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for how long the Committee on Safety of Medicines has been considering the licensing of erythropoetin; what is the average length of time the committee takes to license a new drug; and how many drugs are before the committee awaiting a licence;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 772, what additional information and data are being sought about erythropoetin from the manufacturers by the Committee on Safety of Medicines relating to its safety, quality and efficacy; and on what specific matters reassurance is being sought.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The licensing authority is responsible for issuing licences and routinely seeks the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines in respect of all drugs containing new active substances. The average gross processing time taken to license drugs of this kind (including the time taken by the company to answer inquiries) in the 12-month period ending 30 September 1989 was 19 months. There are currently 20 applications under consideration. For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not our practice to disclose details of individual applications. I can say, however, that matters relating to erythropoetin licensing have been considered recently by the European Community's committee for proprietary medicinal products whose response is awaited.

Government Health Documents

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all working papers, implementation documents, consultative documents, departmental circulars, and other publications, whether in draft or final form, that have been issued to date in respect of (a) National Health Service matters and (b) care in community matters arising from the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, the Government's White Papers on these topics, and associated Government initiatives.

The Government have issued a White Paper "Caring for People" and executive letters entitled "Care in the Community" from the chief executive and the chief inspector of social services.

The Government have also published the text of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill together with notes on clauses.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade six level and above working outside headquarters has received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 March 1990]: The Department's management courses do not at present include specific sessions on equal opportunities for women. However, following a recent review of training, the Department plans to include such sessions on all management courses as soon as possible. There are no staff at grade 6 level and above working outside what would normally be regarded as the Department's headquarters.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what have been the trends in employment since 1983.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1983 the United Kingdom work force in employment has been on a rising trend. In September 1989, the latest date for which information is available, the work force in employment was 26,955,000. This represents an increase of 3,391,000 or 14 per cent. since March 1983 when the figure was 23,564,000.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the unemployment rate for Scotland, (b) the male unemployment rate for Scotland, (c) the female unemployment rate for Scotland, (d) the unemployment rate for England, (e) the south-east of England and (f) the full-time employment rate for Scotland as at (i) October 1964, (ii) March 1966, (iii) June 1970, (iv) February 1974, (v) October 1974, (vi) May 1979, (vii) June 1983 and (viii) June 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The extent of the available information is contained in the following table, all of which is available from the Library. Unemployment on a seasonally adjusted consistent basis at regional level is unavailable prior to April 1974. Employment estimates at regional level are not split between full and part-time.

Small Businesses

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been created since 1985 by firms employing between five and 19 people.

Mr. Eggar: The latest research commissioned by my Department estimates that between 1985 and 1987, firms employing between five and 19 people created 290,000 additional jobs, compared with just 20,000 in larger firms.

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at the end of October, November, December 1989 and January 1990, how many people of YTS eligible age registered with jobcentres or the careers service were awaiting an offer of a YTS place; and of them how many were receiving bridging allowance or extended child benefit or income support.

Mr. Nicholls: Only local careers services hold information on the total number of young people awaiting the offer of a YTS place. There is no central record.

The number of young people receiving bridging allowance was as follows:

	Numbers
12 October	8,096
9 November	7,446
14 December	7,440
11 January	8,943

The number of young people whose parents were receiving extended child benefit is provided in the table:

	Numbers
29 October	14,639
26 November	13,461
31 December	12,652
28 January	1,104

Information on the number of young people receiving income support is not available.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for participants in the YTS scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: At 31 January 1990 there were 380,200 young people undertaking YTS training in Great Britain.

Bridging Allowances

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds, by region, were in receipt of bridging allowance at the mid-point of November, December 1989 and January in the current year.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers of 16 to 17-year-olds in receipt of bridging allowance were as follows:

Region	9 November 1989	14 December 1989	11 January 1990
East Midlands and Eastern	750	822	1,000
West Midlands	788	788	927

Scotland	1,157	1,086	1,205
North West	1,330	1,257	1,162

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each Department of Employment Training Agency area what were the profiles of the number of expected starts with training managers, excluding conversion from other programmes, on employment training for each month since September 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Profiles are for internal management information purposes only.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each training agency area how many child minder allowances have been granted to lone parent employment training participants since September 1988; and how many were granted during the last three most recently available months.

Mr. Nicholls: The information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in the most recent 12-month period how many claimants called for restart interview have failed to attend their interview; how many of those failing to attend are believed to have found work; how many of those failing to attend have not found work; how many failing to attend have had their benefit stopped and how many of these have successfully appealed against the benefit decision; and how many failing to attend have subsequently re-registered as unemployed.

Mr. Eggar: Between February 1989 and January 1990, 2,781,400 were called for restart interview, of which 299,000 were referred to unemployment benefit offices for failing to attend that interview. A total of 26,800 (9 per cent.) of these had their benefit or credits disallowed.

The other information requested is not available.

Young People (Earnings)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the most recent figures derived from the 1989 new earnings survey showing the average weekly gross earnings not affected by absence, full-time, both male and female, for 16-year-olds and for 17-year-olds.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is provided in the following table:

Average gross weekly earnings April 1989

[1] Age	Males £	Females £
16	85·0	87·1
17	98·9	98·9

[1] As at 1 January 1989.

Note: Full-time employees, earnings not affected by absence

Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers of unemployed persons removed from the unemployment register as a result of changes that took effect in August 1989 in the redundant mineworkers payments scheme, by English, Welsh and Scottish county, by local authority district and by parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Nicholls: Estimates of the numbers of mineworkers who have decided to take advantage of the change in the redundant mineworkers payments scheme (effective from July 1989) and are no longer signing on at unemployment benefit offices, are not available below regional level. The latest regional estimates of the cumulative effect to January 1990 are given in the table:

Estimated Number of Mineworkers by region

West midlands—about 700
East midlands—a little over 5,000
Yorkshire and Humberside—a little over 4,000
North West—about 400
North—about 2,000
Scotland—about 1,500
Wales—a little less than 1,000
Total—a little over 15,000

Note: There has been little or no effect in the Greater London, South East, East Anglia and South West regions.

Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in unemployment each year since the inception of the London Docklands development corporation in (a) the Greater London area, (b) the London Docklands development corporation area and (c) the three docklands boroughs of Newham, Tower Hamlets and Southwark.

Mr. Nicholls: The following information is available from the Library. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available on the same geographical basis. Comparisons are affected by various changes to the count over the period.

Unemployment (not seasonally adjusted)
Annual percentage change (January to January)

Women Employees

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in view of the demographic trends, what further plans he has to attract more women into the work force.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on 16 January, Official Report, columns 234-35, where the many steps being taken by the Government to facilitate the re-entry of women to the labour market were set out in detail. The Government will continue to encourage employers to adapt traditional working practices in order to accommodate the needs of those with family responsibilities and, where appropriate, will assist in ensuring that information and practical assistance is available for women returners.

Earnings

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all full-time employees earning less than (a) £160, (b) £150, (c) £170, (d) £120 and (e) £110 per week for (1) men, (2) women and (3) all full-time employees excluding overtime pay, in Great Britain and each standard economic region.

Mr. Nicholls: Due to the considerable amount of information requested, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the proportion of female part-time workers earning below hourly earning's thresholds excluding overtime pay of (i) £2·20, £2·25 and £2·30 in 1982, (ii) £3·40, £3·50 and £3·60 in 1983 and (iii) £3·70, £3·80 and £3·90 in 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimated proportions of part-time female adult employees earning below specified amounts in the new earnings survey sample in April of each year were:

Hourly earnings less than	Percentage
1982[1]
£2·20	72
£2·30	76

Hourly earnings less than	Percentage
1983[1]
£3·40	91
£3·60	93
1989[2]
£3·60	69
£3·80	73
£4·00	77

[1] Females 18 and over.
[2] Femals on adult rates of pay.

Figures of the percentages earning below £2·25 in 1982, £3·50 in 1983 and £3·70 and £3·90 in 1989 are not available; the nearest available figures are given.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total of unemployment benefit underpaid for each of the last 10 years; and what he is doing to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 March 1990]: The Department does not record details of underpayments of unemployment benefit. However, the National Audit Office has estimated the level of underpayment of unemployment benefit for the 1987-88 and 1988-89 financial years from sample surveys.

Levels of £61 million (4·2 per cent. of outturn) and £55 million (5 per cent. outturn) were estimated for 1987-88 and 1988-89 respectively. In the majority of cases where unemployment benefit was wrongly withheld the claimants were properly paid income support instead and suffered little or no overall loss of benefit. Taking this into account the actual amount withheld for 1987-88 was 1·6 per cent of outturn and for 1988-89 0·9 per cent. of outturn.

A number of initiatives have already been introduced to address the problems of incorrect payments. These include a more detailed examination of all new claims, a review of a proportion of claims within a few weeks of the initial claim, and for restart and counselling interviews to be carried out at six-month intervals. The full programme of improvement measures depends on changes to the main benefit computer system and will be fully implemented by late 1990.

SCOTLAND

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he proposes to make any changes to the operation of the extended fixed penalty system for road traffic offences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the light of consultation with representative organisations my right hon. and learned Friend has decided to make the following changes from 1 April 1990.

He proposes to increase fixed penalty levels to £16 for non-endorsable offences and £32 for endorsable offences, and to amend the range of offences to include the offences of failing to comply with a red signal at a pelican crossing and failing to accord precedence to pedestrians at a pelican crossing or zebra crossing.

Orders to effect these changes have been made, and laid before both Houses of Parliament.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the figures for bovine spongiform encephalopathy cases for each of the eight weeks ended on 23 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information for Great Britain is as follows:

Suspect cases notified

Week ending	Numbers
5 January	246
12 January	292
19 January	285
26 January	292
2 February	302
9 February	324
16 February	359
23 February	362

The figures which have recently been quoted in the press and which appeared to suggest a marked increase after the announcement of 13 February, Official Report, column 196, of increased compensation for confirmed cases referred not to the number of cases notified but simply to the number processed by my Department.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle involved currently or historically in clinical trials of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Maclean: The Southwood report describes epidemiological studies that were undertaken to establish the origin of BSE infection. These investigated the possibility of links between the disease and any type of treatment administered to the cattle concerned, and found that there was none. In my reply of 22 February, Official Report, column 900, to the hon. Member I said that I was not aware of any case of BSE in an animal treated with BST, but I now understand that there is evidence of one such case. This does not alter the conclusion that no link exists.

Hydrocarbons

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the presence in food or drink of other similar hydrocarbons one might expect to find where benzene has been found naturally.

Mr. Maclean: According to the scientific literature hydrocarbons related to benzene have been detected in some foods and drinks but we do not have detailed information. The steering group on food surveillance has begun some work in this area but results are not yet available.

Sewage Sludge Boats

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what permits he has issued to allow sewage sludge boats to discharge their cargo in or off the Bristol channel; what is the annual rate of discharge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Two water companies, Welsh and Wessex, are licensed to dump 55,000 tonnes and 300,000 tonnes respectively of treated sludge at a dump site situated about half-way across the Bristol channel between Ilfracombe and the Gower peninsula. About 95 per cent. of the sewage sludge is water. Each company is authorised to dump up to 10 per cent. of its licensed quantity at an alternative bad weather site which is situated 6 miles east of the main site.

Food Irradiation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will initiate a study of the health effects on the work force of companies producing radioactive sources for the technologies to irradiate foods, in the light of the findings of the Gardner report on radiation effects.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

In its second and third reports the committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment (COMARE) recommended that studies of the health of the offspring of radiation workers should be set up. The Government accepted these recommendations in full and are urgently considering a number of relevant research proposals.

Liquid Egg

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he has any evidence of inadequately heat-treated bulk liquid egg being released for commercial sale; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what research his Department has commissioned into whether it is possible, by microbiological testing, to determine whether any batch of bulk liquid eggs is so heavily contaminated in its untreated state that it will cause a liquid egg pasteurisation process to fail.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The pasteurisation of bulk raw liquid egg is a very sensitive process. Only a moderate heat treatment for a limited time during the process can be applied otherwise the functional properties of the liquid egg are destroyed. Therefore, it follows that there will be levels of contamination at which some bacteria will survive. It is desirable that the raw product being accepted for pasteurisation should not be subject to heavy contamination. An investigation into the efficacy of pasteurisation of whole liquid egg is being conducted by the PHLS. However, it is recognised that the introduction of the Liquid Egg (Pasteurisation) Regulations 1963 had a profound effect in reducing the number of human cases of salmonellosis.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks and procedures are adopted to identify failures in the pasteurisation of bulk liquid egg (a) by his Department and (b) by industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Local authorities have responsibility for enforcing the Liquid Egg (Pasteurisation) Regulations 1963 and they take samples for an alpha amylase test which indicates if the pasteurisation process has been effective. Tests for the presence of salmonella are also carried out. The food industry carries out its own controls through its quality assurance systems.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anti-Hungarian Demonstrations

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the recent anti-Hungarian demonstrations in Slovakia and in Transylvanian cities in Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: We understand that there was a demonstration in Nove Zamky in Slovakia in mid-February, and that some anti-Hungarian sentiments were expressed at another in Bratislava on 5 March. In Romania in early February there were demonstrations and counter-demonstrations in Tirgu Mures and other Transylvanian towns about the issue of separate education for ethnic Hungarians, but we understand that there have been no further large demonstrations since then.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governments of Czechoslovakia and Romania regarding the recent anti-Hungarian demonstrations in both countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made no representations to the Governments of Czechoslovakia and Romania about demonstrations in those countries.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Sri Lanka for the full restoration of human rights in the light of the reduction of terrorism in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 7 March to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), Official Report, column 699.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 168

SESSION 1989–90

26th February—9th March 1990

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
